LIVE STOCK MEN GAIN THEIR POINT

Food Administration to Put Practical Man on Its Working Force.

Washington, D. C., March 16.—Live stock men of Iowa, Minnesota, Nebraska, and surrounding states, represented in the Corn Belt Meat Producers' association and other organizations, feel they have made considerable gain in the decision of Food Administrator Hoover, after numerous conferences, to add to the meat division a man who has practical knowledge of meat production. This man is to be chosen from a list submitted by live stock feeders now in Washington. Live stock producers have been insisting for some time that practical live stock men and farmers should be in Washington at all times to advise officials. The food administration has promised to help out live stock men by increasing purchases of higher grades of beef. H. C. Wallace, of Des Moines; E. L. Burke, of Omaha, and other live stock authorities have been in the conference with Hoover

IOWA WOMEN TO CONFER ON NEW LOAN

Waterloo, Ia., March 16.—Mrs. W. W. Marsh state chairman of the Women's Liberty Loan committee has sent out from her headquarters here a special call for every county chairman of the woman's committee of Iowa to attend a conference of the Iowa Women's Liberty Loan committee in the chamber of commerce at Des Moines Thursday, March 28. Fully 150 women are expected to attend.

The conference will be attended by prominent women throughout Iowa, among them being Miss Lula D. Cushman, of Waterloo, Miss Grace Dixon, of Chicago, federal reserve chairman for women in the Seventh federal reserve district, and Mrs. Frances E. Whitley of Cedar Rapids. Charles H. McNider, director of sales for Iowa, will also address the convention

DIVIDE ESTATE AMONG CHILDREN

Glidden, Ia., March 16.—A family reunion quite out of the ordinary was that held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Garner, when to each of their six children the parents presented checks for $8,500. Mr. and Mrs. Garner recently sold a farm near here for $100,000 and experiencing a desire to have their children enjoy the fruits of their labors, took this method of providing it. The six children present at the family reunion who shared in the cash distribution are: Fred Garner, Clarinda, Ia.; Mrs. M. F. Bunker, Tipton, Ia.; George Garner, Alburnett, Ia.; Pearl Barnett, Nevada, Mo.; Mrs. Ella F. Kimball, Clinton, Ia., and Mrs. Grace McNaught, Glidden, Ia.

BAPTIST PEOPLE BUY HIGHLAND PARK COLLEGE

Des Moines, Ia., March 16.—It was a race between the Methodists and Baptists to see which would buy Highland Park college, and the Baptists won. Consequently Bishop Stuntz will be asked to cancel the special conference meeting in Des Moines early in April, at which time the Methodists were to be asked to approve or disapprove the proposed purchase.

The Baptists will take over the institution at once, and the Methodists will begin to rebuild Simpson college at Indianola, recently damaged by fire

EPIDEMIC OF TYPHOID PREVALENT AT DUBUQUE

Dubuque, Ia., March 16.—Although no more new cases of typhoid fever have been reported by local physicians, the Dubuque board of health has decided to call in an expert epidemiologist to investigate the cause of the epidemic, which has caused considerable concern here the last few weeks. Dr. Hamilton, of the Iowa state board of health, is expected to arrive in the city within the next few days to work with local officials in an effort to locate the cause of the disease.

GERMAN SYMPATHIZER PUTS UP A FIGHT

Citizens of Garner, Ia., Propose To See He Is Made to Feel Force of Law.

Waterloo, Ia., March 16.—Sheriff James Ross, of Garner, and a posse of citizens, are searching for R. S. Orr, a farmer living near Garner, who held a number of Garner citizens at bay at the point of a gun and rode out of town after defying them regarding his alleged pro-German statements.

It is stated that Orr, some time ago, wrote a letter to a Des Moines newspaper complaining of the treatment of Garner citizens which was meted out to Charles Finnegar, a man of German descent who, it is alleged, made the statement that was glad the Germans "got the Tuscania." Finnegar was made to kneel and kiss the American flag during a parade of loyal citizens and was also compelled to donate $1,000 to the Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross.

Orr came to Garner and was approached by James Denny and Ed Welk, two prominent citizens who questioned him regarding the article appearing in the Des Moines paper. Orr immediately drew a gun and kept the men "covered" until he got safely out of town.

A rumor to the effect that Orr had other weapons and other ammunition at his home in the country caused the men to enlist the aid of the sheriff and other citizens requested to be allowed to accompany the party

SCHOOL BOYS BURN GERMAN TEXT BOOKS

Marshalltown, Ia., March 16.—There are no more German text books for use in the State Center, Ia., high school. What remains in the books is being scattered to the four winds from a pile of ashes in the school yard. Fifteen to 20 of the high school boys are responsible for the destruction of the books.

Some time during Tuesday night the boys entered the school house, took therefrom the German books and burned them in a bonfire. The act was discovered yesterday morning when the German classes were called and it was found that there were no text books for the classes.

The school board has as yet not decided on what action it will take. The board had intended to do away with the teaching of German next year, but had continued the study this year owing to the fact that several pupils taking the study had only partial credits for the work they had done.

GENERAL PLUMMER TO LEAVE CAMP DODGE

Camp Dodge, Ia., March 16.—Brigadier General E. H. Plummer, he became a brigadier this morning, will relinquish command of the 88th division tomorrow. He received the war department orders discharging him as a major general in the national army by telegraph. Until tomorrow the two silver stars will remain on his shoulders, but after that one of them will be tucked away and the division will be in the command of Brigadier General R. N. Getty

In the absence of specific instructions command of the division falls automatically to General Getty, the ranking officer.

General Plummer will leave for oFrt Sill, Okla., soon

GOVERNOR FIXES SEED CORN PRICES

Des Moines, Ia., March 16.—Gov. W. L. Harding today fixed the prices of seed corn in Iowa as follows:

Crib corn, carefully ear tested with good germination not to exceed $10 per bushel

Corn selected from cribs, providing it is of high germination and sold without further attention to make it fit for seed purposes, not to exceed $4 per bushel.

Corn taken from crib and of lower germination should be sold at correspondingly lower prices than $4.

The governor condemns the selling of seed corn at auction or speculating in it in any way.

FORMER AMES STUDENTS AT WASHINGTON MEET

Washington, D. C., March 16.—The annual meeting of the Iowa State college alumni was held at the chamber of commerce building. Dr. R. A. Pearson, president of the college, spoke on the institution's war activities. Congressman Sloan, of Nebraska, was a speaker. Several hundred Ames alumni are in the government service.

CAR SHORTAGE STILL IS BOTHERSOME MATTER

Washington, D. C., March 16.—In a conference over car shortage in Iowa between Food Administrator Hoover and Representative Ramseyer, Mr. Hoover expressed disappointment because cars were not provided to move farm products and live stock. Mr. Ramseyer told of complaints he continued to receive. One from New Sharon says 40 cars are badly needed and five have been furnished. Mr. Ramseyer told Mr. Hoover there was danger that farmers after this winter's experience with cars would curtail crops and Mr. Hoover indicated he was apprehensive of the same thing, but that he had done his utmost to get cars of the railroad administration.

SIOUX CITY MEN ARE FINED FOR BOOTLEGGING

Onawa, Ia., March 16.—Alwin Forbes and Frank Bubee, of Sioux City, who have been in the Monona county jail the past week on the charge of bootlegging, were indicted by the grand jury.

They were released Monday when they paid a fine of $100 and costs.

SELECT CANDIDATES FOR CITY OFFICES

Onawa, Ia., March 16.—At the town caucus the present mayor, C. E. Cooper, was nominated without opposition. Mr. Cooper was appointed to take the place of Dr. C. F. Nord, who enlisted as a veterinary, and who is now stationed at Sam Houston, Tex.

Since the caucus, Henry Harlow, who held the office of mayor a number of years before Mr. Nord was elected, has been nominated by petition.

JAMIESON GETS BACK INTO NEWSPAPER GAME

Shenandoah, Ia., March 16.—The lawsuit between W. D. Jamieson and R. V. Lucas, over the ownership of all or part of the Shenandoah World, which has been on for some time, and which promised to be a hard fought trial, was settled out of court by the forming of a syndicate of democrats under the leadership of W. D. Jamieson, J. J. Dunnegan, J. J. Doty and L. W. Drennen, which has bought out Editor Lucas' The paper will now be run as an administration paper and support the work of the democratic party.

Must Strike, Hindenburg Says; Prepared to Lose 300,000 Men

Amsterdam, March 15.—According to news received here, Field Marshal von Hindenburg has stated in an interview in Berlin that the entente had shown an unresponsive attitude toward Germany's peace intentions and that the great German offensive therefore must go on.

In well informed neutral quarters recently the Associated Press correspondent was told that the Germans were prepared to lose 300,000 men in an offensive operation

The Verdun offensive of the Germans, in which they failed utterly to break the French lines, has been estimated in conservative quarters as having cost them something like 500,000 men.

"If the enemy does not want peace he must fight the most tremendous battle of the war on the west front," Quartermaster General Ludendorff declared in an interview with the Cologne Gazette, copies of which were received here today

BOND GOAL SET AT 15,000,000

All Liberty Purchasers Expected To Fly Flags to Show Up Slackers—New Publicity Features.

Washington, D. C., March 16.—Every preparation is being made by Liberty loan campaigners to get 15,000,000 subscribers to the third loan. Subscriptions to the second loan now are estimated at 11,000,000 and to the first loan about 4,000,000.

Sixteen million buttons for subscribers have been ordered for the third loan.

The system of honor rolls in each municipality community or business organization bearing the names of subscribers and of honor flags to be given to cities exceeding its quota of subscriptions is expected to stimulate the number of subscriptions. This method will disclose exactly who subscribes and who refuses.

SERBIA REFUSES TO ENTER PEACE PARLEY

Every Effort of Austro-Germans to Force Her Into Line Meets With Rebuffs.

Berne, Switzerland, (Wednesday,) March 13.—The peace treaties that have been signed by Russia and Rumania have not caused any change in Serbia's attitude, M. Gruitsch, Serbia's diplomatic representative here, has informed a Swiss interviewer.

Although Serbia had lost in the war and during the occupation about 1,000,000 of her inhabitants, added M. Gruitsch, there were still the men and will to persevere in Serbia's former course.

Geneva, Switzerland, March 15.—According to unofficial information reaching here Austria-Hungary and Bulgaria in the period since the Russian revolution have brough great pressure to bear upon Serbia to conclude a separate peace. Two means are said to have been employed, one involving oppressive measures and deportation in the occupied territories, while another means to the end 30 Serbian deputies of the national party who were Austrophile and remained in Serbia after the retreat of the army invited to Vienna and lavishly entertained.

Both plans, the advices declare, proved a complete failure the Serbian people, despite their sufferings remaining loyal to their allies and their king.

35 MEMBERS OF I. W. W. INDICTED AT WICHITA

Wichita, Kan., March 16.—Indictments were returned here this morning by a federal grand jury against 35 alleged members of the I. W. W. With only one exception the indicted men are now under arrest and some of them already has been interned for the duration of the war

RUMANIANS EVACUATE HUNGARIAN TERRITORY

London, March 15.—An official statement from the Austrian Hungarian war office received here says

"The last narrow stretch of Austro-Hungarian territory occupied by the Rumanians has been evacuated. The eastern boundry of the monarchy after two and a half years of the heaviest war burdens again is completely free."

RAIL STRIKE IN AUSTRIA

Copenhagen, March 16.—The men in the workshops of the Austrian railways have struck and refused to obey the orders of the military to return to work, the Berlin Lokal Anzeiger states. The strike it is added, is spreading to other factories.

FIRST HAND TRUTHS TO CONVINCE BAKER

Believed He Will Push War With Greater Vigor After He Visits Front.

Washington, D. C., March 16.—What recommendations Secretary of War Baker will bring back from France with respect to the conduct of war preparations and the war is something which is much talked about today at the Capital and elsewhere in Washington, now that it is officially announced the secretary has gone abroad.

In fact, it has been discussed here a great deal for days, as it has been known for some time that Mr. Baker was on his way.

The official statement indicates that Mr. Baker's mission is military and not diplomatic. It is supposed this was made emphatic in order to silence any speculation as to whether his visit was for diplomatic reasons.

It is believed here in many quarters that Secretary Baker will return to this country strongly impressed with the need of making war preparations on a scale still greater than the present scale.

LENINE GOVERNMENT SET UP IN MOSCOW

Capital Transferred to Ancient Seat of Power After More Than 200 Years.

Moscow, (Tuesday), March 12.—Moscow has again become the official capital of Russia. Peter, the Great, moved the seat of government from Moscow to Petrograd, which he founded, and after 200 years the government has been transferred by its present head, Nikolai Lenine, back to the historic capital in the heart of Russia.

Lenine and virtually all the governmental commissioners except Leon Trotzky, arrived here tonight and officially opened the various ministries to-day. Many of the buildings in the ancient Kremlin, the leading hotels and other structures, were requisitioned to accommodate the government officials. The subordinate employes have been in process of transfer for weeks, but today, the first anniversary of the Russian revolution, marks the actual transfer of the new government and is being celebrated as a national holiday.

KANSAS CITY FACES SYMPATHETIC STRIKE

Kansas City, Mo., March 15.—Six hundred delegates, representing more than half of the unions in Kansas City, voted early today to call a general strike of all labor unions in the city Monday, March 25, in sympathy with the strike of union laundry workers which has been in effect several weeks. Only 16 votes were cast against the resolution.

NO SUCCESSOR NAMED FOR GEN. PLUMMER

Commandant at Camp Dodge Not Physically Qualified For Foreign Service

Washington, D. C., March 5.—War office will succeed General [illegible] Plummer in command at Camp Dodge is not yet decided. Major General Plummer, along with a number of other generals, has been found not physically qualified for service abroad but will be kept on active duty elsewhere than at Camp Dodge as a brigadier general of the regular army. He is a major general in the national army. Regret is expressed by his friends here for he is regarded as a competent officer. However, it is the general policy to put younger men in command in France. General March chief of staff, expects to visit Camp Dodge this spring. No time is announced.

IMPURITIES IN COAL TO BE CUT DOWN

Des Moines, Ia., March 15.—According to the federal fuel administration 30,000,000 tons of impurities, such as slate, rock, etc., are mixed with the coal annually sold in the United States.

For the purpose of eliminating the waste involved in the transportation of this useless material, to say nothing of the financial loss it means to the consumer of coal, the government will appoint inspectors at the mines who will see that the amount of non-combustible material going out with the coal is reduced to a minimum.

"Inspectors of coal already have been appointed in many places in the east," says Charles Webster, state fuel administrator. "It is likely that such inspectors will be appointed to work in Iowa the coming season."

BUY MORE GROUND FOR CAPITAL EXTENSION

Des Moines, Ia., March 15.—The state executive council has ordered the purchase of all property within the capitol extension zone not already owned by the state. This involves the Norwegian Lutheran church, residence properties north of the historical building, and a number of lots in the southern part of the extension, near the railroad tracks

PLEADS GUILTY TO DISLOYALTY TALK

Alton, Ia., March 15.—Peter Steenstra, of Hull, has pleaded guilty to the charge of inciting hostility to the government of the United States and was sentenced by Judge William Hutchinson, in court at Orange City to serve six months in jail and pay a fine of $300 and costs.

The indictment charged that Steenstra at various times had spoken as follows: "I would be willing to fight with Germany against this country." "I believe this country is wrong. I agree with Germany." "I have more respect for Germany than for this country." And also of saying to another man who had bought some Liberty bonds. "You're a fool for buying a Liberty bond." When asked what he is doing in this country, he replied, "Making money."

IDA GROVE VOTES FOR BOND ISSUE

Ida Grove, Ia., March 15.—Ida Grove voted to bond the Independent school district at a special election held Tuesday for $125,000 for the erection of a new school building. Over 800 votes were cast, it being the first election held in the district where the women were allowed to vote, and 307 men voted for the proposition, 305 women for, 152 men against and 81 women against, 19 votes being thrown out. Ida Grove has two school buildings, one being constructed over 35 years ago, and its condition being such that it has been condemned. Bids will be asked for by the board of directors and if possible the wrecking of the old building and construction work will be begun this year.

ONAWA RED CROSS REALIZES FINE SUM

Onawa, Ia., March 15.—The largest Red Cross sale of the year was held here Saturday at the Pullen garage. The net proceeds were $5,200.00. The main feature was the White Elephant sale and everybody was asked to clean out their attics. Five hundred dollars was taken in for meals and lunches for which everything had been donated; $44 was taken in for the grab bag; $18 at the pop corn stand; $360 at the rummage sale and $190 for a quilt, lamp and wrist watch.

The rooster that brought $125 at the sale in Whiting last week was bought at Onawa for $420. The Onawa Red Cross chapter will give the rooster to any other chapter that will pay more for him than was paid at Onawa. A calf was resold at the sale until $600 were taken in. After the sale a dance was given and all the proceeds was given to the Red Cross.

A continuation of the sale will be held at the same place next Saturday and those in charge expect to pass the $6,000 mark.

LYON COUNTY AGENT PUSHING WHEAT ACREAGE

Rock Rapids, Ia., March 15.—A. H. Beckhoff was secured by the farmers of Lyon county as county agent and for the last two months he has been a very busy man as he was Lyon county's first agent. He has found much to do and the most important business now is to find seed wheat.

Last year there was only about 300 acres of wheat raised in Lyon county, but many farmers are planning to sow wheat, and aside from the seed now in the county, the county agent has already ordered for the farmers for seed 1,600 bushels of seed wheat from Minneapolis, and has orders for about another 1,100 bushels.

Many farmers intend to sow from 10 to 30 acres of wheat.

He finds that the seed corn situation in Lyon county is not as bad as in many other counties in Iowa. He estimates that it will require 2,500 bushels of seed to plant the estimate acreage in the county this year. Most farmers are depending on the 1916 crop for seed, while much good seed is secured from the 1917 crop. There is approximately 12,000 bushels of old corn fit for seed in the county.

SCHOOL ELECTION AT LEMARS WAS LIVELY

LeMars, Ia., March 13.—At the school election here about a third of the vote of the city was cast. The vote stood A. C. Cooper, 345; W. Koenig, 259; Dr. M. W. Richey, 124; Rev. J. J. Vollman, 109; Mrs. Lulu Engelkon, 74. There was no particular issue involved in the election, except a desire to infuse new blood into the school board.

The men elected—A. C. Cooper and Will Koenig—are young business men. The retiring members, only one of whom tried for reelection, have been on the board for 12 years.

STEPHENSON, FORMER U. S. SENATOR, DEAD

Succumbs to Illness Resulting From Infirmities Due to Old Age.

Marinette, Wis., March 16.—Former United States Senator Isaac Stephenson died at 1:30 o'clock this morning.

Senator Stephenson had been ill at his home here for a week, due to infirmities of age. His condition suddenly grew worse yesterday and physicians expressed doubt for his recovery, but later in the day he rallied and last night was resting comfortably.

MUST OVERCOME HUN INFLUENCE

British Foreign Secretary Tells Parliament Allies Cannot Stand by and See Slav Empire Wrecked.

London, (Tuesday), March 14.—Debate on the question of Japanese intervention in Siberia in the house of commons today brought from Foreign Secretary Balfour the declaration that German penetration in Russia must be combatted The allied point of view was that they should help Russia in protecting herself against Germany. Although he did not think that Germany would send an army to Vladivostok, he said he had absolute faith in Japan's loyalty in carrying out any decision reached by the allies

Discussing the situation in Russia, Mr. Balfour said

"If Russia had not been at war, it would have taken many years to complete the beneficient course of the revolution. When autocracy fell almost without a blow, Russia immediately fell into chaos. It is untrue to say that the same thing happened in the French revolution, for there the effect was not the disintegration but the integration of France. Precisely the opposite happened in Russia. The revolution came and all the old divisions between regions and creeds became marked and prominent.

Situation Doubly Difficult.

"It must inevitably take time before we will see the end of that process and to know clearly how much of old Russia, if any, ought to cease to form a part of new Russia, and how new Russia will be constituted. It is a very difficult process in time of peace and prosperity, but how can you carry it on in time of war with a remorseless, persevering and quite unscrupulous enemy at the gate?

"There will be classes, some from patriotic, others from selfish motives, ready to welcome anything promising a semblance of stability and order in the government. When that time comes I can imagine Germany trying to reestablish possibly the old form of autocratic government. We should then have Russia shorn of some of its fairest provinces and with a kind of autocracy far worse than the old autocracy, because it would lean upon a foreign power for continued existence. If that came to pass, all our dreams of Russian development and Russian liberty would be gone and Russia would become a mere outpost of the central powers.

"That is the real difficulty of dealing with the problems raised in this debate. Mr. Lees-Smith's speech is a strong attack on what he conceives as the government's policy with regard to Japan and Siberia. It is entirely oblivious of the facts I have just brought before the house and is based on a profound misunderstanding of what any human being had ever thought, contrived or desired with regard to allied intervention, Japanese or other in Russian affairs."

Questions Japan's Faith.

H. B. Lees-Smith, a liberal in questioning Mr. Balfour as to the British attitude, had declared that if Japan entered Russian territory and occupied it at the mandate of the alliance, it followed with almost absolute certainty that this territory would not be returned.

"I cannot let this debate end, said Mr. Balfour in conclusion, "without repudiating to the full Mr. Lees-Smith's suggestion that Japan would be moved by selfish and dishonorable motives in any course which may be discussed in Japan, either among her statesmen or with the allies.

"Japan has behaved with perfect loyalty and if she gives promises with regard to Russian integrity or any question connected with Russia, she would keep them as she has kept all promises she had made in connection with this war or any great public transactions with the United States and the allies. I draw no distinction in this matter between Japan and the allies who make up the great body of the belligerents on the entente side.

"The decisions the allies may have to take will not be without difficulty, but the principle upon which these decisions may be arrived will be neither ungenerous, unfair, nor hostile to Russia and the Russian revolution. Our object is to see Russia strong, intact, secure and free and if these objects can be obtained then, and then only, will the Russian revolution bring forth all the fruits its best friends desire to see."

ROOSEVELT SENDS HIS SON CONGRATULATIONS

New York, March 16.—Colonel Roosevelt, through the United Press, today sent the following message to Capt. Archie Roosevelt, recently wounded and decorated by the French government:

"Archie: We are very anxious, but we are prouder than you can imagine. Gracie and the baby are all right. Your decoration is the greatest possession of this family.

"Theodore Roosevelt."

RUSSIANS NOT REALLY SEAMEN BUT PLOTTERS

Norfolk, Va., March 15.—Forty-three members of the crew of the Russian steamer Omsk, in port here, today faced charges of violating the espionage act as the result of their efforts Thursday night to seize the steamer. Documents found aboard the vessel indicated, government agents said, that certain members of the crew were "not bonafide seaman, but rather highly intellectual parties to a political plot which planned to divert the Osmk's cargo to Russia."

The ship's cargo of cotton is consigned to Liverpool.

YANKS HOLDING HUN TRENCHES

American Troops Now Occupy Mile and Half of Line After Driving Out German Occupants.

FIRST GAIN BY U. S. ARMY

Higher Ground Gives Them Advantage—Counter Attacks Are Beaten Off By Effective Fighting.

By Associated Press.

Washington, D. C., March 16.—General Pershing's casualty list today, it is learned at the war department, will be longer than any previously issued and for that reason may not be available for publication before tomorrow morning.

There is no outward indication of what a longer casualty list indicates, although American troops in the last few days have been active in an offensive against the German trenches.

By United Press.

With the American Army in France, March 16 —American troops now occupy their first German trenches. They consist of nearly a mile and a half of front line positions in the Badenviller region on the Luneville front.

The positions were occupied in broad daylight by the Americans after German evacuation.

The German barrage later forced a withdrawal but the Sammies returned and now firmly hold the posts. The posts have been consolidated. Automatic rifles have been mounted and the posts are fully defended. The trenches were so dominated by Yankee artillery that the boches evacuated. The American found the trenches supported by strong timbers. The broken ones having been replaced.

The boches are playing a safe defensive game on all fronts today, where they are occupied by Americans. This has been made apparent by recent raids. In expectation of the raids the enemy simply evacuates all front positions and retires to the safety of the rear lines. The Sammies are alert and active and the Germans are unable to tell when to expect something.

There was considerable sniping today on the Luneville front. The Sammies are becoming exceptionally proficient at this art There was also much grenading back and forth while aerial activity is constantly increasing.

This, though a small forward movement, marks the first permanent advance by the American army in France. The consolidation of the trenches enables the Americans and French to operate from higher ground than heretofore.

ON OTHER FRONTS.

By Associated Press.

Fighting activity on the British front from Ypres south toward Arras continues at a sharp pitch. On the hitherto quiet sector between Armentieres and Vermelles, about 15 miles, the German artillery fire continues intense, as it has been for several days past. A strong German detachment attempted a raid on this front, but was thrown back by the Portuguese. On the southern end of the Ypres sector, Australian troops have been successful in raids into enemy lines and in repulsing German raiding parties. There has been heavy artillery firing on the French front and the French have repulsed three German raids.

IOWANS ARE DECORATED.

With the American Army in France, March 16.—Col. Douglas MacArthur, Captain Handy and eight enlisted men, including Private O. S. Bordon, of Iowa, have been decorated with the French croix de guerre for bravery in action.

MacArthur (deleted by censor) the troops in the Luneville sector. The colonel went over the top with the French recently when they took several German prisoners, after passing through a German barrage. He also went over the top in Saturday's raid The others received the war cross for action in the same region.

FRENCH MAKE GAIN.

Berlin, March 16.—A strong French detachment gained a footing yesterday west of the Nauroy road on the German crown prince's front (Champagne district), says today's army headquarters announcement.

TWO WOMEN KILLED AND 15 INJURED IN WRECK

Harrisburg, Pa., March 16.—Two women were killed and 15 other passengers were injured when the Cincinnati, Indianapolis & Chicago express west bound on the Pennsylvania railroad was struck by boulders which rolled on the track, while the train was passing through a cut near Elizabethtown, 17 miles east of here, early today. The boulders wrecked two sleeping cars, causing the death of the women.

PILOT OF MONT BLANC DISCHARGED BY COURT

Halifax, N. S., March 16.—The charge of manslaughter against Francis MacKay, who piloted the French munitions ship Mont Blanc at the time of her collision here, with the Belgian relief ship Imo, was dismissed today by Judge Russell. The court held there seemed to be no evidence upon which an unbiased tribunal could hold MacKay criminally culpable. The pilot was discharged from custody.

The explosion, which occurred when the vessels crashed, caused the loss of about 1,500 lives.

DEMURRER OF TOWNLEY OVERRULED BY COURT

Fairmont, Minn., March 15.—Judge Tisk of Glencoe, sitting in the district court of Martin county, today overruled the demurer of attorneys representing A. C. Townley against indictments recently returned against Townley, charging circulating a pamphlet and other literature opposing the war and discouraging enlistments.

The matter will now go to the supreme court and if the demurrer is overruled the case will be put on trial at Glencoe.

DUTCH WARNED NOT TO SUBMIT

German Press Thrown Into Hot Rage by Allied Action in Regard to Use of Holland's Ships.

UGLY POLICY IS EXPOSED

Teutons Seek to Intimidate and Browbeat Neutral Neighbors and Cripple Their Future Trade.

London, March 16—The notice served on Holland by Great Britain and the United States regarding the taking over of Dutch shipping in allied ports has thrown the German press into a towering rage, the Copenhagen correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph company cables. The newspapers demand that Germany take the most drastic counter measures if Holland gives way to the allies.

Washington, D. C., March 15.—Germany's latest campaign of ruthlessness against neutral shipping is attributed by the war trade board to a deliberate plan for cutting off the north European nations from American and allied food supplies and thereby reducing them through starvation to a political and economic dependence upon the Teutonic war lords.

While the board makes no reference to the determination of the United States and Great Britain to take over Dutch ships in American and allied ports unless The Netherlands government accepts a pending economic agreement, its statement throws interesting light on the situation which led to this decision. The hope is expressed that the neutrals will contrast the respective attitudes of the United States and Germany toward the problem of feeding them

To Starve Out Neutrals.

Following is the statement in part:

"Germany's war leaders are using the submarine war weapon to prevent fulfillment of American agreements to feed and relieve European neutrals. A mass of cumulative evidence and indications in the possession of the war trade board show that Germany is employing the submarine menace to prevent neighbor neutrals receiving any food or favors at the hands of the United States and its associates in the war and to coerce these neutrals through starvation into political and economic dependence upon Germany, quite as much as to strike at the communications of its opponents—Germany's ostensible aim in proclaiming the ruthless submarine campaign.

"Further indications tend to show that the submarines are being used, along similar dog-in-the-manger lines, to destroy neutral shipping without regard to its employment, in order to weaken prospective neutral competitors after the war, and to drag down neutral tonnage as far as possible toward a position of equality (or inferiority) with the German mercantile marine, which has lost between 40 and 50 per cent of its ocean tonnage, so that the neutral trader may be equally as badly off as his German rival for tonnage in the after-the-war race for commerce.

Hun Game Exposed.

"The intent of the Germans to prevent neutrals receiving food and supplies under relief agreements concluded with the United States, is illustrated by the German veto placed upon the temporary modus vivendi with Holland providing for the provisioning of that country. Two food ships loaded with supplies for the Netherlands along with 11 Belgian relief ships, have been waiting in American ports for weeks, unable to sail because of the refusal of Germany to permit an equivalent amount of tonnage leaving Dutch harbors, the obvious plan of the German authorities being to gather all Dutch ships into home harbors and then prevent any of them sailing by threats to torpedo any vessel leaving Holland waters.

"The present campaign of threats and intimidations against the Scandinavian neutrals now carried on in the semi-official North German Gazette, and other organs of the German press, is obviously intended to frighten the northern neutrals from completing agreements which benefit the neutrals quite as much as the United States and its associates."

MAINE PLAN PRAISED BY PRESIDENT WILSON

Augusta, Me., March 16.—A telegram from President Wilson saying that Maine in extending its national defense organization by the creation of community councils was making an advance of vital significance, was received today by Harold M. Sewall, chairman of the state committee on public safety.

"It will I believe result, when thoroughly carried out in welding the nation together as no nation of great size has ever been welded before," President Wilson said. "It will build up from the bottom an understanding and sympathy and unity of purpose and effort which no doubt will have an immediate and decisive effect upon our great undertaking.

"It is only by extending your organization to small communities that every citizen of the state can be reached and touched with the inspiration of the common cause.

"Through this great new organization we will express with added emphasis our will to win and our confidence in the utter righteousness of our purpose."

TIMBER SEIZURE BILL CONSIDERABLY MODIFIED

Washington, March 15.—Provisions in the administration's timber requisitioning bill to authorize the president to prescribe regulations for all timbering operations were stricken out today by the Senate military committee, they had drawn vigorous opposition from lumber interests.

The bill itself, retaining its principal provisions for commandeering timber and its products for the use of the army, the navy and the shipping board, was ordered favorably reported.

Nerves All Unstrung?

Nervousness and nerve pains often come from weak kidneys. Many a person who worries over trifles and is troubled with neuralgia, rheumatic pains and backache would find relief through a good kidney remedy. If you have nervous attacks, with headaches, backaches, dizzy spells and sharp, shooting pains, try Doan's Kidney Pills. They have brought quick benefit in thousands of such cases.

A South Dakota Case

Mrs. B. Schmid, County Line Road, Beresford, S. D., says: "The first sign of kidney complaint in my case was backache. When I washed, sharp pains would dart through my loins. My kidneys acted irregularly, my feet swelled and I tired so easily that it was all I could do to attend to my housework. When Doan's Kidney Pills were recommended to me I got some, and two boxes cured me."

"We had been asked to entertain the bishop of a church strictly opposed to card playing and dancing during his visit to a convention held in our city. The bishop made a most charming guest and attempted to make friends with our small son, Bobby, by beginning a conversation.

"Can you tell me how many days there are in a week, my boy?" he asked.

Bobby answered correctly and the bishop continued: "And how many weeks are there in a year?"

"Fifty-two, proudly answered Bobby, and then, prompted by some evil spirit to show his immense stock of knowledge, added: "Just as many as there are cards in the deck."—Chicago Tribune.

LEMON JUICE IS SKIN WHITENER

CHEAP HOME-MADE BEAUTY LOTION TO REMOVE TAN, FRECKLES, SALLOWNESS.

At the cost of a small jar of ordinary cold cream one can prepare a full quarter pint of the most wonderful lemon skin whitener and complexion beautifier, by squeezing the juice of two fresh lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white. Care should be taken to strain the juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach a darkened skin and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any drug store and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands It is marvelous to whiten rough, red hands.—Adv.

SCHOOL NOTES

Editors—Geneva and Mildred.

Octive Church was absent Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week on account of sickness.

Mable Starnes was absent from school Monday morning until recess.

Burr Church was tardy Monday morning of this week. Oh, My!

The pupils of the Grammar Room and High School received their Junior Red Cross pins Tuesday morning of this week.

The classic "Tom Thumb" is being read by the tenth grade during school hours.

The girls' basket ball team have been practicing the last few days and hope to get a game with some of the other towns in the near future. (?)

Thursday afternoon the high school enjoyed a talk by the inspector of schools of Iowa, Mr. Hoadley. His subject was the present war, and was very interesting.

Miss Gilbert gave a talk on Tuesday morning of this week, on how we can help Uncle Sam by buying Thrift and War Stamps.

The picture which was taken of Mrs. Powell and Miss Gilbert has been finished and is just fine.

Those of the high school that didn't miss a word out of a list of one hundred follows: Edith Haupt, Alva Carlson, Minnie Blank, Malinda Musfelt, Mattie Gates, Mable Starnes and Lulu Newburger.

Those of the eifihth grade are as follows: Earl Josten, Clifford Lenz, Edna Howdeshell and Gerhardine Smid.

The Literary Program is to be giwen March 29th. The question is: "Resolved that Senators should be elected by the direct vote of the people." The speakers are as follows: Affirmative—Minnie, Alva and Lulu. Negative—Adna, Mable W. and Dalia. There will be a good program given after the debate. Everybody come!

Do not lose interest in the school.

Mattie Gates and Minnie Blank had charge of the ancient history recitation Tuesday of this week and conducted it by asking questions on the topics.

We all have got the spring fever again.

The pleasant weather has started the boys at playing basket ball.

There will be no spring vacation.

Those of the Fifth Grade who missed no words out of a list of twenty sent out by the State are: Neota Ridder, Gerald Koerner, Clarence Elder, Janette Smid, Bertha Johnson, Glenn Busch and Afton Powell.

Fourth Grade: Beatrice Busch, Frank Gibbs, Ruth Johnson, Neota Ridder, Gerald Koerner.

GREAT GHOSTS AT THE FRONT

Spooks Described as Resembling Vast Pillars of White Smoke, Possibly Intended to Poison Air.

One of the most mysterious happenings on the western front during the past autumn has been the appearance there from time to time of what our Tommies have christened the 'family ghost," relates a writer in London Tit-Bits.

He is a veritable giant amongst spooks, reaching to a height of several hundred feet, and in form and appearance resembles a pillar of white smoke.

It has been described by a close observer as being perfectly straight and apparently rigid as far as the top, where it sprays round into a knob. Altogether, it suggests a giant stick of celery

Much speculation has arisen as to how the family ghost is produced, and for what purpose. One theory is that the giant pillars are intended to poison the atmosphere with some new kind of gas, and this is borne out by the fact that, where they have been observed during daylight, they have appeared to windward of our lines.

On the other hand, the atmospheric-poisoning experiments—if indeed that is what they are—can hardly have been very successful, since no smell or taste of gas, or other deleterious vapor, has ever been noted in connection with them.

MOLASSES AND GASOLINE.

The plan of substituting alcohol for gasoline in Australia receives little encouragement from a report of the commonwealth advisory council of science and industry The entire available supply of sugar molasses, the most economical raw material, would yield only 4,000,000 gallons yearly, and the imports of gasoline are already 17,000,000 gallons. To provide the new fuel in sufficiently large quantities is the problem. Of the 50,000 tons of molasses annually available for distillation, one-fourth is already used for that purpose, the remainder being largely wasted

Cremona Violins.

Small splinters of the wood of old Cremona violins, when vibrated with a bow, have been found to give invariably the same note and that note is always a tone higher when the wood is taken from the belly of the instrument than when it comes from the back.

What's New For Spring?

ANY number of men and young men have asked us that question about the spring clothes. There never has been so much interest before and never so many good styles to be interested in. Because so many men want authentic information, we're publishing these fashion notes.

There's the "erect, shoulders back and chest out" influence of this war that is evident in all the new models. The waist lines are more marked; the buttons spaced closer together; military backs and pockets are the thing.

1 At the extreme left is the new two button sack with patch pockets. Notice the straight hanging front and the boby tracing lines at the waist.

2 Next you see a double breasted suit; they're going to be worn more than ever this spring. They'll make a pleasing change for many men. Notice the buttons---two only are buttoned. The lapels are semi-peaked.

3 The Third suit from the left is one of the liveliest of the new sport styles. There's a seam at the waistline; a military back and slanting slash pockets. Those are small plaits above the waist seam.

4 This suit at the right is another sport style--and an especially good one. The pockets have double rows of stitching and buttons and buttonholes.

We'll be glad to show you some of the other new ones; every suit is all wool for long wear. The value you get for your money makes these the lowest priced clothes you can buy.

Birds' Nests for Soup.

The birds' nests from which the far-famed Chinese soup is made are built by a species of swallow that abounds on the coasts of Java, Ceylon and Borneo, and consists of a gelatinous substance obtained from marine plants. The nests are boiled either in chicken broth or in milk of almonds, and the result very much resembles vermicelli soup, except that it is far more costly.

Rich Anthracite Deposits.

At least twenty-one workable beds of anthracite have been identified in the state of Pennsylvania. Their maximum depth below the surface approximates 2,500 feet, and they contain at best from sixty to seventy feet of coal. However, in the "southern" field some of the beds are estimated to reach levels 4,000 feet below the surface.

North American Moose.

The moose is the largest living representative of the deer family, and is found in North America. The elk is native of northern Europe and is considered by many zoologists to be the same species, except that it is smaller. A full grown moose may be six and one-half to seven feet tall at the shoulder and weigh 1,000 to 1,500 pounds. On account of endurance and strength the moose is frequently symbolic, persons of unusual power being said to be "As strong as a bull moose."

The original Americans of the far North are brown instead of red and are not Indians. Their name, Eskimos, which they dislike, means "eaters of raw fish." But they haven't been driven yet to change their name by cooking the fish, says the World Outlook.

How He Foretold Weather.

At Whitby, when the moon is surrounded by a halo of watery clouds, the seamen say there will be a change of weather, for the moon dogs are about. An amusing story is told about a fisherman in Torquay. A gale having taken place during the night, he said he had foreseen it, as he had noticed a star ahead of the moon towing her and another astern chasing her. "I know'd 'twas coming then, safe enough," he told them all.—London Mail.

Lucid Explanation.

Jane, being under the doctor's care, was telling John what good pills Doctor K. gave. John said: "Doctor K. was to see me, but just gave me cluform." No answer from Jane, so John said: "Janie, do you know what cluform is?" Jane said: "No," and John said: "Oh, just something so you won't get your feelings hurted."

Music's Effects.

Children, the young and the vigorous, are more resistant or find more pleasure in noises than do the older and less healthy. Martial music to incite action, courage and animal spirits approaches that mild bedlam of the average boy. The rhapsodies of love and effete civilization require soft, soothing, gentle and calm melodies. The supersensitive ears of such quiet, far-from-bold natures are made ill by the rugged sounds of conquering heroes.—Exchange.

Stained Glass.

In making stained glass windows, every bit of the work is done by hand, and it is amazing to realize how many times each piece of glass must be handled. An operator tells of counting up one day and finding that no less than 12 times were necessary. All the lead work is done by hand, too, even the opening of the little slots into which the glass is fastened.

Tree Lore.

The reason most trees lean toward the northwest, says an old tree trimmer, is because in the summer our prevailing winds are from the southeast; the ground then is soft and the trees being in full leaf, the wind tilts them toward the northwest. In the winter the northern winds do not have this effect on the trees because they are denuded of leaves and the ground is frozen or hard.

Musk a Chinese Monopoly.

Musk is one product of world commerce in which China practically enjoys a monopoly—not a large one, to be sure, since the annual output is at best only some $400,000 gold, but the product itself is worth many times its weight in silver, and for that matter, gold as well, in these days of high exchange, says the Far Eastern Review, Chungking.

Relax if You Would Sleep.

The philosopher Hegel finished his principal work on the eve of the battle of Jena, amidst the thunder of cannon. Noise, instead of interfering with conscious thinking, produces an incentive to thought. If you keep too vigorous an attention on your ideas, after you compose yourself for sleep; if you maintain an emotional element or any feelings with them, you will lie awake or have only fitful sleep.

LONG WALK TO JOIN HUSBAND

Soldier's Wife, Unable to Purchase Railroad Ticket, Tramped on Foot for Many Weary Miles.

Soldiers at Camp Hancock, near Augusta, Ga., have ceased to complain about a 20-mile hike since the arrival there of Mrs. Anna Messinger of Chillicothe, O., who walked from that place to Augusta, in order to be near her soldier husband, who is with the motor mechanics' regiment, the Washington Evening Star's (Ga.) correspondent writes.

"I was anxious to be with my husband until his departure for France, and I couldn't afford the price of a railway ticket, so I struck out on foot, accompanied by my brother-in-law and his wife," said Mrs. Messinger upon her arrival here.

The party tramped their way through the states of Ohio, Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee and northern Georgia, arriving in Augusta 26 days after starting from Chillicothe.

Mrs. Messinger says they spent the nights at farmhouses, where they had the most courteous treatment. They walked through ice and snow almost the entire distance, there being only two fine days during the jaunt. She says she wore out one pair of slippers, three pairs of shoes, and three pairs of rubbers.

THE SPRING DRIVE

Our boys are going "Over the top" and into "No man's land" this spring. No one has any doubt of their ability to get there. There will also be a spring drive on this side of the ocean, because March is the year's "blue Monday." It is the most fatal month of the year. March and April is a time when resistance usually is at lowest ebb. It is a trying season for the "run-down" man. But medical science steps in, and says, "it need not be"! We should cultivate a love of health, a sense of responsibility for the care of our bodies. Do not allow the machinery of the body to clog. Put the stomach and liver in proper condition. Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, to be had at most drug stores in tablet or liquid form, tablets sixty-cents a vial, composed of native herbs. This puts the stomach and liver in proper condition. You may be plodding along, no spring, no elasticity, no vim, but as soon as you have put the body into its normal physical condition—oiled the machinery, as it were—you will find new vim, vigor and vitality within you. A little "pep," and we laugh and live. Try it now. Send Dr. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c. for trial package. A little energy will save the day. The prime necessity of life is health. With spirit and energy you have the power to force yourself into action. The Golden Medical Discovery is the spring tonic which you need.

"By Jove!" he thought. "How difficult it is to defend one's self when one is innocent. There's my right wing and my left wing driven in. Will my center be able to stand the assault?"

M. Desmalions, after a whispered colloquy with the examining magistrate, resumed his questions in these terms:

"Yesterday evening, when M. Fauville opened his safe in your presence and the sergeant's, what was in the safe?"

"A heap of papers, on one of the shelves; and, among those papers, the diary in drab cloth which has since disappeared."

"You did not touch those papers?"

"Neither the papers nor the safe, Monsieur le Prefet. Sergeant Mazeroux must have told you that he made me stand aside, to insure the regularity of the inquiry."

"So you never came into the slightest contact with the safe?"

"Not the slightest."

M. Desmalions looked at the examining magistrate and nodded his head. Had Perenna been able to doubt that a trap was being laid for him, a glance at Mazeroux would have told him all about it. Mazeroux was ashen gray.

"You have taken part in inquiries, monsieur, in police inquiries. Therefore, in putting my next question to you, I consider that I am addressing it to a tried detective."

"I will answer your question, Monsieur le Prefet, to the best of my ability."

"Here it is, then: Supposing that there were at this moment in the safe an object of some kind, a jewel, let us say, a diamond out of a tie pin, and that this diamond had come from a tie pin which belonged to somebody whom we knew, somebody who had spent the night in this house, what would you think of the coincidence?"

"There we are," said Perenna to himself. "There's the trap. It's clear that they've found something in the safe, and next, that they imagine that this something belongs to me. Good! But, in that case, we must presume, as I have not touched the safe, that the thing was taken from me and put in the safe to compromise me. But I did not have a finger in this pie until yesterday; and it is impossible that, during last night, when I saw nobody, any one can have had time to prepare and contrive such a determined plot against me. So——"

The prefect of police interrupted this silent monologue by repeating: :

"What would be your opinion?"

"There would be an undeniable connection between that person's presence in the house and the two crimes that had been committed."

"Consequently, we should have the right at least to suspect the person?"

"Yes."

"That is your view?"

"Decidedly."

M. Desmalions produced a piece of tissue paper from his pocket and took from it a little blue stone, which he displayed.

"Here is a turquoise which we found in the safe. It belongs, without a shadow of a doubt, to the ring which you are wearing on your finger."

Don Luis was seized with a fit of rage. He half grated, through his clenched teeth:

"Oh, the rascals! How clever they are But no, I can't believe——"

He looked at his ring, which was formed of a large, clouded, dead turquoise, surrounded by a circle of small, irregular turquoises, also of a very pale blue. One of these was missing; and the one which M. Desmalions had in his hand fitted the place exactly.

"What do you say?" asked M. Desmalions.

"I say that this turquoise belongs to my ring, which was given me by Cosmo Mornington on the first occasion that I saved his life."

"So we are agreed?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet, we are agreed."

Don Luis Perenna began to walk across the room, reflecting. The movement which the two detectives made toward the two doors told him that his arrest was provided for. A word from M. Desmalions, and Sergeant Mazeroux would be forced to take his chief by the collar.

Don Luis once more gave a glance toward his former accomplice. Mazeroux made a gesture of entreaty, as though to say:

"Well, what are you waiting for? Why don't you give up the criminal? Quick, it's time!"

Don Luis smiled.

"What's the matter?" asked the prefect, in a tone that now entirely lacked the sort of involuntary politeness which he had shown since the commencement of the examination.

"The matter? The matter?—"

Perenna seized a chair by the back, spun it round and sat down upon it, with the simple remark:

"Let's talk!"

And this was said in such a way and the movement executed with so much decision that the prefect muttered, as though wavering:

"I don't quite see——"

"You soon will, Monsieur le Prefet."

And, speaking in a slow voice, laying stress on every syllable that he uttered, he began:

"Monsieur le Prefet, the position is as clear as daylight. Yesterday evening you gave me an authorization which involves your responsibility most gravely. The result is that what you now want, at all costs and without delay, is a culprit. And that culprit is to be myself. By way of incriminating evidence, you have the fact of my presence here, the fact the door was locked on the inside, the fact that Sergeant Mazeroux was asleep while the crime was committed, and the fact of the discovery of the turquoise in the safe. All this is crushing, I admit. Added to it," he continued, "we have the terrible presumption that I had every interest in the removal of M. Fauville and his son, inasmuch as, if there is no heir of Cosmo Mornington's in existence, I come into 100,000,000 francs. Exactly. There is therefore nothing for me to do, Monsier le Prefet, but to go with you to the lockup or else——"

"Or else what?"

"Or else hand over to you the criminal, the real criminal."

The prefect of police smiled and took out his watch.

"I'm waiting," he said.

"It will take me just an hour, Monsier le Prefet, and no more, if you give me every latitude. And the search of the truth, it seems to me, is worth a little patience."

"I'm waiting," repeated M. Desmalions.

"Sergeant Mazerous, please tell Silvestre, the man servant, that Monsieur le Prefet wishes to see him."

Upon a sign from M. Desmalions, Mazeroux went out.

Don Luis explained his motive.

"Monsieur le Prefet, whereas the discovery of the turquoise constitutes in your eyes an extremely serious proof against me, to me it is a revelation of the highest importance. I will tell you why: That turquoise must have fallen from my ring last evening and rolled on the carpet.

"Now there are only four persons," he continued, "who can have noticed this fall when it happened, picked up the turquoise and, in order to compromise the new adversary that I was, slipped it into the safe. The first of those four persons is one of your detectives, Sergeant Mazeroux, of whom we will not speak. The second is dead: I refer to M. Fauville. We will not speak of him. The third is Silvestre, the manservant. I should like to say a few words to him. I shall not take long."

Silvestre's examination, in fact, was soon over. He was able to prove that, pending the return of Mme. Fauville, for whom he had to open the door, he had not left the kitchen, where he was playing at cards with the lady's maid and another manservant.

"Very well," said Perenna. "One word more. You must have read in this morning's papers of the death of Inspector Verot and seen his portrait."

"Yes."

"Do you know Inspector Verot?"

"No."

"Still, it is probable that he came here yesterday, during the day."

"I can't say," replied the servant. "M. Fauville used to receive many visitors through the garden and let them in himself."

"You have no more evidence to give?"

"No."

"Please tell Mme. Fauville that Monsieur le Prefet would be very much obliged if he could have a word with her."

The examining magistrate and the public prosecutor had drawn nearer in astonishment.

The prefect exclaimed:

"What, monsieur! You don't mean to pretend that Mme. Fauville is mived up——"

"Monsieur le Prefet, Mme. Fauville is the fourth person who may have seen the turquoise drop out of my ring."

"And what then? Have we the right, in the absence of any real proof, to suppose that a woman can kill her husband, that a mother can poison her son?"

"I am supposing nothing, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Then——?"

Don Luis made no reply. M. Desmalions did not conceal his irritation. However, he said:

"Very well; but I order you most positively to remain silent. What questions am I to put to Mme. Fauville?"

"One only, Monsier le Prefet: ask Mme. Fauville if she knows any one, apart from her husband, who is descended from the sisters Roussel."

"Why that question?"

"Because, if that descendant exists, it is not I who will inherit the millions, but he; and then it will be he and not I who would be interested in the removal of M. Fauville and his son."

"Of course, of course," muttered M. Desmalions. "But even so, this new trail——"

Mme. Fauville entered as he was speaking. Her face remained charming and pretty in spite of the tears that had reddened her eyelids and impaired the freshness of her cheeks. But her eyes expressed the scare of terror; and the obsession of the tragedy imparted to all her attractive personality, to her gait and to her movements, something feverish and spasmodic that was painful to look upon.

"Pray sit down, madame," said the prefect, speaking with the height of deference, "and forgive me for inflicting any additional emotion upon you. But time is precious; and we must do everything to make sure that the two victims whose loss you are mourning shall be avenged without delay."

Tears were still streaming from her beautiful eyes; and, with a sob, she stammered:

"If the police need me, Monsieur le Prefet——"

"Yes, it is a question of obtaining a few particulars. Your husband's mother is dead, is she not?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Am I correct in saying that she came from Saint-Etienne and that her maiden name was Roussel?"

"Yes."

"Elizabeth Roussel?"

"Yes."

"Had your husband any brothers or sisters?"

"No."

"Therefore there is no descendant of Elazabeth Roussel living?"

"No."

"Very well. But Elizabeth Roussel had two sisters, did she not?"

"Yes."

"Ermeline Roussel, the elder, went abroad and was not heard of again. The other, the younger—"

"The other was called Armande Roussel. She was my mother."

"Eh? What do you say?"

"I said my mother's maiden name was Armande Roussel, and I married my cousin, the son of Elizabeth Roussel."

The statement had the effect of a thunderclap. So, upon the death of Hippolyte Fauville and his son Edmond, the direct descendants of the eldest sister, Cosmo Mornington's inheritance passed to the other branch, that of Armande Roussel; and this branch was represented so far by Mme. Fauville!

The prefect of police and the examining magistrate exchanged glances and both instinctively turned toward Don Luis Perenna, who did not move a muscle.

"Have you no brother or sister, madame?" asked the prefect.

"No, Monsieur le Prefet, I am the only one."

The only one! In other words, now that her husband and son were dead, Cosmo Mornington's millions reverted absolutely and undeniably to her, to her alone.

Meanwhile, a hideous idea weighed like a nighmare upon the magistrates and they could not rid themselves of it: the woman sitting before them was the mother of Edmond Fauville. M. Desmalions had his eyes on Don Luis Perenna, who wrote a few words on a card and handed it to the prefect.

M. Desmalions, who was gradually resuming toward Don Luis his courteous attitude of the day before, read it, reflected a moment, and put this question to Mme. Fauville:

"What was your son Edmond's age?"

"Seventeen."

"You look so young——"

"Edmond was not my son, but my stepson, the son of my husband by his first wife, who died."

"Ah! So Edmond Fauville—" muttered the prefect, without finishing his sentence.

In two minutes the whole situation had changed. In the eyes of the magistrates, Mme. Fauville was no longer the widow and mother who must on no account be attacked. She had suddenly become a woman whom circumstances compelled them to cross examine. However prejudiced they might be in her favor, however charmed by the seductive qualities of her beauty, they were inevitably bound to ask themselves, whether for some reason or other, for instance, in order to be alone in the enjoyment of the enormous fortune, she had not had the madness to kill her husband and to kill the boy who was only her husband's son. In any case the question was there, calling for a solution.

"Do you know this turquoise?"

She took the stone which he held out to her and examined it without the least sign of confusion.

"No," she said. "I have an old fashioned turquoise necklace which I never wear, but the stones are larger and none of them has this irregular shape."

"We found this one in the safe," said M. Desmalions. "It forms part of a ring belonging to a person whom we know."

"Well," she said eagerly, "you must find that person."

"He is here," said the prefect, pointing to Don Luis, who had been standing some way off and who had not been noticed by Mme Fauville.

She started at the sight of Perenna and cried, very excitedly:

"But that gentleman was here yesterday evening! He was talking to my husband—and so was that other gentleman," she said referring to Sergeant Mazeroux "You must question them, find out why they were here. You understand that, if the turquoise belonged to one of them——"

The insinuation was direct, but clumsy; and it lent the greatest weight to Perenna's unspoken argument:

"The turquoise was picked up by some one who saw me yesterday, and who wishes to compromise me. Apart from M. Fauville and the detective sergeant, only two people saw me: Silvestre, the manservant, and Mme. Fauville Consequently, as Silvestre is outside the question, I accuse Mme Fauville of putting the turquoise in the safe."

M. Desmalions asked:

"Will you let me see the necklace, madame?"

"Certainly. It is with my other jewels, in my wardrobe. I will go for it."

"Pray don't trouble, madame. Does your maid know the necklace?"

"Quite well."

"In that case, Sergeant Mazeroux will tell her what is wanted."

Not a word was spoken during the few minutes for which Mazeroux was absent. Mme. Fauville seemed absorbed in her grief. M. Desmalions kept his eyes fixed on her.

The sergeant returned, carrying a very large box containing a number of jewel cases and loose ornaments.

M. Desmalions found the necklace, examined it, and realized, in fact, that the stones did not resemble the turquoise and that none of them was missing. But, on separating two jewel cases in order to take out a tiara which also contained blue stones, he made a gesture of surprise.

"What are these two keys?" he asked, pointing to two keys identical in shape and size with those which opened the lock and the bolt of the garden door.

Mme. Fauville remained very calm. Not a muscle of her face moved. Nothing pointed to the least perturbation on account of this discovery. She merely said:

ere's a Reason"

BRITAIN'S NEW ARMY CHIEF A FIGHTER.

General Sir Henry Hughes Wilson, Great Britain's representative on the new allied war council that was created at Rapallo, is one of his country's most distinguished soldiers. His long and brilliant record does not suffer by contrast even with those of his two renowned colleagues, General Foch, the representative of France, and General Cadorna, the former commander-in-chief of the armies of Italy. General Wilson is the new "war lord" of Great Britain, succeeding Sir William Robertson. The photo is his most recent one and shows him at the wheel of his official car in London.

Like so many of the British empire's greatest fighting men, General Sir Henry Wilson is an Irishman. Now 53, he is the son of James Wilson, D L., J. P., of Currygrane, Edgeworthstown, Ireland, and married one of his country women, Miss Cecil Mary Wray, of Ardnamona, Donegal. He is a lieutenant general, a knight companion of the Rath, a D. S. O., a general staff officer of the Rifle brigade, and was director of military operations at army headquarters from 1910 up to the beginning of the war.

Career Is Distinguished.

His career from the beginning has been one of distinction an exceptional gallantry. He was educated at Marlborough college and graduated at the staff college, after which he entered the Royal Irish regiment. This was in 1884. In the same year he transferred to the rifle brigade, went to India and saw his first active service in the Burma campaign of 1885-87 in which he was wounded. A further two years' period of active service won him a medal with two clasps. Then he was brought back to England and was an instructor at the staff college from 1892 to 1894 and a staff captain in the intelligence division during the next three years. When the South African war broke out, he took part in the campaign as brigadier major of the Light brigade and served brilliantly for over two years, during which time he won the distinguished service order, was four times mentioned in dispatches, was awarded a medal with five clasps, and made a brevet colonel on his promotion to major.

Is Picture of Fitness.

From 1902 to 1903, he commanded the Ninth provisional battalion, and in the years that followed was assistant adjutant general at army headquarters, assistant director of staff duties at the war office and commandant of the staff college. He got his knighthood for distinguished services in the present war and is also a grand officer of the Legion of Honor. In spite of his years, he is the picture of fitness and virility. In peace times he was fond of hunting, shooting, polo and tennis. He has country places at Edgeworthstown, Ireland, at Grove End, in Surrey, and also has a town house in fashionable Eaton Place.

Peace and Optimism.

Isaac F. Marcosson, in the New York Times.

Since President Wilson's speech in reply to Count Czernin, which made the first real rift in the gray sky of war, the American heart has beat with the high hope that perhaps the worst of the bloody business is over and that possibly peace is in sight. No prospect could be more alluring.

But let us not be deceived. Like much of the optimism created in the war this soaring emotion may be a dangerous and costly dissipation. What I mean is simply this: Behind a reckless or heedless belief that the long night of ache and agony is near its end is a menace to the whole allied cause in general and to the United States in particular

Everybody admits that the world is war weary. Europe's nerves are on edge; its people are irritable. Yet, allied Europe has learned to appraise properly every subtle attempt made by Germany to "gold brick" her into peace. The hint of an armistice arouses no rash hope in the war ridden countries. Germany "got over" her home made peace on Russia merely because she was dealing, in the main, with men who were fundamentally pro-German, and therefore willing and receptive victims. She could never "put this over" on England, France or Italy. Even the most dyed-in-the-wool pacifist is not deceived by Teutonic overtures. What is more important, there has been no let up in the war endeavor.

The greatest danger to our participation in the war lies in a slacking down the moment there is the slightest tangible evidence that Germany is willing to discuss peace. At this approach to the millennium people will be quick to say: "At last the war is over! Let us get back to normal. Why further disrupt the social and economic life?" This sentiment is infectious. Like the army disorder which leads to rout, it is easily started but difficult to stop. You may be sure that the German propagandist will be swiftly on the job feeding the flames of this destructive optimism.

If the United States commits the folly of slowing down her war effort at the first indication of a peace parley she will be playing directly into the hands of the Germans. Trying to decoy an enemy into an armistice which enables her to recoup losses and renew her war equipment is one of the specialties of the German tricksters. Look at Russia!

This same history, in some respects, would repeat itself in the United States in the remote event of a parley. While the Germans would be prating of peace and blessed relief from the long trial they would be speeding up their munitions output, training new men, bulwarking the whole far flung war machine.

All this means one thing: If by some merciful circumstance we are enabled to talk peace this year we must talk it with a great army behind us, backed up by a war industry geared up to its greatest output, and with the whole country keyed up to the realization that the path to a permanent peace lies in an adequate preparedness for war. There must be no letdown in energy, no cessation of effort, no abandon to "the war is ended" optimism. Germany will have infinitely more respect for us if we keep the wheels of war whirring.

Last October Sir Eric Geddes, first lord of the admiralty and one of the British war wizards, gave me a message for the American people which bears directly on the present situation. It is such a significant utterance that I venture to repeat it here. It follows:

> Give up hoping that this can be a short war. Plan and provide for an ever receding duration of at least two years more. If we all do so peace may one day surprise us. If we do not, then there will be no peace, but only a postponement. There must be no postponement and no "next time."

Swift & Company Publicity

At a recent hearing of the Federal Trade Commission there was introduced correspondence taken from the private files of Swift & Company, which showed that the Company had been considering for some time an educational advertising campaign.

The need for this publicity has been apparent to us for several years. The gross misrepresentation to which we have recently been subjected has convinced us that we should no longer delay in putting before the public the basic facts of our business, relying on the fair-mindedness of the American people.

The feeling against the American packer is based largely on the belief that the income and well-being of the producer and consumer are adversely affected by the packers' operations, resulting in unreasonably large profits.

Swift & Company's net profit is reasonable, and represents an insignificant factor in the cost of living.

For the fiscal year 1917 the total sales and net profit of Swift & Company were as follows:

Sales
$875,000,000.

Profits
$34,650,000.

This is equivalent to a $3,465. profit on a business of $87,500.

If Swift & Company had made no profit at all, the cattle raiser would have received only one-eighth of a cent per pound more for his cattle, or the consumer would have saved only one-quarter of a cent per pound on dressed beef.

Swift & Company, U. S. A.

Camp Life Reform.

That the training of an alien rookie at the camps makes a real man and a good citizen of him was demonstrated recently, when a former Italian bootblack was encountered on the main street. He came from Italy a year ago and applied for naturalization papers. Along came the war. He was drafted in the first call. Then he came to town and here's his tale: "I am pleased, much pleased, because when they took me I could speak very little English. I have been there four months, and you will see how I speak English when I tell you that I am now a corporal."—New York Sun.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

The Reason.

Grace—I don't see why Miss Homely should want to marry him, with all her money.

Gussie—I don't think he'd have taken her without it.

PREPAREDNESS.

The leader of the mob must be a lively sprinter to avoid being overtaken.

Win the War by Preparing the Land

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return

For particulars as to routes and places where employment may be had apply to: U. S. EMPLOYMENT SERVICE, DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Grass.

From the Indianapolis News.

In the spring the average man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of grass. And not so very lightly, either, for growing grass in a great many city yards is a good deal like trying to make the lower 40 produce 50 bushels of wheat to the acre. Many a man who has heard of or seen the velvetlike turf so famous in England, has been filled with a strong resolution to make his front yard so green and so velvety that passersby will pause and wonder at the beauty of it. Then some one comes along and tells him that old tale about the turf in England being rolled for 100 years. That is what a yard needs as a final dressing.

Grass is a serious subject. A large book informs us that grass is an endogeneous plant, having simple leaves, a stem generally jointed and tubular, the husks or glumes in pairs, and the seed single. Lots of folk never suspected grass of that before.

Man has no further to go than the bible for a suggestion about lawn improvement. In Genesis i,11, is the injunction to "let the earth bring forth grass." The next verse declares that "the earth brought forth grass," which indicates that the soil in the garden of Eden was much better than it is in some other portions of the earth. Deuteronomy, xxix, 23, says: "And the whole land thereof is brimstone and salt and burning, that it is not sown nor beareth, nor any grass groweth therein." One would not have to travel far to find a man who would make affidavit that his yard was just like this. Yet there is more encouragement in II Samuel, xxii, 4, where it is said "as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain." Job vi, 5, asks: "Doth the wild ass bray when he hath grass?" This question, of course, is respectfully referred to the United States Senate.

Bible readers are familiar with Psalms cii, 11, where the statement is made that "my days are like a shadow that declineth and I am withered like grass." And in Psalms ciii, 15, we find that "as for man, his days are as grass." The average grass grower's trouble is well expressed in Psalms cxxix, 6, for there the scripture declares: "As the grass upon the housetops which withereth afore it groweth up." Full many an experience in attempting to beautify the lawn is summed up in Isaiah, xv, 6, "The grass faileth, there is no green thing."

Sassafras.

From the Indianapolis News.

A friend who has not lost his touch with "green fields and running brooks" remarked a few days ago that sassafras will soon be with us again. There must be some benighted city dwellers who do not know that sassafras is "a tree of the laurel family, common in eastern North America, with a spicy aromatic bark, especially on the roots, and very mucilaginous twigs and foliage." It is also "an aromatic stimulant." Its peculiar habitat, we should say, is Montgomery county, in and about Alamo, where James Buchanan Elmore, the laureate of this laurel, lives and toils and thinks. Those who have read his tribute thereto will never scorn this "aromatic stimulant." We have not, we regret to say, his poem at hand, but there is in it a stanza that runs something like this:

> O sassafras, O sassafras,
> Thou art the stuff for me!
> And in the spring I love to sing
> Sweet sassafras of thee!

There is in the thought of this "aromatic stimulant" a subtle suggestion of fields and woods, and also of rural taverns which carry sassafras tea on their menus. In these days of soft drinks it may be that the proprietors of sundae dispensaries will find it to their advantage to include sassafras tea in their offerings. Only the other day our brutal food administrator decreed that there should be no more afternoon teas. But surely even he would not object were sassafras tea served. There ought to be a great market for it in England the usual supply having been cut off. When we are all looking for substitutes the claims of the "mucilaginous twigs and foliage" ought not to be overlooked. It is from the poetic and romantic point of view that we prefer to [illegible] subject. With sassafras tea and outdoors spring must be almost here, with spring come baseball, and unless Mr. McAdoo puts an the circus.

How to Make Oatmeal Bread

Healthful to Eat—Saves the Wheat

1 cup flour	1 cup cooked oatmeal or rolled oats
1½ cups corn meal	2 tablespoons shortening
1 teaspoon salt	1½ cups milk
5 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder	No eggs
2 tablespoons sugar

Sift together flour, corn meal, salt, baking powder and sugar. Add oatmeal, melted shortening and milk. Bake in greased shallow pan in moderate oven 40 to 45 minutes.

This wholesome bread is easily and quickly made with the aid of

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

If used three times a week in place of white bread by the 22 million families in the United States, it would save more than 900,000 barrels of flour a month.

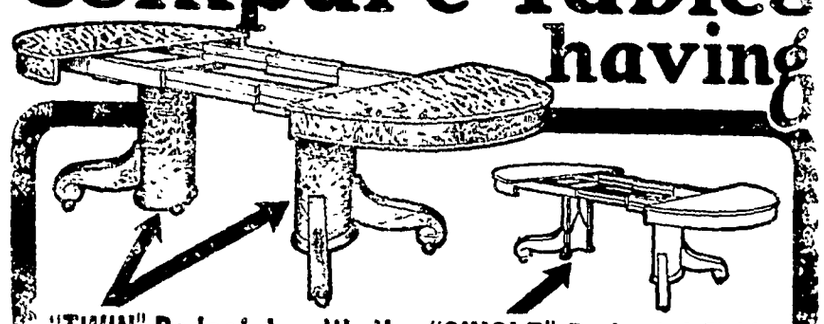
Compare Tables having



"TWIN" Pedestals with the "SINGLE" Pedestal Table

and you will see why everybody can now have the stylish Pedestal Tables.

A "TWIN" always has TWO complete pedestals. Each pedestal has strength, because it's a complete oval or oblong barrel.

Each pedestal stands on three casters which makes the table as rigid as the 5-leg table

In the long lengths (for threshing time) a folding center leg comes into use, supporting the middle of the table.

Insist on a "TWIN" Pedestal Table because it is the strongest Pedestal Table made.

Habit to Be Avoided.

The habit of unkind criticism or promiscuous criticism, if you prefer the word, grows by leaps and bounds if permitted to flourish at all. We have ideas in which we take a certain amount of pride, and those who do not live by them fall under the ban of our displeasure. We have no reason for believing that our ways are better, we merely assume it, and expect others to take the same line of thought. You see we demand freedom of action that we are not willing to accord to others.—Exchange.

Carillon.

This is the name given to a set of bells arranged in such a way as to be capable of giving forth a regular tune, or melody. A much greater number of bells is required for a Carillon than is hung for a general peal of bells. A large peal of bells consists of 10 or 12, while a Carillon may consist of as many as 30 or 40.

GLASS FOUND IN FOOD

A quantity of sharp needle like glass was found in a bunch of lettuce last Sunday when Mrs. A. Wilson of Garner was preparing the lettuce for dinner. Mrs. Wilson discovered the glass when she was washing the lettuce in water. On examination it was found that the box in which the lettuce was shipped contained a large quantity of long needle like splinters of glass, which had sifted to the bottom in shipping. How the glass happened to be there is a mystery and was evidently done when the lettuce was packed for shipment.

It would be well for every housewife to carefully look over any food stuffs before preparing them for the table as glass has been found in vegetables and canned goods. This is the first instance we know of when glass has been found in food in this locality.

Safety First! Look your food over carefully.

New Conservation Measure

First. Householders to use not to exceed a total of one and one-half pounds per week of wheat flour products per person. Klemme Babe Joins Red Cross

KLEMME CLAIMS YOUNGEST RED CROSS MEMBER IN THE STATE

Klemme has, without a doubt, the youngest Red Cross member in the state of Iowa at the present writing. Lowell Timberlake Trafford, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Trafford, was born Thursday, March 21. He became a full fledged member of the local chapter the other day but as yet has not attended any of the meetings. He says he believes in starting a good thing when he is still young.

RED CROSS NOTES

At the regular meeting held Wednesday afternoon a fair attendance was present, but there is still room for more and it will be greatly appreciated if you will try to be there to help with the sewing and knitting.

There were three of the Garner ladies down to our last meeting for the purpose of answering any questions about the work the members of this chapter cared to ask, Mrs. Pritchard and Mrs. Wesson discussing the work in general while Mrs. Byers, (chairman of the knitters), gave an interesting talk on the new directions for the knitting of socks, etc.

A large shipment of yarn was received last week so the Red Cross can now furnish the ladies with plenty of yarn to make the much needed knitted articles for our boys "over there."

You are earnestly urged to be present at the surgical dressing class on Monday and Friday evenings, as the work was allotted for a good size class, but so many have dropped out it makes a lot of work for a few to do, so plan to be there.

The Comfort Kit will be sent to Mr. Magner and if there is anybody who would like to send anything else to him it can be included.

Sec'y Red Cross Association,
Klemme, Iowa,

Dear Ladies and Friends:—

I do not know how you handle your affairs, but a number of the boys here have been writing to their local Red Cross and receiving various things. I could use a comfort kit very handily and if you could send me one would sure appreciate it. As we are in detention it is impossible to get out to buy anything and when a rookie hits for camp he does not know what to bring and what not to, and consequently the most of us come very short handed. Excuse lack of paragraphs but we are taught to be saving on paper and that is one way to do it. I like it fine so far. Have lots of fun getting accustomed to sleeping in a hammock, but as I have been here over a week now that has become an old story. Some of the boys took some nasty falls as the hammocks are stretched eight feet from the floor, but not any of the boys in our section have fallen out, but one boy from Grinnell fell out the other night and broke three toes. We receive good feed or "chow" as we call it and anyone who kicks on the treatment received here is going to have some real kicks before he gets home if he ever does. I have enlisted in the quartermaster's of the aviation and hope to be a birdman in due time, but not all of us will get the opportunity. We have received one typhus shot and a vaccination. Will receive our second shot today or tomorrow. As my vaccination did not take will have to be vaccinated again. Well, will ring off but if you wish will write you again.

Your friend,
M. M. Magner.

GORKOW TO PLAY WITH RINGLING BAND

Phil Gorkow, who has been employed in the Times office for the past few months leaves this week for Colesburg, Iowa, to visit with relatives before going to Chicago where he will rehearse with Ringling Bros.' Circus band prior to the summer engagement.

Mr. Gorkow has made rapid strides in the musical world and is coming to the front. He will play cornet in the big Concert Band of the Ringling show this season.

Last season Mr. Gorkow was with the Yankee Robinson Show and later went with Polly of the Circus Co., touring the central and southern states.

Phil has a large number of friends in Klemme who regret his leaving, also the Editor of the Times will lose a good all around printer who can not be easily duplicated. We wish him lots of good luck and welcome him back at the end of the season.

Father of Punctuation.

The present system of punctuation, now used in all modern languages with but insignificant variations, was introduced in the first half of the fifteenth century by a Venetian printer named Aldus Manutius. He is the real father of punctuation marks—of the full stop, comma, semicolon, colon, question and exclamation marks, apostrophe and inverted commas. Manutius' system was adopted later by all printers until it finally established itself throughout Europe.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Our Neighbors.

Charles Lamb was one day criticising a neighbor rather severely when his listener interposed with a protest that the judgment was mistaken, and that the critic did not really know the man. "But I don't want to know him," said Lamb. "I might get to like him." That is what might happen in a good many cases when we stand off and condemn. The faults are not the only qualities our neighbor possesses. We might get to like him if we took the trouble to get acquainted.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

Gas for street lighting was first used in Pall Mall London 111 years ago. A few experimental gas lights previously had been used in Golden Lane, but it was not until a few years later that the new form of illumination was generally adopted in London streets. The first attempt to introduce the use of gas in America was in Baltimore in 1816 The project was unsuccessful. In 1822 it was introduced in Boston, and in the following year New York streets were lighted by gas. The system did not prove successful however, until 1827 The use of gas spread rapidly to other cities in the United States and Canada. Resin and oil were used for producing gas in America in the early days of the industry Until half a century ago the price a 1,000 feet ranged up to $7, the average being about $7 50.

Experiments conducted by the Southern Pacific railroad to find the most efficient means of handling the locomotive whistle show the average motorist or pedestrian is familiar with the standard crossing signal—two long and two short blasts—and that, unless the signal is given just so, he is apt to dispute priority right to a crossing, Superintendent T Ahern, in a letter to engineers, says "Extensive tests show that a whistle call for a station signal should never be less than five seconds the long blasts of the crossing signal, two and a half seconds, and the short ones, one second. Particular care should be exercised to cut of the blasts sharply and not to slur them. It is of the utmost importance in causing sound to travel that these instructions be carried out"

One of the many explanations that have been offered to account for the fact that migrating birds are able to find their way by night and in cloudy or foggy weather is that they are sensitive, in some way to currents of terrestrial magnetism, and therefore direct their flight by the magnetic meridians This suggestion was put forth by M. A Thauzies, a French pigeon fancier, who declares that carrier pigeons make poor flights during the occurrence of magnetic storms. He also asserts that the general use of wireless telegraphy has diminished the reliability of these birds to a surprising extent

Benjamin Franklins Pennsylvania Gazette was the first American newspaper to print a cartoon There were rumors of a possible war with the French which resulted in a call for a meeting at Albany of the representatives of the British colonies Franklin was one of the commissioners, and to increase the force of an appeal for united action on May 1 1754 printed a cartoon representing a snake cut into eight parts the head representing New England and the other parts the various colonies outside of New England The legend read

A pledge to save fuel oil is called for by Albert E Swacher United States fuel administrator for California who has sent a letter to all locomotive engineers in that state The Southern Pacific is the greatest consumer of fuel oil in that state and the co-operation of its employees is expected to mean in the aggregate a great saving for other industries Mr Swabacher's letter says that the storage supply of fuel oil in California is decreasing at the rate of 1 100,000 barrels a month.

Zero weather in this climate is particularly trying because our ears are not protected. THREE STATES WILL BUILD THE BRIDGE

Iowa, Minnesota and South Dakota to Jointly Own State Line Structure.

Rock Valley, Ia., March 23 - "I stand now at a point that I believe to be the center of the finest piece of land, within a radius of 100 miles, that exists in this country"

This statement made in reference to the junction of the territory of Dakota and the states of Iowa and Minnesota, is credited to Jefferson Davis, president of the southern confederacy. The story goes that Jefferson Davis was a member of the surveying party which established the boundary lines of the three states and when the historical iron post was located this remark is claimed to have been made.

The incident was brought to light from a joint conference with the county commissioners from Rock county, Minnesota Lyon county, Iowa, and Minnehaha county, South Dakota, on bridge matters It was the first time that several of the party had ever seen the marker

At this meeting of the three boards, definite action was taken regarding the bridging of the river at that point The first plan was for a bridge between Iowa and South Dakota, and only a short distance away from another bridge between South Dakota and Minnesota But the final plan as adopted calls for one bridge at the corner one end of the bridge being in South Dakota and the other ending partially resting in Minnesota and partially in Iowa Under the new deal Minnehaha county pays one-half of the cost and Rock county Minnesota and Lyon county Iowa, pay one-fourth each This makes it cheaper all around than if two bridges had been installed and the accommodations are just as good, and the upkeep of one bridge will be less than if two had been installed

TO ASCERTAIN TRUTH ABOUT GREAT STRIKE

Government Probes Facts in Deportation of I. W. W.'s at Bisbee, Ariz.

Washington, D C, March 22.—Gathering of evidence against citizens of Bisbee, Ariz., who were responsible for the deportation of 1,186 striking copper miners last July 12 has about been completed by the department of justice, and a report will be made soon to President Wilson

Some department of justice officials believe that federal statutes were violated in the seizure by the vigilance committee of the Bisbee exchange of the Bell Telephone company and the attempt to exercise a censorship over interstate connection of both telephone and telegraph lines and by the committee's measures to prevent the return of some of the deported workers to their homes where they were registered for the draft

If it is found that there is insufficient evidence to justify prosecution in federal courts, it is probable that the department of justice's report will be forwarded to Governor Hunt, of Arizona, for any action he may wish to take

It is understood that federal agents also have investigated complaints by organized labor that copper mining companies of the Warren district of Arizona financed I W W propaganda among the workers in order to discredit the organized labor movement. Reports on this and other phases of the investigation have been received from United States Attorney Flynn, of the Arizona district.

JOHNSON HAS BILL TO BREAK UP I. W. W. BODY

Washington, D C, March 22.—Aiming to break up the I. W. W. Senator Ed Johnson will introduce a bill which practically compels all men between 18 and 60 to work or show means of livelihood. It empowers drafting by the government of all men between the ages named unless they labor in some way or have means of livelihood.

"We must break up the I. W. W.," said Senator Johnson.

OPEN DRIVE ON ITALIAN FRONT

Italians Repulse Several Enemy Attempts and Active Artillery Fighting Is General.

NEW THRUSTS AT FRENCH

Germans Are Everywhere Repulsed by Poilus in Series of Widely Isolated Attacks.

Rome March 23 Fighting is becoming more active along the whole front, the war office announces.

The Italians drove back patrols at several points on the front and ejected an Austrian detachment which had forced its way into an advance post in the Frenzela valley sector Along the Piave the artillery fighting became more intense

Paris, (Thursday) March 21 - The Germans are carrying out a heavy bombardment along several sectors of the front it is announced, officially Three infantry attacks near Hurlus were broken up by the French. The statement follows

"During the day the German artillery kept up a very violent bombardment between the Matte and the Aisne, in the whole Rheims region and on the Champagne front, especially between the region of the Heights and Ville-Sur Tourbe Our batteries everywhere replied energetically

"In the sector of Hurlus the Germans made three successive attacks.

"They were either dispersed by our fire or driven back by our counter attacks East of Suippes, German raids were completely checked Our artillery took under its fire and dispersed enemy columns, which were advancing in the region south of Monthois. On the right bank of the Meuse and at some points in the Woevre our first line positions were bombarded rather heavily.

"Macedonian Front, March 27.—There was reciprocal artillery activity in the region of Gievgheli and north of Monastir. Allied aviators successfully carried out numerous bombing operations on enemy establishments in the Struma and Vardar valleys and north of Moglena An enemy machine was brought down in an aerial combat.

"Belgian Communication—On March 20, the German artillery was very active carrying out for the most part bombardment of our communications with long range guns"

GET RAIDER IN PACIFIC

Vessel Said to Have Been Outfitted in Mexico—Craft Is Captured by U. S. Cruiser.

A Pacific Port, March 23 —A German raider operating in the Pacific ocean has been captured by a United States cruiser and is now being towed to this port, according to a report received here today.

The raider is said to be a comparatively small vessel, but capable of sinking any merchant ship on the Pacific. It is alleged to have been outfitted from the west coast of Mexico and was manned by an all-German crew. The manner in which it secured clearance papers is not yet known to the United States officials and it is said that already an investigation into this aspect is being conducted by department agents.

Mr Heney announced that he would go to Washington at the conclusion of the Kansas City hearing and thence to New York.

MINERS TO COMB OUT MEN FOR ARMY SERVICE

London, March 22 —It is understood that the miners' federation has accepted the government's proposal regarding the combing out of men for military service.

BRITISH CONFIDENT.

By United Press.

London, March 22.—British military officials are confident the big German drive is stopped, but they sounded a note of warning today that the world's destiny may depend on the human wall against which the enemy is hurling his shock troops. Correspondents at the front agree that the enemy is trying its "nut cracker" strategy on the Cambrai salient from the flank seeking to straighten its line and pinch off an enormous number of British men and guns.

During the last 24 hours the cannonading on the western front has been distinctly heard in Holland the Exchange correspondent at Amsterdam reports.

BOCHES DRIVEN BACK BY YANKS

U. S. Artillery Pulverizes Two Lines of German Trenches In Eastern France.

By Associated Press.

With the American Army in France Thursday, March 21.- Enemy first and second line positions on a part of the sector east of Luneville have been destroyed by American artillery fire. After the raid into the Germon lines last night the American gunners shelled the positions heavily all night and this morning

Today a patrol without assistance from the artillery crossed No Man's Land and found that the first and second line had been wiped out

The patrol also obtained additional information and returned without casualties, the Germans apparently having decided not to molest them

Artillery firing by both sides on this sector continued all day

Deserters Surrender.

On the sector northwest of Toul a number of Germans deserted last night and surrendered to an American patrol in a certain wood The Germans approached the Americans shouting "Don't shoot" The prisoners were turned over to the French

Much information of value was obtained from the deserters who said they were "fed up" with the war and decided they would rather be prisoners. Included in the information obtained from the men the statement that during the gas projector attack against the American lines on February 27, 900 projectors were employed One-half the projectiles fired fell within the German lines and the gas overcame many of the Germans. The next day, according to the deserters, 11 Germans were killed and 30 wounded while taking out the dead.

American intelligence officers are inclined to doubt the story regarding 900 projectors; American information is that only 75 were used.

An American patrol last night entered the enemy first line and remained there six hours, but did not see any of the enemy. It is reported that the Germans recently had constructed trenches that are concrete half way up on the side.

Great activity continues behind the enemy lines. Within the last four days a number of rock crushers and concrete mixers have been brought up and there are signs that the Germans intend to construct a number of new pillboxes opposite the American front. Several trains of material have arrived at towns in the German lines during the last 24 hours.

Today's reports say that three German airplanes flew over various parts of the American front line at daybreak and fired their machine guns on our positions. Their efforts, however, were without result.

With the American Army in France, March 21.—The raid into the German positions east of Luneville last night by American and French troops was carried out under cover of darkness and as a haze began to roll in over the hills facing the American lines on that particular portion of the sector

From an observation station high in a tree top, the correspondent watched the artillery preparation. It began soon after dusk, orange colored bursts of flame where the American guns were firing showing in certain places in the wood around about From the hillsides across the valley the German guns retaliated.

For more than half an hour, the brilliant bluish-white flash of their guns was like a jumping electric spark here and there. Soon the reports of the explosions became a deafening roar which rolled in from everywhere as the guns far and near came into action This was the time for the barrage. From the spot where the shells fell a constant red glow showed through the darkness. At the same time the German guns increased their fire

As the barrage lifted the roar became quiet just at the moment the Americans and French went over the top. The noise of the German guns sounded like some one beating a big bass drum.

The first members of the raiding party to return to the American first line were the stretcher bearers. When all the raiders had returned, dull explosions sounded from within the enemy lines and occasionally there were bursts of flame showing their dugouts were being blown up.

Asparagus waste now furnishes a good quality of cellulose, this having been accomplished through the discovery of a German scientist.

Kaiser to Front; Bulgars And Austrians Aid Drive

London, March 23.—Emperor William, Field Marshal Von Hindenburg and General Von Ludendorff have gone to the western front to witness the German attack, says an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Copenhagen. Bulgarian and Austrian troops are now on the western front, the dispatch reports.

The Bulgarian troops which have arrived on the western front will be used as a strategic reserve, the dispatch says. The number of Austrians on this front is not large, but Austrian cannon in great amount have been concentrated there.

The Austrian war minister, Von Steiner, who is now in Berlin, is said to have promised Field Marshal Von Hindenburg that the Austrians would take over the work of guarding the eastern front when the offensive in the west began.

Berlin, March 22.—News that the big battle had begun on the west front was received here quietly today. The Austrian war minister who is in Berlin this evening is reported to have agreed the Austrians will hold the eastern front and at the same time supply guns and ammunitions and other supplies for the west front

IOWA STATE NEWS.

PASSES FOR STOCKMEN MAY BE CUT OUT

Des Moines, Ia., March 23. The old time railroad pass for the shipper of stock is likely to be done away with.

From time immemorial the man who shipped a carload of stock to Chicago or any other market has been given a round trip ticket so he could accompany the shipment to market and look after it enroute. The railroad authorities are considering the abolition of this practice.

"It will mean that stock shipments will be carried unaccompanied if the shippers are deprived of their passes," said Dwight N. Lewis, the chairman of the board of railroad commissioners. 'And that is going to increase the losses of stock on the way. When the owner accompanies his stock he keeps an eye on it and is often able to prevent animals from being injured or killed in the cars."

The matter will come up before the Interstate Commerce commission in the near future, at which time a protest against the proposed cancellation of shippers' passes will be entered by Iowa and other states from which extensive shipments of stock are made. Judge J. H. Henderson, the state commerce counsel, will appear for the Iowa shippers.

IOWA D. A. R.'s AGAINST TEACHING GERMAN

Ottumwa Ia., March 23.—The neneteenth annual conference of the Iowa society of the D. A. R. is being held here, with 75 regents, committee members and state officers in attendance.

The first action of the board of management indorsed the sending of a night letter to President Wilson asking leniency for the four sentries in France found sleeping on duty and sentenced to death.

A glowing tribute to the late Mrs. A. B. Cummins as president of the National society of the D. A. R. was read.

A resolution presented Wednesday morning by the Independent chapter of Davenport, is as follows: "As a patriotic organization we most sincerely deplore and condemn the teaching of the German language in the colleges, universities and schools of Iowa and heartily indorse the attitude of our council of national defense in their position on this subject. Further we ask action be taken that such instruction immediately cease."

BANK EMPLOYE SHOOTS SELF; CAUSE A MYSTERY

Iowa City, Ia., March 23.—Victor C. Carr ended his life by shooting himself through the head with a pistol at the Wellman Savings bank, of Wellman, where he had for many years been a trusted employe, having risen to the position of assistant cashier.

Carr was in his usual good spirits when he came to work and about noon left his work and went to the basement of the bank, where a moment later his co-workers heard a shot and on investigation found him unconscious. He lived an hour, but never spoke.

Carr was single and was not known to have any bad habits. No cause has been found for his act. He was 31 years old.

GASOLINE SUBSTITUTE TESTED BY SCIENTISTS

New York, March 20.—The substitute for gasoline, an invention by Louis Clement, propelled a motor vehicle when put to a test here today in the presence of Assistant District Attorney Renaud and several scientists from Columbia and the College of the City of New York.

Chemists who witnessed the mixing of the fluid expressed the opinion, however, that it would cost "much more than 2½ cents or even 8 cents, the minimum and maximum costs claimed by the inventor. Professor William J. Gies, of Columbia university, asserted that "of the 20 ingredients used by Clement at least 18 of them cost more than gasoline."

DELIVERY OF WHEAT IS DECIDEDLY POOR

Washington, D. C., March 20.—Grain movements to western primary markets in the last five weeks have been 40 per cent higher than in the same period last year, mainly because of heavy corn offerings, but deliveries of wheat have been less than one-third of last year, and in the past three weeks have been decreasing.

A railroad administration report disclosed this today without offering explanation of the low wheat movement.

"My kidneys gave out during the hange of life," says Mrs Margaretha Schmitt, 63 Alabama Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y "My back ached and pained s if it were broken. When I moved in ed, sharp, darting pains caught me across my back and I couldn't turn. Mornings I was stiff and sore and it felt as if heavy weights were tied to me, I was so worn-out. I often came near falling from dizziness and flashes of fire would come before my eyes, blinding me.

Mrs. Schmitt

"I had the most severe headaches and my kidneys didn't act regularly. The secretions passed too often and caused much distress. I was hardly able to do my housework and just to walk upstairs took all my strength.

"As soon as I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills, I improved and six boxes put me in better health than I had enjoyed for years."

Mrs. Schmitt gave the foregoing statement in 1916 and on April 6, 1917, she said: "My cure has been permanent. I keep Doan's on hand, however, and take a few doses occasionally."

BRITISH COUNTER ATTACKS STOP AND DRIVE BACK HUN ARMY WITH SEVERE LOSSES

Germans Fail Miserably in First Attempt to Break Haig's Line, Though 285,000 Troops Were Hurled Into Fray After Furious Bombardment.

ALL INDICATIONS ARE BIG DRIVE HAS BEGUN

Operations Are Being Conducted on Such Vast Scale That Teutons' Objective Is Not Yet Certain—Tommies Stop Charges in Hand to Hand Battle

By Associated Press.

The first stage of the great German offensive on the western front has passed and it is to be scored as a German failure, the enemy having fallen short of realizing his aims in the first great smash, according to dispatches from British headquarters today.

After attacking all day yesterday and until a late hour last night the Germans let down in their smashing operations along 50 miles of the British front and had not resumed their heavy assaults at the latest advices from Sir Douglas Haig. Further hard fighting was ahead, however, the field marshal acknowledged The military was still being held in the British battle positions he reported, which means that the British line is still intact although admittedly it has been bent backward at points under the terrific Teutonic assault. The battle line has not moved in only one direction, however, the British having struck back spiritedly at the German masses and regained some of the positions which they had temporarily abandoned.

The German official statement issued today reports that the British positions were attacked from a point southeast of Arras to La Fere, the British first lines being captured The dispatch from British headquarters purposely omit giving the exact position of the British line at present for the stated reason that the enemy might be given valuable information if the line were accurately traced

Desperate fighting continues all along the lines from the Sensee to the Oise and especially on the Cambrai sector. Enemy efforts before Cambrai were aimed principally to the north and south of the salient left after the first fighting ceased there last November with the evident purpose of cutting off the salient and driving through the opening toward the old battle field of the Somme.

Has Vast Possibilities.

Germany's latest offensive finds both sides prepared for the shock of prolonged and sanguinary combat For months the Germans have been training troops and moving up guns and supplies behind their lines between Arras and St. Quentin. The British also have been active and were prepared for any blow the enemy might deliver

Behind the British lines is the devastated area over which the Germans retreated last March. Field Marshal Von Hindenburg declared at the time that the devastation was carried out, not only to hamper the allied armies, but to provide a battle field for the future The German attack may only be a feint, but a large breach in the British lines might involve the safety of Paris and Amiens and the French channel ports from the mouth of the Seine to Belgium

German artillery fire also has been intense in a lengthy front north of the La Bassee canal and in the Ypres sector in Flanders. On the French front the Germans have carried out minor attacks northeast of Verdun and in Lorraine French troops repulsed both attempts with loss.

Hun Force of 285,000 Is Checked With Heavy Loss

By United Press.

With the British Armies in the Field, March 23 British troops this afternoon are holding the Germans everywhere and driving them back in places, latest reports indicate

The enemy has not reached a single one of his objectives, according to a captured man

The British counter attacked last night with tanks and again early today and threw the Germans out of Doignies, which the British still held at noon. The Germans have not used tanks on this front so far

The German artillery operated in the open and under the densest conditions German prisoners declared that batteries suffered terribly

As this is called Hindenburg's drive is apparently checked, with small gains The situation has quieted down at least momentarily save in the region of Bongville, where heavy shelling continues

The enemy attacked in tremendous strength yesterday At least 19 divisions, approximately 285,000 men having been identified By noon they had succeeded in penetrating British first and second defense systems on a short frontage At noon the Germans attacked heavily northwest of Croiselles, but machine guns mowed them down and held up the attack The weather continues foggy or hazy making it hard for the air men to be of any great amount of assistance

The weather is cold and bleak. A heavy mist makes air reconnaissances impossible This is of advantage to the British as the enemy is deprived of greatly needed aerial observation

The Germans in many sections yesterday attacked in three waves of infantry followed up by tank troops. As a result they suffered very heavy casualties

The heavily massed German artillery has been badly hammered by the British guns

19 DIVISIONS ENGAGED.

London, March 23 —Nineteen divisions were identified in yesterday fighting Reuter's correspondent at British headquarters wires He adds

The whole thing is too big to be able even to sketch or visualize easily Thus far the enemy has paid a colossal price for such small gains as represent the fruits of his mighty effort

Tommies Engage Germans In Hand to Hand Battle

By United Press.

With the British Armies in France, March 22 (1 12 a. m.)—British troops with their customa coolness bobbed up after the German barrage of gas shells and high explosives at the start of the big enemy attack and made their first rush wearing gas masks As this is being written bitter hand to hand encounters are in progress at various points.

British soldiers occupying front line positions at many points fought with knives and bayonets and frequently with their fists.

It looks as though Hindenburg has launched his long heralded offensive If this is a fact it has come according to specifications.

Officers and men are smiling confidently as I cable this. The situation is necessarily vague. When fighting begins on such a wide front a few hours are required to watch developments. What at times may appear a hurricane may be a feint and again what has appeared to be a feint may be a serious drive.

The Germans hurled their storm troops against the British flank following a brief bombardment on a 45-mile front. They came on in thick waves behind a barrage of smoke.

British artillery and machine guns cut great swaths in the enemy ranks. High velocity guns of the enemy have commenced shelling towns far in the rear of the battle lines.

OBJECTIVE NOT CLEAR.

London, March 22.—It is not yet possible to give more than a very general and vague idea of the fighting Thursday on the front on the Oise and the Sensee, which continues with swaying fortunes, according to the accounts of correspondents at the British front in the morning newspapers.

The German attack made on the British front west and southwest of Cambrai evidently aims at recapturing all the Hindenburg line, says a dispatch to the Morning Post from British headquarters in France which adds:

"The German army attacking south of the Scarpe seems to have delivered its first blow principally in the triangle of the Arras-Cambrai and Bapaume-Cambrai roads, while the German army south of Cambrai is striking against our trench system in the region west of the Scheldt canal. No doubt the enemy hopes that the attacking forces of these two armies may succeed in forming a junction and thus cutting off a considerable slice of the British front and taking back all the Hindenburg trenches lost exactly four months ago."

Struggles for villages and ruined farm houses continued throughout Thursday, according to the correspondent of the Daily Mail.

"The enemy's bombardment," he says, "began at 5 o'clock in the morning and at 7 o'clock some of the German units left their trenches and attacked the British with heavy and light machine guns. Between 9 and 10 the engagement became general on a front of some 25 miles.

Try to Take Salient.

"The right of the German attack was aimed at Croisilles, Bullecourt and Lagnicourt and there was hard fighting in a brick field near the first of these villages. Along the Bapaume-Cambrai road the enemy also attacked and then towards Gouzeaucourt, while his left wing was pushed in the direction of Ronssoy and Hargicourt.

"The British front in the area of attack forms a rather sharp salient. If the enemy could pinch off this salient and run his line straight in a northwesterly slant instead of having it run at an angle first north and then west, he would be able to hold it with fewer troops. Also in pinching it off he would hope to surround and capture a good number of British troops. These, it seems plain are his aims in the first stage of the offensive.

"The enemy is trying to repeat on a larger scale the operation by which he won back some of the ground we gained in the battle of Cambrai. Then he pushed in on an angle of our front both from the north and the east. His two bodies of troops did their best to join hands, but could not make it, though they had at first considerable success. Much the same design is being followed now. We have good reason to hope that it will be checked as was the previous one."

WOUNDED BEGIN TO ARRIVE.

London, March 23.—Long lines of ambulances began forming at the Charing Cross railway station early this morning to receive wounded men from channel port trains

Scenes not unlike those during the arrivals from the front battle of the Somme were enacted, the line of ambulances stretching away from the station for four city blocks.

Only small groups of night workers and railroad employes greeted the first

GUNS HEARD IN ENGLAND.

London March 23 The eagerly awaited British official statement of today which was expected to give further details of the tremendous fighting indicated in last night's reports, was read with great satisfaction, in so far as it revealed that the enemy had been held and had suffered great losses.

If this turns up to be the great German offensive that has been predicted the preliminary round appears to have gone in favor of the entente, although as the official report points out further heavy fighting is still to be expected

The tremendous artillery duel was heard more distinctly than ever in Kent last night. Houses were continually shaken as the result of the violent concussions

GERMAN OFFICIAL.

Berlin, March 23.— British Admiralty per Wireless Press.— The British first line has been captured by German troops attacking from the southeast of Arras as far as La Fere, the war office announces.

Heavy artillery fighting continues in Belgium and French Flanders Reconnoitering detachments are said to have penetrated the opposing lines at many points. Ostend was bombarded from the sea.

The statement reads

"From southeast of Arras as far as Le Fere we attacked the British positions. After powerful fire by our artillery and mine throwers, our infantry stormed, in broad sectors and every where captured the first enemy line

"Between La Fere and Soissons, on both sides of Rheims and in the champagne the firing duel increased in intensity Storming detachments brought in prisoners in many sectors.

"Ostend had been bombarded from the sea.

In Belgium and French Flanders the heavy artillery duel continued. Reconnoitering detachments penetrated on many occasions into the enemy lines.

"Our artillery continued the destruction of enemy infantry positions and batteries before Verdun. On the Lorraine front also, the artillery activity increased on many occasions

"From the other theaters of war there is nothing new to report."

OFFICIAL BRITISH REPORT.

Berlin, March 23.—The great battle on the western front continued until last night, the war office reports. The British are holding the enemy.

The statement follows:

"Fighting continued until a late hour last night on the whole front, between the river Oise and the river Sensee. Our troops continue to hold the enemy in the battle positions.

"During the enemy's attacks yesterday his massed infantry offered remarkable targets to our rifles, machine guns and artillery, of of which full advantage was taken by our troops. All the reports testify to the excessively heavy losses suffered by the enemy

"No serious attacks has yet developed this morning, but heavy fighting is to be expected."

TOTAL OF 16 DEATHS RESULT FROM CRASH

Dozen More U. S. Sailors Die From Injuries Received in Collision.

Washington, D. C., March 22—Twelve additional deaths as a result of the collision between the destroyer Manley and a British man of war, March 19, were announced today by the navy department.

This brought the death list to 16. John C. Holmes, carpenter's mate, of Boston, Mass., was one of the 12 men reported killed today. The names of the 11 others have not been received. It was announced also that 10 men not reported yesterday also were injured. All of these hurt were reported doing well.

In addition to those previously reported, the following injured have been landed and sent to the hospital:

William A. Johnston, ship's cook, 86 East Seventh street, North Portland, Ore.

Kirk W. Morse, chief gunner's mate, 1011 Third street, Snohomish, Wash.

GERMANS THREATENING.

London, March 23.—Dispatches from The Hague report that a local news agency says that Germany considers her relations with Holland altered by the attitude of the Dutch government toward the entente and the United States and publishes a report that the abandonment by the Dutch government of the remaining restrictive clauses in its shipping loan terms would be regarded by Germany as cause for war.

HOW DUTCH VIEW SITUATION.

Amsterdam, (Thursday) March 21.—Commenting upon President Wilson's proclamation regarding Dutch shipping the Algemen Handelsblad says it considers that there now devolves upon the allied powers the moral duty of maintaining international traffic for states which cannot exist without it 'ontinued refusal to permit Holland to obtain grain from Argentine, it says, would be a serious matter for both parties.

The Telegraaf says it is wrong to speak of rejection of the allies' ultimatum by Holland. It asserts that the Dutch government yielded to the proposals of the allies as far as was compatible with its position as a non-belligerent and adds:

"The ultimatum was thus accepted in principle, but in such a form as to maintain Holland's rights as against America's unlimited power.

"The Dutch government thereby acted within the principles set forth by President Wilson in considering a future peace based upon right over might."

The Nieuws Van Den Dag, says it is a singular fact that both the Dutch and the allied governments seem to have little knowledge of the course of events.

DUTCH ARE AROUSED.

Amsterdam, March 23.—The text of President Wilson's proclamation regarding Dutch shipping reached Holland after the Thursday evenings newspapers had gone to press. Meanwhile a somewhat bluntly worded dispatch from Washington, speaking of the "seizure of the ships after the war trade board had been informed Holland had rejected the American ultimatum" caused an outburst of puzzled anger from virtually the whole Dutch press. It is argued that there has been no rejection by Holland of an ultimatum and that previously nothing has been heard of any ultimatum. The feelings of the Dutch to all appearances are badly hurt.

The bourse opened today with a stream of selling orders, but there was no panic.

Plans were made for seating about 1,000 delegates and two strong loyalty programs were arranged for.

The managers of both nominees are going ahead with preparations for an active campaign.

EMBARGO ON ALL BUT CARLOAD SHIPMENTS

New York, March 23.—Congestion of freight in cars and warehouses and on piers here caused the freight traffic committee of the North Atlantic states to announce today that an embargo would be placed, effective at the close of business Saturday against further receipt here of freight in less than carload lots from other parts of the country. Foodstuffs, government and railroad supplies will not be affected.

GIRLS! MAKE A BEAUTY LOTION WITH LEMONS

At the cost of a small jar of ordinary cold cream one can prepare a full quarter pint of the most wonderful lemon skin softener and complexion beautifier, by squeezing the juice of two fresh lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white. Care should be taken to strain the juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener, smoothener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any pharmacy and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands. It should naturally help to whiten, soften, freshen and bring out the roses and beauty of any skin. It is truly marvelous to smoothen rough, red hands. Adv

REWARD FOR TELLING TRUTH

Portuguese Statesman May Not Have Been Flattered, But at Least He Won One Vote.

Senor Costa, the Portuguese prime minister, in excusing himself from making a speech on the ground that he was no orator, told an amusing anecdote at a luncheon party given in his honor during his recent visit to London. It appears that when he first put up for the Portuguese national council he prefaced his opening address to the electors by alluding frankly to his lack of oratorical gifts. After he had finished a man pushed forward, grasped his hand warmly, and said:

"Senhor, I've been a lifelong opponent of yours, but at the coming election I shall vote for you."

"Thank you," said Costa, much gratified. "May I ask the particular reason for your change of views?"

"Because you are the first speaker on either side that I have heard tell the truth," was the reply. "You said when you began that you couldn't make much of a speech, and by heavens, senhor, you can't."

Really Quick Work.

An Irishman, who was a bricklayer, and who was evicted, went to America to find work. When he was passing through New York he saw some bricklayers at work, and stood looking at them While he was standing the foreman came over and said to him:

"Well, Pat, are you able to build houses as quick as this in Dublin? We start a house in the morning and the tenant is living in it in the evening."

"Well, begorra!" said Pat, "that's nothing. In Dublin we start a house in the morning, and the landlord is evicting the tenant from it in the evening."

Too Valuable.

"That prima donna didn't seem at all angry."

"How did you get that impression?" inquired the weary manager?"

IN THE SPRING

will be the great test of a life and death struggle on the Western front. In the everyday walks of life, it is the spring time that brings ill health. One of the chief reasons why the run-down man finds himself in a bad state of health in March or April, is because he has spent nearly all his hours for the past four or five months penned up within the walls of house, factory or office. It is the reason for our diminished resistance—that is, lack of out-door life, coupled with perhaps over-eating, lack of good exercise, insufficient sleep, and constipation. In other words, we keep feeding the furnace with food but do not take out the "clinkers," and our fire does not burn brightly. Always keep the liver active.

There is nothing better for health than taking an occasional mild laxative, perhaps once a week; such a one as you can get at any drug store, made up of May-apple, jalap, aloes, (sugar-coated, tiny, easily taken), which has stood the test of fifty years of approval—namely, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. But for the "Spring Fever," the general run-down condition, the lack of ambition, the "blues," one should take a course of treatment every spring; such a standard tonic as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, now to be had in tablet form in sixty-cent vials. Watch the people go plodding along the street. There's no spring, no vitality. A vitalizing tonic such as this vegetable extract of Dr. Pierce's gives you the power to force yourself into action. The brain responds to the new blood in circulation, and thus you're ready to make a fight against stagnation which holds you in bondage. Try it now! Don't wait! Today is the day to begin. Gain a little "pep," and laugh and live. Vim and vitality are the natural out-pouring of a healthy body. It does not spring up in a night. Try this spring tonic, and you gain the courage that comes with good health.

Mr Farmer!

Dear Sir:

This letter tells you of a plan by which you can save considerable time, trouble and money.

You will be in need of repairs very soon. Perhaps you already know of some you will have to buy. Well, your order should be in our hands now. Here is the reason:

Materials are hard to get and train service is uncertain and slow at the best. The earlier you place your order the quicker it will be filled. Get busy now and overhaul your machinery. List your repair needs and bring them or mail them to us as soon as possible. Then when Spring opens you will be ready to go to work. There will be no delay or trouble and you will be money ahead.

Yours truly,

The troublous times foretold in the Word are upon us. "Men's hearts quake for fear," and on many rest a fear of what the morrow may bring forth. The world is putting it's ear to the ground trying to catch the flying message of what will happen next. Scarcely anything of an earthly character seems secure. Rapid changes follow one after the other and the whole world is like a great seething sea of agitation and distress. Perplexed hearts question, "What means this?" And we answer in the words of the prophet Jeremiah, "The Lord hath a controversy with the nations," for they have forgotten Him and have turned aside to following their own ways and doing their own pleasure.

Look up, dear reader, God still lives, and the stars and stripes will wave over "The Land of the Free, and the Home of the Brave." Eighteen hundred years ago Jesus burst the tomb and conquered death, hell, and the grave, and if we go forth in the strength of Jehovah we shall see the lines of battle broken, and Democracy rising head and shoulders above Prussianism and Militarism, to bless the nations of earth. We must, we will, we are going to win the war.

Set your time pieces ahead one hour before you retire Saturday night and come to church Sunday morning at 10:45 o'clock by your clock. We are having the service early so that we may have time for a short Easter sermon, and then for the baptismal and reception of members service. At 12 o'clock the Easter program will begin.

Next Sunday is in the Iowa State Wide Ingathering and Enlisting Campaign, "Forward-Step-Day." (Confession or Decision Day). Attendance last Sunday 163, offering $5.45. We expect a larger attendance next Sunday, and hope that all will bring a good Easter offering for Missions. Next Sunday ends the campaign so far as the program is concerned, but not so far as we are concerned. Let each one be just as enthusiastic for each Sunday as you have been through March. You have done brave work. To all of the new comers we extend a hearty invitation for your presence each Sunday.

Epworth League at 7:30 o'clock p. m. by the clock. Topic—Lessons from the Risen Christ's Forty Days, (Easter). Leader—Miss Manilla Carlson.

Preaching service at 8:00 o'clock Dr. Clegg will preach in the evening and administer the Lord's Supper. Do not miss this service. We are thinking of having services regular each Sunday evening after Easter as a goodly number of our people are asking for the regular evening service This will be announced later.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will meet at the home of Mrs. Henry Yahnke Thursday afternoon, April 4th.

Prayermeeting on each Thursday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

NEW EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN

British Government's Experience With Female Help Reported to Be Highly Satisfactory.

It is now incumbent upon us to see how far we can substitute the labor of women for that of men. Before the war it would doubtless have been urged that the private interest of employers had already introduced women's labor wherever this would pay. We have now learned, says the New Republic, that mere inertia is an important determinant of industrial arrangements. The British government is employing women where it formerly employed only men, and with results that are satisfactory from a financial point of view, as well as from the more essential point of view of economy of national resources.

At Woolwich arsenal, for example, only 125 out of the 10,866 persons employed in August, 1914, were women. According to the latest available reports, 25,000 out of 73,500 now employed are women. Women make up over 60 per cent of the personnel of the department of design and inspection. In private industry women have found their way into numberless employments formerly monopolized by men.

In this movement toward the employment of women the private interest of the employer has been re-enforced by patriotic considerations. Doubtless in many instances women are employed where it would be more profitable to employ men, even at scarcity wages. But in time of war such a consideration is of no determining importance.

To Be Remembered.

Frugality is good, if liberality be joined with it. The first is leaving off superfluous expenses; the last bestowing them to the benefit of others that need. The first without the last begins covetousness; the last without the first begins prodigality; both together make an excellent temper.—William Penn.

Save in Clothes as Well as Food

Helping to win the war

"Every little bit helps" is a common enough saying, but it's a true one too. You're probably doing your share of the helping, whatever your share happens to be.

We're doing ours by selling good clothes and nothing else; all-wool, stylish clothes that wear well and keep their shape.

New Clothes? Get Them for Easter

If you need new clothes, now is the time to get them. Most everybody likes to wear their new things at Easter time.

There's one thing you should be certain of this Easter--whatever you buy, be sure it's good. That's the way to save labor, material and money. The clothes we sell help you do it.

Hart Schaffner & Marx make them. They're here; new Military styles for young men; smart looking overcoats; dignified business suits in blues, browns, greens, chevoits flannels, worsted, cassimeres, serges.

Sky Splitter.

Marcy, the highest mountain in the Empire state, was named in honor of Gov. William L. Marcy. Its Indian name is "Tahawas" (he splits the sky).

Millions in Sunken Ships.

There are fortunes lying under the sea in the holds of torpedoed ships, and many minds are busy on the problem of recovering this wealth, according to a British exchange.

"Salvage companies are laying plans for raising both ships and cargoes on a big scale," said R. H. Davis, managing director of Siebe, Gorman & Co., submarine engineers. "Cargoes to the value of millions of pounds are awaiting recovery.

"In many cases, where ships cannot be raised, cargoes can be salved. We recovered £70,000 in Spanish gold coins some years ago from the Alphonso XII., 165 feet under the sea, off Point Gando, Grand Canary."

Electric Toasting.

To those who have frequently burned their fingers while turning over the toast on their electric toaster, a toaster now on the market will prove an interesting improvement.

By turning the knob near the bottom, the frame holding the slice of bread to the heater coil is thrown outward, while wire catches at the bottom trip the toast so that it slides along the frame, browned side down. On turning the knob back again, the toast is raised to a vertical position with the fresh side toward the heater. By this ingenious arrangement it is not necessary to touch the toast with the fingers until it is ready for buttering.

Baking Coarse Breads.

Bread made with any of the coarser flours needs more baking powder than white flour bread. Coarse flour yeast breads must not rise as long as ordinary white bread and they must be baked longer.

In making white bread you usually let the dough rise until it is double, put it into pans and let it rise until double the second time before baking. In the oven it should not rise more than an inch. But coarse breads should rise less in the pans, more in the oven and should bake nearly half an hour longer than the ordinary white flour—that is, for larger loaves.

Precious Fuel.

A prominent Omaha citizen was walking down the street in an uncertain way, holding a handkerchief to his face. A friend accosted him and demanded to know what the trouble might be.

"I've something in my eye," exclaimed the sufferer, "and it hurts like the dickens."

"Why don't you step into the drug store and have the clerk take it out?" snorted his friend.

"I'm afraid to," replied the man with the red eye. "It might be a piece of coal!"

This is thrift such as America never knew before.—Exchange.

Handles for Knives.

This is one way to make handles: Remove the wire from bundle handles (nearly all stores use them), fit the wooden portion onto the blades and they make excellent kitchen knives. They may be painted or stained if desired for table use. These are days of economy One woman has found them most satisfactory knife handles for general use.

"Bedlam."

Bedlam is another example of the English fashion of telescoping words, and comes from Bethlehem. The priory of St. Mary of Bethlehem in London was converted into a hospital for the insane in 1402 and in the course of time the name was shortened to Bellam, a word that came to be a synonym for madhouse. To open the door and let the inmates escape would be "Bedlam let loose," and frequently the phrase is used to describe intolerable clatter and racket.

"I don't know. They have been there a long time."

"Mazeroux," said M. Desmalions, "try them on that door."

Mazeroux did so. The door opened.

"Yes," said Mme. Fauville. "I remember now, my husband gave them to me. They were duplicates of his own keys——"

The words were uttered in the most natural tone and as though the speaker did not even suspect the terrible charge that was forming against her.

And nothing was more agonizing than this tranquility. Was it a sign of absolute innocence, or the infernal craft of a criminal whom nothing is able to stir? Did she realize nothing of the tragedy which was taking place and of which she was the unconscious heroine? Or did she guess the terrible accusation which was gradually closing in upon her on every side and which threatened her with the most awful danger? But, in that case, how could she have been guilty of the extraordinary blunder of keeping those two keys?

A series of questions suggested itself to the minds of all those present. The prefect of police put them as follows:

"You were out, madame, were you not, when the murders were committed?"

"Yes."

"You were at the opera?"

"Yes; and I went on to a party at the house of one of my friends, Mme. d'Ersingen."

"Did your chauffeur drive you?"

"To the opera, yes. But I sent him back to his garage; and he came to fetch me at the party."

"I see," said M. Desmalions. "But how did you go from the opera to Mme. d'Ersingen's?"

For the first time Mme. Fauville seemed to understand that she was the victim of a regular cross examination; and her look and attitude betrayed a certain uneasiness. She replied:

"I took a motor cab."

"In the street?"

"On the Place de ly'Opera."

"At 12 o'clock, therefore?"

"No, at 11:30; I left before the opera was over."

"You were in a hurry to get to your friends?"

"Yes * * * or rather——"

She stopped, her cheeks were scarlet, her lips and chin trembled, and she asked:

"Why do you ask me all these questions?"

"They are necessary, madame. They may throw a light on what we want to know. I beg you, therefore, to answer them. At what time did you reach your friend's house?"

"I hardly know. I did not notice the time."

"Did you go straight there?"

"Almost."

"How do you mean, almost?"

"I had a little headache and told the driver to go up the Champs Elysees and the Avenue du Bois — very slowly — and then down the Champs Elysees again——"

She was becoming more and more embarrassed. Her voice grew indistinct. She lowered her head and was silent.

Certainly her silence contained no confession, and there was nothing entitling any one to believe that her dejection was other than a consequence of her grief. But yet she seemed so weary as to give the impression that, feeling herself lost, she was giving up the fight. And it was almost a feeling of pity that was entertained for this woman against whom all the circumstances seemed to be conspiring, and who defended herself so badly that her cross examiner hesitated to press her yet further.

M. Desmalions, in fact, wore an irresolute air, as if the victory had been too easy, and as if he had some scruple about pursuing it.

Mechanically he observed Perenna, who passed him a slip of paper, saying:

"Mme. d'Ersingen's telephone number."

M. Desmalions murmured:

"Yes, true, they may know——"

And, taking down the receiver, he asked for number 325.04. He was connected at once and continued:

"Who is that speaking? * * * The butler? Ah! Is Mme. d'Ersingen at home? * * * No? * * * Or monsieur? * * * Not he, either? * * * Never mind, you can tell me what I want to know. I am M. Desmalions, the prefect of police, and I need certain information. At what time did Mme. Fauville come last night! * * * What do you say? * * * Are you sure? * * * At 2 o'clock in the morning? * * * Not before? * * * And she went away? * * * In 10 minutes' time? * * * Good. * * * But you're certain you are not mistaken about the time when she arrived? I must know this positively: it is most important. * * * You say it was 2 o'clock in the morning? Two o'clock in the morning? * * * Very well. * * * Thank you."

When M Desmalions turned round, he saw Mme. Fauville standing beside him and looking at him with an expression of mad anguish. And one and the same idea occurred to the mind of all the onlookers. They were in the presence either of an absolutely innocent woman or else of an exceptional actress whose face lent itself to the most perfect simulation of innocence.

"What do you want?" she stammered. "What does this mean? Explain yourself!"

Then M Desmalions asked simply:

"What were you doing last night between 11:30 in the evening and 2 o'clock in the morning?"

It was a terrifying question at the stage which the examination had reached, a fatal question implying:

"If you cannot give us an exact and strict account of the way in which you employed your time while the crime was being committed, we have the right to conclude that you were not alien to the murder of your husband and stepson——"

She understood it in this sense and staggered on her feet, moaning:

"It's horrible! * * * horrible!"

The prefect repeated:

"What were you doing? The question must be quite easy to answer."

"Oh," she cried, in the same piteous tone, "how can you believe! * * * Oh, no, no, it's not possible! How can you believe!"

"I believe nothing yet," he said. "Besides, you can establish the truth with a single word."

It seemed, from the movement of her lips and the sudden gesture of resolution that shook her frame, as though she were about to speak that word. But all at once she appeared stupefied and dumfounded, pronounced a few unintelligible syllables, and fell huddled into a chair, sobbing convulsively and uttering cries of despair.

It was tantamount to a confession. At the very least, it was a confession of her inability to supply the plausible explanation which would have put an end to the discussion.

The prefect of police moved away from her and spoke in a low voice to the examining magistrate and the public prosecutor. Perenna and Sergeant Mazeroux were left alone together, side by side.

Mazeroux whispered:

"What did I tell you? I know you would find out! Oh, what a man you are! The way you managed!"

He was beaming at the thought that the chief was clear of the matter and that he had no more crows to pluck with his, Mazeroux's, superiors, whom he revered almost as much as he did the chief. Everybody was now agreed; they were "friends all round;" and Mazeroux was choking with delight.

"They'll lock her up, eh?"

"No," said Perenna. "There's not enough 'hold' on her for them to issue a warrant."

"What!" growled Mazeroux indignantly. "Not enough hold? I hope, in any case, that you won't let her go. She made no bones, you know, about attacking you! Come, chief, polish her off, a she devil like that!"

Don Luis remained pensive. He was thinking of the unheard of coincidences, the accumulation of facts that bore down on Mme. Fauville from every side. And the decisive proof which would join all these different facts together and give to the accusation the grounds which it still lacked was one which Perenna was able to supply. This was the marks of the teeth in the apple hidden among the shrubs in the garden. To the police these would be as good as any finger-print, all the more as they could compare the marks with those on the cake of chocolate.

Nevertheless, he hesitated; and, concentrating his anxious attention, he watched, with mingled feelings of pity and repulsion, that woman who, to all seeming, had killed her husband and her husband's son. Was he to give her the finishing stroke? Had he the right to play the part of judge? And supposing he were wrong?

Meantime, M. Desmalions had walked up to him and, while pretending to speak to Mazeroux, was really asking Perenna:

"What do you think of it?"

Mazeroux shook his head. Perenna replied:

"I think, Monsieur le Prefet, that, if this woman is guilty, she is defending herself, for all her cleverness, with inconceivable lack of skill."

"Meaning——?"

"Meaning that she was doubtless only a tool in the hands of an accomplice."

"An accomplice?"

"Remember, Monsieur le Prefet, her husband's exclamation in your office yesterday: 'Oh, the scoundrels! the scoundrels!' There is, therefore, at least one accomplice, who perhaps is the same as the man who was present, as Sergeant Mazeroux must have told you, in the Cafe du Pont-Neuf when Inspector Verot was last there: a man with a reddish brown beard, carrying an ebony walking stick with a silver handle. So that—"

"So that," said M. Desmalions, completing the sentence, "by arresting Mme. Fauville today, merely on suspicion, we have a chance of laying our hands on the accomplice."

Perenna did not reply. The prefect continued, thoughtfully:

"Arrest her * * * arrest her * * * We should need a proof for that. * * * Did you receive no clue?"

"None at all, Monsieur le Prefet. True, my search was only summary."

"But ours was most minute. We have been through every corner of the room."

"And the garden, Monsieur le Prefet?"

"The garden also."

"With the same care?"

"Perhaps not. * * * But I think——"

"I think, on the contrary, Monsieur le Prefet, that, as the murderers passed through the garden in coming and going, there might be a chance——"

"Mazeroux," said M. Desmalions, "go outside and make a more thorough inspection."

The sergeant went out. Perenna, who was once more standing at one side, heard the prefect of police repeating to the examining magistrate:

"Ah, if we only had a proof, just one! The woman is evidently guilty. The presumption against her is too great! * * * And then there are Cosmo Mornington's millions. * * * But, on the other hand, look at her * * * look at all the honesty in that pretty face of hers, look at all the sincerity of her grief."

She was still crying, with fitful sobs and starts of indignant protest that made her clench her fists. At one moment she took her ear soaked handkerchief, bit it with her teeth and tore it, after the manner of certain actresses.

Perenna saw those beautiful white teeth, a little wide, moist and gleaming, rending the dainty cambric. And he thought of the marks of teeth on the apple. And he was seized with an extreme longing to know the truth. Was it the same pair of jaws that had left its impress in the pulp of the fruit?

Mazeroux returned. M. Desmalions moved briskly toward the sergeant, who showed him the apple which he had found under the ivy. And Perenna at once realized the supreme importance which the prefect of police attached to Mazeroux's explanations and to his unexpected discovery.

A conversation of some length took place between the magistrates and ended in the decision which Don Luis foresaw. M. Desmalions walked across the room to Mme. Fauville. It was the catastrophe. He reflected for a second on the manner in which he should open this final contest, and then he asked:

"Are you still unable, madame, to tell us how you employed your time last night?"

She made an effort and whispered:

"Yes, yes. * * * I took a taxi and drove about. * * * I also walked a little——"

"That is a fact which we can easily verify when we have found the driver of the taxi. Meanwhile, there is an opportunity of removing the somewhat * * * grievous impression which your silence has left on our minds."

"I am quite ready——"

"It is this: the person or one of the persons who took part in the crime appears to have bitten into an apple which was afterward thrown away in the garden and which has just been found. To put an end to any suppositions concerning yourself, we should like you to perform the same action."

"Oh, certainly!" she cried, eagerly. "If this is all you need to convince you——"

She took one of the three apples which Desmalions handed her from the dish and lifted it to her mouth.

It was a decisive act. If the two marks resembled each other, the proof existed, assured and undeniable.

Before completing her movement, she stopped short, as though seized with a sudden fear. * * * Fear of what? Fear of the monstrous chance that might be her undoing? Or fear rather of the dread weapon which she was about to deliver against herself? In any case nothing accused her with greater directness than this last hesitation, which was incomprehensible, if she was innocent, but clear as day if she was guilty!

"What are you afraid of, madame?" asked M. Desmalions.

"Nothing, nothing," she said, shuddering. "I don't know. * * * I am afraid of everything * * * It is all so horrible——"

"But, madame, I assure you that what we are asking of you has no sort of importance and, I am persuaded, can only have a fortunate result for you. If you don't mind, therefore——"

She raised her hand higher and yet higher, with a slowness that betrayed her uneasiness. And really, in the fashion in which things were happening, the scene was marked by a certain solemnity and tragedy that wrung every heart.

"And, if I refuse?" she asked, sudenly.

"You are absolutely entitled to refuse," said the prefect of police "But is it worth while, madame? I am sure that your counsel would be the first to advise you——"

"My counsel?" she stammered, understanding the formidable meaning conveyed by that reply.

And, suddenly, with a fierce resolve and the almost ferocious air that contorts the face when great dangers threaten, she made the movement which they were pressing her to make. She opened her mouth. They saw the bleam of the white teeth. At one bite, the white teeth dug into the fruit.

"There you are, monsieur," she said.

M. Desmalions turned to the examining magistrate.

"Have you the apple found in the garden?"

"Here, Monsieur le Prefet."

M. Desmalions put the two apples side by side.

And those who crowded round him, anxiously looking on, all uttered one exclamation.

The two marks of teeth were identical.

Identical! Certainly, before declaring the identity of every detail, the absolute analogy of the marks of each tooth, they must wait for the results of the expert's report. But there was one thing which there was no mistaking and that was the complete similiarity of the two curves.

In either fruit the rounded arch was bent according to the same inflection. The two semicircles could have fitted one into the other, both very narrow, both a little long shaped and oval and of a restricted radius which was the very character of the jaw.

The men did not speak a word. M. Desmalions raised his head. Mme. Fauville did not move, stood livid and mad with terror. But all the sentiments of terror, stupor and indignation that she might simulate with her mobile face and her immense gifts as an actress did not prevail against the compelling proof that presented itself to every eye.

The two imprints were identical! The same teeth had bitten into both apples!

"Madame——" the prefect of police began.

"No, no," she cried, seized with a fit of fury, "no, it's not true * * * This is all just a nightmare. * * * No, you are never going to arrest me? I in prison! Why, it's horrible! * * * What have I done? Oh, I swear that you are mistaken——"

To The American People

There is no foundation for the alleged violations of law attributed to our Company by agents of the Federal Trade Commission and I want to say emphatically that Swift & Company is not a party to any conspiracy to defraud the Government. Nor has Swift & Company been guilty of improperly storing foods or of making false entries or reports.

Conferences of packers, where prices have been discussed, have been held at the urgent request and in the presence of representatives of either the Food Administration or the Council of National Defense. And yet the packers have been accused of committing a felony by acting in collusion on Government bids!

We have done our best, with other packers, large and small, to comply with the directions of the United States Food Administration in all particulars, including the furnishing of food supplies for the U. S. Army and Navy and the Allies, now being handled through the Food Administration.

We will continue to do our utmost, under Government direction, to increase our production and assist the Food Administration. We consider that the opportunity to co-operate whole-heartedly and to our fullest powers with this branch of the Government is our plain and most pressing duty.

The Trade Commission Attorney has, by false inference and misplaced emphasis, given to disconnected portions of the correspondence taken from our private files and read into the Record, a false and sinister meaning with the plain purpose of creating antagonistic public opinion.

The services of the packers of the United States are most urgently needed, and I regret exceedingly that we should at this time have to spend our efforts in defending ourselves against unfounded, unproved, and unfair assertions such as are being daily made public.

OVER one hundred million people in the United States must be clothed as well as fed. Many other millions in the allied nations must be furnished clothing. Our soldiers and sailors as well as those of our allies must be kept warm.

We need more wool. We must have more sheep. This appeal comes direct from our government.

There are several reasons for our shortage of sheep, but the main reason is the dog nuisance.

In 36 states approximately 108,000 sheep are killed every year by dogs. In these states U. S. crop correspondents report the production of sheep would increase 150 per cent were it not that farmers are discouraged by the killing of sheep by dogs.

This means that the dog nuisance causes an annual decrease of twenty-one million head of sheep that would otherwise be raised.

Out of 5,000 farmers in all parts of the United States all but 18 gave dogs as the main reason for the scarcity of sheep.

The dog is a carrier of hog cholera, stomach and tape worms, lice, ticks, fleas, rabies, and foot and mouth disease.

(Courtesy National Stockman)

He brings contagious diseases home to the family.

He runs at large, practically unrestrained.

The laws enacted to govern him are not enforced.

He is given more freedom than sheep, hogs, horses, and cattle.

He is the only animal that runs at will over other people's fields, yards, sheep folds, and feed lots.

Any one has a right to own a dog, but no one has a right to maintain a nuisance.

The dog owner should be compelled to keep his dog at home or under his control at all times.

The dog owner, not the sheep owner, should be compelled to build a dog-proof fence. The fence that will keep dogs out will keep dogs in.

Dog chains and muzzles are inexpensive. The use of both can be compelled by law. High license, if enforced, will help eradicate the useless dog.

Men have been financially ruined by sheep-killing dogs. Sheep raising in long-settled communities has been discontinued and kept out of new communities because of sheep-killing dogs.

When we let our dogs run at large to destroy the food and clothing needed by ourselves and our neighbors, we are not doing our duty to the community and the nation.

Co-operate in War Emergency

People at Home Should Organize and Work Together

By P. G. HOLDEN

IN ANY endeavor of a public nature there should be a working-together spirit—the entire community should be represented. This is particularly true in any movement for the production and conservation of food.

There is no large city and not many small towns but what have a Chamber of Commerce or Commercial Club, and these organizations can do much to bring about the co-operation of all interests of the community.

But the Commercial Club that hopes to make a success of such a movement must establish and maintain cordial and co-operative relations not only with the people of the city or town, but with the residents of the farm community in its trade territory. This can best be done by admitting farmers to membership in the club.

At Trenton, Mo., Ottawa, Kan., and a few other places, the Commercial Club is composed about equally of town people and rural residents, and splendid work has been accomplished.

This makes it possible for business men to meet other business men, for farmers to meet other farmers and for business men and farmers to meet each other and discuss problems of common interest to all—to plan campaigns and co-operative work which never could be accomplished without the joint efforts of both town and country.

What Can Be Done.

Such an organization can successfully conduct important movements for the good of the community, the state and the nation.

Here are some suggestions:

Food conservation by canning, drying and storing.
Organization of calf, pig, corn, poultry and sheep clubs.
Home and vacant lot gardening campaigns.
Campaigns to eradicate hog cholera.
Securing of a county agent or farm advisor.
Building of better roads.
Improvement of dairy herds by means of cow testing associations.
Encouraging sheep raising by getting rid of the dog menace.
Proper harvesting, selection, testing and storing of seed corn.
Treating of oats for smut.
Diversified farming and crop rotation.
Growing of alfalfa, sweet clover and other legumes.
Home ownership for every family.
Better schools and more practical education.

Sing to Settle Quarrels.

From the Portsmouth Chronicle.

The Eskimos, who live in the icebound, barren northland, have a way of settling quarrels which seems very strange and amusing to those who live in a land off policemen and court of justice. There, when quarrels arise, the man who has a grievance writes a song in which he tells the wrongs that have been done him. When this has been composed to his satisfaction, he invites his enemy to come and hear him sing it. This the enemy must do, and he brings with him all his relatives and many of his friends, while the singer also has gathered his friends and relatives for the occasion, which is considered something of a general entertainment by the people of the village in which the men live.

Then, while other men of the village pound madly on huge drums, the song of wrongs is begun. When it is finished, if the audience expresses approval, the singer is considered to have won and to have a just cause of complaint. But if dissatisfaction is expressed, that is considered sufficient punishment. After the song every one dances and the party breaks up in great good humor.

Burn a Newspaper Log.

From the Popular Scienc Monthly.

The only virtue no one has ever denied a newspaper, is that it burns well. But as fuel as well as in news, it has always been short lived. Hence the newspaper log! It burns from three-quarters of an hour to an hour and a half in any fireplace or stove.

Spread five sheets of newspaper, folded once, on a table, with the folded ends toward you. Begin to roll them into a tight roll. Before the first section is completely rolled, insert another section, and continue until the "log" is from two to three inches in diameter. Saturate each roll thoroughly with kerosene.

Mrs. Brown—And what did you say to him?

Mr. Brown—I asked him what he was running for.

WHY MR. LOTT DIDN'T ENLIST

Explanation Afforded by Street-Car Conductor at Least Caused Him to "Get a Move On."

Joshua Lott sometimes lives up to his name, but there is a conductor on the Prospect line who should be named Josh Moore. Notwithstanding the conductor's urging to "step up in front," Lott clings to a place on the rear platform when he can in order to be able to squeeze off at McGee street with insult and injury to fewer other passengers. This morning Lott was brightening up the corner where he was with some remarks about the service when the conductor horned right in.

"Say," he said, "I've often looked at you and wondered why you didn't enlist. But I know now."

"How's that?" asked Lott, helpfully.

"Because you're so all-fired scared of getting up to the front," said the conductor.

Just then the 60-passenger stopped at a transfer point to let about eighty more get on, and Lott was the first to start struggling toward the front to make room for them.—Kansas City Star.

4 CUPS OF WHEAT FLOUR TO THE POUND

If each family used 4 cups of flour less per week, the saving would be 22 million pounds or 112,244 barrels every week.

The greatest help housekeepers can give to win the war is to make this saving and it can be done by using this recipe in place of white flour bread.

Corn Meal Biscuits

¾ cup scalded milk
1 cup corn meal
2 tablespoons shortening
¾ teaspoon salt
1 cup white flour
4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder

Save ¼ cup of the measured flour for board. Pour milk over corn meal, add shortening and salt. When cold, add sifted flour and baking powder. Roll out lightly on floured board. Cut with biscuit cutter and bake in greased pan fifteen to twenty minutes.

GERMAN M. E. CHURCH

A. H. Meyer, Pastor

May the real Easter joy come into every home and heart of the individual and may the risen Christ be the source of power and joy in every life. It was Jesus whose orb of light followed on these dawning gleams, these fitful moments of alternating darkness and twilight. It was Jesus who made death inoperative and it was Jesus who brought forth an incorruptible life through His Gospel to satisfy the long extended agonizing of men. He who has enthroned Immortality and shown it reasonable by showing it pure and lovely and sinless in the eternal goodness of God, stands ready to meet our doubts and qualms. If you ask, why should I not sleep well after life's fitful fever, why covet so doubtful a boon, for death comes but once, and after that can do no more, since he has but one dart to fling. If you stand in suspense before the specter of an endlessness whose unnumbered ages are charged with all the terrific responsibilities of living, and knowing you can not escape that which you did not choose, you inquire, why should this be my lot? The sufficient answer is in the Gospel and it is nowhere else. Jesus meets these searching questions by absorbing mere duration in virtuous growth, eternal existence in eternal character and by creating in us those capacities for immortality which make celestial genius correspond with endless being. The love of God in you can use all the eternities as its opportunity. But before Christ entered into the shadow of the Garden, or emerged in glory from the yielding grave, He had transmitted to the heart and the conscience of the race a revelation destined to revolutionize all mortal reasoning on immortality. For He showed an astonished world the truth of divine fatherhood.

DIED

Obituary, Miss Georgie Wilson

Miss Georgie Wilson, the subject of this sketch, and daughter of Mr and Mrs George Wilson, was born in Macon County, Illinois, October 6th, 1901, and died at Titonka, Iowa, on March 26th, 1918, at the age of sixteen years, five months and twenty days

With her parents she moved from Illinois to the Bloom farm east of Klemme in March 1916, where they lived until March 1917, at which time they moved to Titonka, the place of their present residence.

Georgie was converted during a revival meeting held by the writer in the Wayside school house in December, 1916, and united with the English M. E. church, where she remained a very faithful member until their removal to Titonka. Later she transferred her membership there where she was faithful to the end, and Jesus said, "He that endureth to the end shall be saved." Matt. 10:22.

To know Georgie was to love her. She wore a smile that was not forced, neither did it fade with the rising of the clouds of life. Her pleasant and friendly disposition won for her a host of friends wherever she went. This was thoroughly demonstrated by the great company of people who attended her funeral. There were eighteen from the Wayside Community, who made the round trip of eighty miles to be present, besides the people of Titonka packed the beautiful church until they were standing around the walls. The High School dismissed and the principal and other teachers were present. Titonka is to be highly commended for the way in which her people turned out in respect to the dead, and sympathy for the bereaved family.

The body was borne to it's last resting place in the auto hearse from Algona, assisted by six young men from the High School, her school mates, with six young ladies from the same department as flower girls. We have not seen a more beautiful funeral procession in a long time.

There were four beautiful bouquets of flowers from Klemme, one given by the Wayside Sunday School, one by Wm. Bell and family, one by Gus Carlson and family, and one by the Win One Class, besides these there were many bouquets presented by classes and friends at Titonka.

Georgie leaves to mourn her loss a father, mother, four sisters and three brothers: Howard and Leafy of Klemme; Mrs. Eunice Pool of Salem, Illinois; Russell, Robert, Lurley and Glethal at home.

We cannot but weep with these weeping loved ones today, and as we stand by the bier tears flow freely, but from behind the tears of sorrow comes a flood of tears for joy as we think of our departed daughter, sister and friend over there where death can not enter, and sorrow is not known. Surely we can join with Fanny J Crosby in singing:

"Safe in the arms of Jesus, safe on his gentle breast,
There by His love o'er shaded, sweetly my love shall rest.
Hark! 'tis the voice of angels, borne in a song to me,
Over the fields of glory, over the jasper sea."

Funeral services were conducted by the writer in the M. E. church of Titonka, Thursday afternoon, assisted by the pastor who rendered very helpful service.

J. M. Howdeshell

Your Bond May Bring Him Home in Safety

The supreme tragedies of war are not enacted on the battlefield, but in the home.

Above the shouts of command and encouragement, the roar and shock of the great guns, and all the swelling tumult of battle which bear the husband and father to a hero's grave and a martyr's glory, there rise the weeping of the bereaved wife and the cries of little children deprived of a father's love and care.

American fathers are now on the battlefronts of France. Many must fall; how many depends upon us who remain safely at home.

A single Liberty Bond will help to save a soldier's life, your soldiers life, and bring him home in safety to those who hold his life far more precious than their own.

Auto Accident

Garner, Ia., April 1. While Mr. and Mrs. Diedrick, an elderly German couple, were driving home Saturday afternoon they encountered an auto mobile which frightened their horse, with the result that both were thrown from the buggy and quite severely injured. Sheriff Ross, happened along soon after the accident, took the injured couple to the office of Dr Richter, where medical attention was administered. Mrs. Deidrick suffered internal injuries.

GREAT LAKES TRAINING STATION BAND AT GARNER

Monday evening a number of Klemme people, in fact every person who had a car or a wheel-barrow, went to Garner Monday night to hear the band concert given by the Great Lakes Training Station Band of twenty-five pieces. The band was accompanied by a drill squad and officers who went through a number of maneuvers. A number of speakers gave short talks in regard to the Third Liberty Loan. The purpose of the band and drill squad was to boost the Third Liberty Loan issue. They arrived in Garner in a special train at 7:30 and are appearing at county seat towns in Iowa. They came from Mason City to Garner.

Airplane Developed by War.

When the war began the highest type of airplane could not be depended upon to do much more than 50 miles an hour. Today the speedier war planes make 120 miles an hour in long flights. Where the best machines formerly carried two men, or their equivalent in weight, the larger machines of the present will safely carry a ton or more of cargo.

THE KLEMME TIMES

In an effort to protect the salmon run and probably enhance the pack, the British Columbia authorities are reported, in advices from the Pacific coast, to be making war on the hair seals which are charged with eating immense quantities of salmon at the mouth of the Fraser river. A Vancouver report states that, after observing the haunts of the seals on the Fraser sandheads, one of these shoals was recently mined, high explosives and charges of metal being placed in cans below the surface of the sand, which the next high tide smoothed over. At low tide the seals returned to their place in the sun and were not disturbed. The next day nearly 200 seals gathered on the sands, and the explosive was touched off by a battery from which wires led to the seal ground. The explosive killed every seal, tearing the animals into small fragments. Other blasts will be set off, for this is the big sockeye salmon year and protection of the run is vital.

Lord Derby, in advising us not to get rattled," has added another word to our war vocabulary, or, at any rate, given an old word a new meaning. In this sense "rattled" is an Americanism, and we remember reading an article by W. D. Howells some 30 years ago, in which he said he was not very easily rattled. Of course we have used the word in this country with other meanings for many centuries. Even Pepys relates on one occasion how he "rattled" his wife, but that was more in the nature of grumbling, while Lord Derby evidently intends us not to get alarmed or excited which is the real American sense of the word.

If anybody thinks that the American inventive genius is missing anything, let him take a look at this list of inventions which the patent office has recently granted. An automatic hat-tipping device, a tornado-proof house, a button to curb snoring, a cornob polisher for artificial teeth, spectacles for a fighting rooster to keep his eyes from being pecked, a blind to keep chickens from flying over the fence, a noiseless alarm that arouses the sleeper by shaking him, an ingenious arrangement of cords by which the garage keeper is awakened (his bed collapses) a device to shower pepper upon the burglar.

One of the many explanations that have been offered to account for the fact that migrating birds are able to find their way by night and in cloudy or foggy weather is that they are sensitive in some way to currents of terrestrial magnetism and therefore direct their flight by the magnetic meridians. This suggestion was put forth by M. A. Ganzies, a French pigeon fancier, who declared that carrier pigeons make [illegible] the occurrence of [illegible] He also asserted that he had proved by wireless telegraphy [illegible] the reliability of the [illegible] surprising extent.

Among the Chinese of Hongkong there is a population afloat of nearly 300,000. These strange people live on the waterways in fantastic houseboats, says Eleanor Franklin Egan in the Saturday Evening Post. They are born and brought up, they marry and produce children, become grandmothers and grandfathers and die many of them without ever having lived ashore a day in their lives. Yet some of their curious floating homes a majority of them in fact are no larger than an ordinary rowboat.

Industrial chemists are constantly finding new and useful ways of disposing of byproducts. One of the latest troublesome wastes to rise to the dignity of a valuable commercial product is acetylene ash says the Popular Science monthly. This stuff, which could not be disposed of profitably a short time ago, is now worth $50 a ton. An employe of a Los Angeles plant, Frank L. Thompson, discovered that it could be used to make plaster, whitewash and a substitute for marble dust that is used in the surfacing of asphalt highways.

The making of candles is not ordinarily considered a fine art, but the Italians have made it such. The distinctively Italian votive taper is made by hand. The materials are pure beeswax which is kneaded and tempered and mixed with a secret ingredient to retard combustion, and which has special Egyptian cotton for wicks. The cotton, too, is treated with chemicals to keep it from feeding too fast. Small candles are molded. Large ones are made by rolling up sheets of wax.

A means of making use of the electric magnet under water has been devised in Japan, and it promises to be of great assistance in locating sunken vessels, to recover which salvage operations on a big scale are expected after the war. Tests on this magnet have recently resulted in bringing up thousands of Japanese shells, fired in practice at sea, and it is now understood that it will be used in extracting shell scraps from European battle fields. Maine has come to the front with a young fellow of 95 who has gone to work as a sawyer for a lumber company. Last spring he retired and went to live with a son, but a rest so improved his health that he has gone back to work at active labor, says Capper's Weekly. This husky veteran has one son, known as the baby of the family, that he is very partial to. The "baby" recently celebrated his 72nd birthday.

Tolstoy's prediction of the great war which has been devastating Europe was a remarkably accurate forecast. In conclusion he prophesied that "the end of the great calamity will make a new political era for the old world. There will be left no empires or kingdoms, but the world will form a federation of the United States of nations. There will remain only four great giants—the Anglo-Saxons, the Latins, the Slavs and the Mongolians."

FIREMEN POSTPONE THEIR TOURNAMENT

Maple Valley Association Calls Off 1918 Affair and Buys Liberty Bonds.

Odebolt, Ia., March 30.—At the mid-winter meeting of the Maple Valley Firemen's association held at Wall Lake, it was decided to postpone the annual tournament for another year on account of war conditions. The funds in the hands of the treasurer of the association were invested in three $100 Liberty bonds.

MANY FAMILIES HOLD TOO MUCH FLOUR

Sac City, Ia., March 30.—County Food Administrator Charles L. Early reports that 4,000 flour report cards have been returned to him by Sac county residents, showing that about 10 per cent of the homes in this county have amounts of flour slightly in excess of the limit set by the administration. The amount of excess ranges from one sack to about 20, the average being approximately two sacks. Mr. Early believes that the entire report will show about one carload or 1,200 sacks of excess flour in the county.

WEST WILL BENEFIT BY TRAFFIC RULES

Washington, D. C., March 30.—Iowa and the whole central west, according to officials here, are going to be benefitted by the new plans which Secretary McAdoo and Chairman Hurley of the shipping board are working out to coordinate railroads and shipping terminals. Great things are expected from quick developments of the gulf traffic. It is declared much of the traffic now sent east from the middle west will be turned to north and south lines and gulf ports and that movement of freights will be greatly expedited.

WOMAN FATALLY BURNED STARTING THE FIRE

Marshalltown, Ia., March 30.—When Mrs. J. H. Thurston, wife of a young farmer living two miles north of Legrand, went to hurry the kitchen fire with kerosene today the oil ignited, the can exploded in the woman's hands and she was fearfully burned about the arms, breast, neck and face. Mrs. Thurston was brought to a local hospital where late this afternoon it was said she could not possibly survive. The fire which spread to the kitchen, was confined to the one room and did but little damage.

Indiana, $53,770,000.
Iowa, $71,050,000.
Michigan, $75,600,000.
Wisconsin, $45,600,000.
Illinois (outside Cook county), $52,-000,000.
Chicago and Cook county, $126,180,000.

HIS POPCORN CROP WAS A VALUABLE ONE

Ida Grove, Ia., March 30.—William Hilker, jr., a young farmer residing four miles southwest of Ida Grove, hauled $9,200 worth of popcorn into the city in two days this week. This corn was of the 1917 crop, shelled and loaded into cars for shipment to Hubbard, Ia., having been purchased by a grain dealer of that city. The loads averaged him $270. The price paid Mr. Hilker was $5.10 per 100 pounds. He still has several ton of corn left.

MUCH WHEAT IS BEING SOWN IN IDA COUNTY

Ida Grove, Ia., March 30.—Farmers in Ida county are generally complying with the government's orders to sow wheat and the average will be about 10 acres for those who have sown, and it is practically all in the ground. There is no shortage of seed corn, many farmers still having cribs of the 1916 crop, and they are selling it to their less fortunate neighbors at reasonable prices.

FIRST WOMAN TO TAKE ON FARM MANAGEMENT

Waverly, Ia., March 29.—Miss Catherine Belton, of State Agricultural college, has been chosen to succeed A. L. Persinger, of Onawa, Ia., who has resigned to take up farming. Miss Belton has the honor of being the first woman cow tester in Iowa. She will have one of the best test associations in the state to supervise, it being located in Bremer county, which produces more butter per square mile than any other section of country that size in the world.

ALTA—Guy Roberts, of Marathon, has entered the race for representative from Buena Vista county, making the second candidate in the field, with prospects of another within a week.

Porter, of Centerville, United States district attorney, has been asked to accept the gubernatorial nomination.

EMPLOYMENT BUREAUS ARE ACTIVE IN IOWA

Washington, D. C., March 30.—The United States employment service in statement today commended the progress in Iowa. It said that a few weeks ago the employment service had not one branch in Iowa. In Des Moines today it has eight. Seven new branches having just been established at Cedar Rapids, Creston, Davenport, Mason City, Ottumwa, Sioux City and Waterloo. These offices will devote special attention to the problem of farm labor supplying in Iowa and will endeavor to obtain regular and war emergency workers for Iowa food producers. The employment service adds what the federal employment service is doing for Iowa it is doing for other states.

TO PUSH DEMANDS FOR FREIGHT CARS

Alta, Ia., March 30.—The Commercial club has taken up the matter of getting cars to ship grain and stock to market and a telegram has been sent to Secretary McAdoo offering to ship 10 cars of stock per day for 10 days if the cars will be furnished. The department has promised immediate relief. There is much stock in this section and cars are needed. At Rembrandt 20 cars were secured and loaded last week, the farmers going to Sioux City and buying several calves which were loaded into cars and shipped to the purchaser at Rembrandt. Arrived there the cars were seized and loaded with the fat stock ready to be shipped, and in that manner the embargo was partly raised.

GRAND JURY FAILED TO RETURN INDICTMENT

Cherokee, Ia., March 30.—The grand jury has failed to return an indictment against W. W. Klein, who was charged with assault with intent to do great bodily injury. The alleged assault was made on Theodore Withgraft when Klein was removing yellow paint from his place of business. It had been premed the paint was spread by persons believing Klein held pro-German symphies. He charges the painting was done by boys to whom he had refused [illegible] tobacco and cigarets.

J. W. DOWNING RE-ELECTED MAYOR BY THE PEOPLE

Ute, Ia., March 30.—J. W. Downing was reelected mayor over Lee Henry by an 89 to 38 vote, every candidate on the citizen's ticket polling the larger number of votes. The councilmen elected are Henry Harm, A. L. Lafrentz, Herman Kroll, Charles Bramson and J. F. Dorothy. T. B. Thompson, for treasurer, and P. W. Tyler, for assessor, were also elected.

WOMAN BOOTLEGGER IS UNDER ARREST

Cedar Rapids, Ia., March 28.—Mrs. Martha Malecky, Cedar Rapids' first convicted woman bootlegger, is in the toils again. She was arrested this morning as she stepped from an interurban train carrying two grips which contained 48 pints of whisky. She broke the contents of one grip before the police could get hold of it.

Mrs. Malecky thought she had worked a neat trick on the police. She went to Fulton, Ill., by train last night and on her return today left the train at Lisbon and took an interurban car to the city and was alighting at the outskirts when arrested. She has been arrested twice before, once she was fined $200, and the next time $100. She paid both fines. She is locked up.

BOONE FARMER AIDED GERMAN RED CROSS

Des Moines, Ia., March 28.—Frank Pestotnick, a Boone farmer, was arrested by federal authorities today for violation of the espionage act in that he made the statement: "I sent $800 to Germany to help them and will do it again." Government men claim he is a member of the German Red Cross and that he has repeatedly cursed the United States and opposed sending men to fight the kaiser.

DUBUQUE PHYSICIAN IS PLACED ON TRIAL

Dubuque, Ia., March 28.—The trial of Dr. C. Allen Snyder, charged with causing the death of a Lansing, Ia., woman by a criminal operation some months ago, started in the district court yesterday. Today at noon it was thought a jury to hear the evidence in the case would be secured by adjournment time this evening. Because of the publicity the case has received a large number of talesmen have been called.

Dr. Snyder has been engaged in the practice of medicine here for many years. Since his indictment he has been at liberty on bond. The nature of his defense is not known.

Walker, of Des Moines, the quartermaster's facilities at Camp Dodge are to be much enlarged and supplies in greater quantity will be stored there. The war department will not go to the point of establishing a quartermaster's depot there as requested, but it will add to its facilities instead.

IOWA STATE NEWS.

DETAILS OF MISSIONARY'S MURDER ARE RECEIVED

Alta, Ia., March 29.—Additional information as to the slaying of Miss Christina Wilhadsen, the Iowa missionary, in China on the 14th of last January has been received here in letters from her fellow workers. Miss Willadsen was stationed at Sanshui, Shensi, in northern China. She was alone at that place, and was in charge of a school for girls and women. On the morning of the 14th of January armed bandits raided the town at daybreak and many women and children sought refuge in the compound surrounding the school. The bandits followed them there, and tried to effect an entrance. Miss Willadsen courageously resisted the efforts to enter the compound and in doing so was shot through the head and instantly killed. The bandits then entered and looted the building and took the clothing from the women and children in the school, after which they left. The martyr missionary had been in China about two years and was becoming proficient in the language. The community in which she labored gave her an honorary funeral and much grief is felt because she was thus slain. Miss Willadsen was mainly supported by contributions from Scandinavian churches in this locality and had spent much time here in evangelistic work before going to the foreign field.

QUESTION LOYALTY OF THIS QUAKER PREACHER

Marshalltown, Ia., March 29.—Because they believe that Rev. W. S. Kitch, aged 50, pastor of the Friends church, of Bangor, a Quaker settlement of this county, is not in sympathy with war measures, the local people of the community treated the parsonage to a fine coat of yellow paint and nailed an American flag to the gate post, according to word received here this afternoon.

Kitch recently was summoned before a committee of the council of national defense, but his explanation was such that the committee did not feel it necessary to order him before the council.

Feeling over the apathy of the pastor in war times is said to have caused a marked division in the church.

PIONEER OF WESTERN IOWA DIES AT PISGAH

Pisgah, Ia., March 29.—Frank Hushaw, aged 70 years, died here at the home of his son, Fred, who is in the drug business in this town. Mr. Hushaw had been a resident of western Iowa since 1855, at which time his parents settled on a farm near Woodbine. The body was taken to Woodbine for interment.

CITY ELECTION RESULTS IN SEVERAL IOWA TOWNS

Onawa, Ia., March 29.—Attorney C. C. Cooper defeated Henry Harlow for mayor at the Onawa election by a big majority. Howard Johnson was elected city treasurer, Albin Larson, assessor and Clate Roush and John Messing, councilmen at large. The new mayor has four boys and all are in service. Two of the boys are on the battleship "Texas" and the two youngest boys have recently enlisted with their parents consent.

AKRON MAN FINED FOR TOTING LIQUORS

LeMars, Ia., March 29.—Art Krueger, of Akron, was arrested here Sunday morning charged with transporting liquors. He had come in from Minnesota and carried two grips in which liquor was found. He claims the liquor was for private use. He was fined $50 and costs.

NATIVES OF HOLLAND LOYAL TO AMERICA

Joubert, S. D., March 29.—The loyalty of the natives of Holland was demonstrated at a Red Cross sale held here Saturday, when nearly $2,000 was raised. The highest priced hen that has so far been sold at a Red Cross sale was bought by the Douglas county farmers. Colonel Crockett, of Springfield, brought the hen with him. She had been sold before at a fancy price, but the people of this vicinity claim the record on the hen. Colonel Crockett offers his services free to any and all Red Cross auctions, and wherever he goes the hen goes to continue her Red Cross mission.

BODY OF SOLDIER BOY BROUGHT TO LEMARS

LeMars, Ia., March 29.—The body of Henry Schrooten, who died at Camp Hancock, Georgia, was brought here and laid to rest in the local cemetery. The funeral was largely attended. He is the first soldier to be buried in Plymouth county since the opening of the war.

MORE MONONA COUNTY BOYS ARE OFF TO CAMP

Onawa, Ia., March 29.—Three Monona county boys left Onawa Tuesday for Camp Dodge. Cornelius Lynn, of Rodney, was quarantined at the time the last men were called. Laurance Muckey, of Mapleton, was detained because of illness, and Hugh Gray, of Glencoe, was inducted from Minnesota.

INCREASED ACREAGE OF WHEAT IS BEING SOWN

Sanborn, Ia., March 29—Fine weather prevailing and the ground being in prime condition farmers in this part of the state have made good progress with their spring seeding. A greatly increased acreage of wheat is being sown, farmers sowing from five to 30 acres more than in previous years. Most farmers are well supplied with seed corn.

A fireproof varnish has been devised for use in the fabrication of airplanes.

BOCHES ARE HELD AT ALL CRITICAL POIN

Southwesterly Thrust of Kaisers' Armies Definitely Che and Rolled Back at Some Points by Impetuous Assau Anglo-French—Enemy Still Twelve Miles From Amiens, jective of Great Attempt.

GENERAL FOCH TO DIRECT COUNTER OFFEN

Confidence Increases in France and England as Huns Themselves to Pieces Against Allied Armies Which Are Intact and Have Used Only a Few of Their Reserves About Arras Holds.

By United Press.

Washington, D. C., March 29.—The great allied counter against the German onset is now developing; high army officers declared this afternoon. It may take a day or two for the full movement to reveal itself, it was added, but the troop dispositions have been made and the great army of the allies is taking up its great task.

It was indicated today that General Foch, hero of the Marne, has been placed in supreme command of the allied forces, being over Haig, Petain and Pershing. He is a great offensive fighter.

Amsterdam, March 29.—The German supreme command is about to deliver a new and mighty blow on another part of the front which will "tear a new hole in the already pierced enemy ring," the Vossische Zeitung of Berlin declares.

By Associated Press.

The southwesterly thrust of the German wedge into the allied lines has been stopped short at Montdidier. The enemy seems definitely held there, 57 miles from Paris, by the enclosure of the troops within a pocket formed by a series of villages valiantly captured and held by French troops. Despite continuous counter attacks last night the Germans were not able to dislodge Petain's men from these hamlets on the hills about the town.

Between Montdidier and the Somme the Germans seems to have obtained some ground since yesterday in their westward push toward Amiens, the great allied supply base, but Paris declares the Anglo-French forces are holding the enemy firmly along a well defined line which at no point is less than 12 miles from this objective.

The German purpose, now that the thrust to the southwest has been checked apparently is to close in within the angle formed by the Rivers Avre and Somme with its point at Amiens.

It is this triangle, therefore that further fighting of the most intensive nature is to be looked for in the immediate future.

The Germans continue to sacrifice their men recklessly in their desperate attempts to break the Anglo-French barrier, as the reports from both the French and the British war offices testify.

North of the Somme the British front has not only been stiffly maintained, but has been advanced in places.

Forced to Change Tactics.

Attention is divided between the German attack along the Scarpe toward Arras, and the probability that the French movement in the south is the beginning of a counter offensive on a large scale. The wings of the German salient were its weak points and when the allied troops checked the on rush and held it to small gains at great cost as they have done for two days, the enemy had to change his tactics.

Arras is one of the strongest points in the British line and is guarded on the north by Vimy ridge and on the south by Wailly ridge while there are strongly held hill points to the east. From these positions the British artillery could bombard the rear of the German lines toward the Somme and prevent the Germans from widening the salient toward the north, while at the same time giving the British a point from which to launch a counter offensive. The German attack along the Scarpe may mean either a feint to draw British attention, an attempt to take the high ground around Arras, or an effort to offset a British counter move toward Cambrai. Whatever its purpose the attack continues in strength with the British withstanding the enemy's efforts gallantly.

French Hold Firmly.

French troops since then entrance into the battle last Saturday have made a courageous defense but none was more so than that of Montdidier. Driven from the town and some distance westward by overwhelming numbers, the French counter attacked and captured and held three towns west of Montdidier.

Meanwhile another French force struck the German line south of Noyon a hard blow and pushed it back along a front of six miles for a distance of more than one mile. This gain not only menaces the southern leg of the salient but also the German gains around Montdidier where the enemy has driven a small and precarious wedge.

Germans Forcing Furious Battles at Three Points

By William Phillip Simms.

With the British Armies in the Field, March 30.—The tide of battle is ever rising. The great struggle is extending northward and southward, with a sudden new thrust westward and northwestward against Arras and a gradual spread southward around Noyon.

The new battle line is more than 70 miles long, measured around the western bulge. The principal fighting today is in three distinct centers—one against the north flank toward Arras, the second astride the Somme against the center and the third against the south flank against Montdidier and Noyon.

Severe fighting is under way in all three.

After comparative quiet since the beginning of the offensive the sector from Avion, one mile south of Lens and about three miles north of Arleux to below the Scarpe, which comprises the battle line directly east of the Ancre and about six miles south of Avion, was the scene of a heavy bombardment of explosives, gas shells and shrapnel. Infantry action followed.

The conditions were identical with the "kickoff" a week ago yesterday. Fierce fighting developed, the enemy making headway south of the Scarpe only in massed formation at frightful cost. Orange hill, around which great battles swirled in April, 1917, is again strewn with dead bodies all uniformed in gray green. Telegraph hill nearby likewise is covered with German dead.

The fighting continued this afternoon despite a sudden change in the weather that sent a gale and rain sweeping across the battle fields. The Germans with ox-like perseverance are pushing away against the British line in the region of Arras. The enemy has progressed some, occupying the front line trenches at Orange Hill and Neuville-Vitasse.

The cold, stinging rain made fighting today and tonight difficult. The moon which since the commencement of the offensive turned night into day was obscured, rendering the night as black as the pit. As a result there was a comparative lull, although under brilliant flares suspended from parachutes, outposts and patrols clashed in constant maneuvers for an advantageous get-away at dawn.

While Von Below gained ground in the north the British held Von Hofaker to petty advances in the region of Albert.

Four heavy attacks were repulsed north of the Somme. The enemy dead litter the fields south of the Somme. After repeated assaults all day the Germans sent back the British line a short distance to Hamel-sur Somme. Abancourt and Marcelcave. (Hamel-sur Somme is seven miles south and west of Albert on the south bank of the Somme. It is directly opposite Sailly. Abancourt is two miles directly south and Marcelcave is still two miles further south.)

Below this the French brilliantly held the road southward, driving back the German crown prince's hordes with the bayonet in most places.

French Confidence Increasing as Battle Line Is Lengthened

Paris, March 29.—The great battle is now raging over a front of more than 70 miles. This extension of the line has increased the number of German reserves engaged. Although thus far no decisive success has been obtained anywhere there is increased confidence here. The impression in semi-official circles is that the allies had not only held off the Germans but are no longer compelled to permit the enemy by his maneuvers to shape the course which the battle shall take.

The general feeling is that for Germany the battle is virtually lost, that for the allies the battle is about to begin.

The operations thus far are accepted as confirming the theory that Paris was not the main objective of the German offensive, but that the plan of the enemy was to break the connection between the French and British armies in which he has failed. His main direct attack was west toward the sea. The Germans seek Amiens because this town is an important railway center of communication with England. The loss of Amiens would be inconvenient, but not vital.

Marcel Sembat, former minister of public works, in L'Heure writes:

"The situation is improving for us and improving rapidly. The German attack in the Montdidier region is likely to prove a formidable failure.

"Towards Amiens, which is the real objective of the Germans, their attacks are meeting with stubborn defense. They must have Amiens to cut off the British. They must reach the sea to attempt an enveloping movement. Nothing will be spared to defend Amiens to the last."

"The eighth day of the battle brought a change in the weather if conditions at the front are the same as in Paris. The wind shifted from the northwest to the southwest, which will prevent the Germans from using gas. Rain is falling, which will make it hard for the Germans to bring up their artillery over the ground that they have acquired. It may now be said that the French armies in reserve have come into position and the numerical superiority which the Germans enjoyed in their first rush is decreasing.

DISSENSION MELTING AWAY BEFORE CRISIS

Great Britain Now Presents United Front With Fate of Empire at Stake

London Thursday March 28. The battle for which no one attempts to give a name because it is on a scale too great for any geographical designation, began one week ago this morning. To say is has been a weel of the greatest strain and stress that the British people has ever known would be a futile understatement. The fate of England indeed of the whole British empire has been committed to the test of one clash of arms. Every one has realized this to the depth of his mind The anxiety in the rural districts has been even keener than in the cities where the frequent newspaper bulletins have furnished the people with food for discussion and speculation

The most impressive effect of the crisis has been the sweeping aside of all political factional disputes. Today there is only the united nation whose hearts are with the soldiers in France Before, the progress of the war had come to the level where discussion of policies and personalities were consuming a considerable part of the people's attention and particularly the attention of politicians Today the pacifist journals have fallen into line with the others. They have dropped their criticism of the management of the war and ceased to talk of peace by negotiation

WILL CARRY MESSAGE OF AMERICAN LABOR

Board of Nine to Tell French and British Workmen U S. Is in to Win.

New York March 29 To make known to British and French labor the position of labor in the United States with regard to the war a delegation of nine American labor leaders, with credentials of the American Federation of Labor, will sail shortly for England and France

This was announced late today by the American Alliance for Labor and Democracy, of which Samuel Gompers is president.

The American labor mission, according to a spokesman for the alliance will tell British and French labor leaders that organized labor in the United States is committed to the prosecution of the war to a successful conclusion and will not confer with any representative of an enemy country

The mission, officially known as the "American Federation of Labor mission, is composed of the following

James Wilson, president of the Pattern Makers' League of North America, chairman; John P Frey executive officer of the International Molders' Union of North America, secretary, William Short, president of Washington State Federation of Labor, Miss Melinda Scott, president of the Straw Hat Trimmers and Operatives' union; Miss Agnes Nestor, vice president of the Glove Workers' International union; William H. Johnson, president of the International Association of Machinists George L. Berry, president of the International Printing Pressmen's and Assistants' union, Chester M. Wright member of the International Typographical union, and Martin F Ryan, president of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen

ROADS SHOW DEFICIT FIRST MONTH OF YEAR

Washington, D C., March 29 Under the first month of government operation, January, 177 of the larger railroads earned operating revenues of $270,231,000 compared with $283,837,000 during the same month last year but expenses were so heavy that the net operating revenues for the month were only $12,363,000, compared with $80 $37,000 in January last year and $83,685,000 in December, 1917, the last month of private operation. Accrued taxes deducted from the January net revenues left an actual deficit of $2,227,000.

DENY HOLLAND WILL REFUSE GRAIN OFFER

Amsterdam, (Thursday,) March 28.—Great surprise has been caused here by American newspaper comment on the alleged refusal of Holland to accept American grain in return for the use of Dutch ships. Nothing is known of such refusal, and the semi-official news agency at The Hague is informed that the Dutch foreign office has taken no step that could possibly warrant the impression in America that Holland has refused the grain.

A dispatch from The Hague to the London Mail, on March 25, reported that the Dutch government was said to have decided to send the allied powers a formal refusal of their offer of grain in return for Dutch shipping

GERMANY TO OPERATE RUMANIAN OIL FIELDS

Washington, D. C., March 29.—Germany having subjected Rumania to the sacrifices of a conquered province, state department advices today say, now has demanded that the little state turn over all her valuable oil fields to a German-controlled corporation.

A summary of the German terms received by the department says:

"It is scarcely necessary to draw attention to the fact that the conditions are monstrous. Rumania finds herself deprived of the greater part of her natural wealth for the benefit of a foreign state and private individuals themselves are spoliated and their fortunes placed at the mercy of foreign societies. No state has ever been placed in the obligation of consenting to such a dismemberment of its sovereignty."

AMERICAN FORCES TAKE FOUR BOCHE PRISONERS

With the American Army in France, March 29.—Four prisoners were captured by the Americans on the front northwest of Toul some time during last night or early this morning, according to reports filtering back from the line. It is not known whether the prisoners were engaged in an attempt to raid the American positions or whether they were brought in by an American raiding party.

WILSON PLEADS MOONEY'S CASE

President Appeals to Governor of California to Spare Life of Man Convicted of Bomb Outrage.

Sacramento, Cal., March 30.—President Wilson has telegraphed Gov. Wm. D. Stephens, of California, asking executive clemency for Thomas J Mooney, now under death sentence, it became known here today. Mooney was convicted in connection with a bomb explosion in San Francisco in a preparedness parade July 22, 1916, which caused the death of persons and injury of 40 others.

Executive clemency was Mooney's only hope, the state supreme court, which is confined to questions of law in reviewing murder cases, having rejected recently his appeal for a new trial.

Says Mooney Is Murderer.

"If President Wilson wishes to turn loose a murderer like Mooney, the responsibility is his," was the comment of District Attorney Charles M. Fickert, of San Francisco county, when the report of the president's commission was made public.

Other factors in the case were an appeal outside the record, to the state supreme court, backed by the trial judge and the attorney general of the state, the latter declaring that a "miscarriage of justice has occurred" The court found it had no jurisdiction in the appeal

Governor Stephens was absent today on a trip to Camp Kearney, San Diego.

Washington, D. C., March 29.—The only comment of White House officials today on President Wilson's telegram to Governor Stephens, asking him to extend executive clemency in the Mooney case, was that they would neither affirm nor deny such a telegram had been sent. Further than that they absolutely refused to discuss it

Has Few Precedents.

The president's action, which has few precedents in American judicial history, comes as the climax of much effort by agencies of the federal government to have the conviction of Mooney reversed and to get for him a new trial.

When President Wilson sent his labor mediation commission west several months ago to look into numerous labor disturbances which were threatening the government's war production campaign, it was specially charged to look into the Mooney case and make a report. The commission reported conclusions that the Mooney case had become so involved with the issues of the bitter contest between capital and labor in San Francisco that he should have a new trial.

About the same time the bolshevist disturbances reached their height in Russia and all the influence of the United States was being exerted to preserve the new democracy. Russian agitators of the Lenine and Trotzky type opposing the efforts of the United States, were using the Mooney case as one of their chief arguments to make the Russian people believe that the pleadings of the United States for the cause of democracy were insincere. They declared in their public speeches that the Mooney case was an example of autocratic government in this country and the commission reported to President Wilson that the effects of the case had become world wide among the workers.

"The feeling of disquietude aroused by the case must be heeded," the commission reported to the president, "for if unchecked it impairs the faith that our democracy protects the lowliest and even the unworthy against false accusations. War is fought with moral as well as material resources.

"It is well known that practically all the prominent labor leaders upon the president has been calling for labor's cooperation in the war have been asking the president to intervene for the relief of Mooney and many of the administration's advisors have been favoring such a step.

After receiving the report of the commission, President Wilson wrote Governor Stephens urging a new trial. The highest court of California recently refused it.

BRITISH RETREAT PLANNED IN ADVANCE GENERAL SAYS

Washington, D. C., March 30.—The British withdrawal before the German advance was made according to prearranged plans, and is "all over now," Maj. Gen. J. Franklin Bell today told the Senate military committee. He said the allies have known of the German preparations for the present drive since soon after they were begun and made active preparations to face it.

General Bell recently returned from the battle front.

General Bell was called by the Senate military committee to inform the members regarding conditions on the battle field. He said the German generals recently were quoted as saying two months' preparations were necessary for the present drive.

"I don't doubt but that it might have taken longer," he declared.

"There has been an impression," he added, "that the allies were partly ignorant of German plans, but that he denied, declaring he was informed confidentially of the allies' preparations to face the Germans when he was there and declared that the British withdrawal was coming to a prearranged plan.

"But should that go into the record?" asked Chairman Chamberlain.

"That's all right; it's all over now," said the general.

General Bell explained some of the scientific means used by a modern army to detect gun fire and gave assurances that General Pershing was doing everything in the way of establishing schools back of the American lines, in order to train his men in the use of such methods.

That the most advanced trench is never held in times of a serious attack was explained by General Bell, who said they are principally used for lookout purposes.

General Bell said that so far as he knew Pershing's command is fully equipped. "I think there has been some misapprehension concerning certain equipment," he said. "At the beginning of our entrance into the war the French government agreed to furnish certain field artillery and since then they have furnished certain other equipment by agreement."

There was a shortage of horses at first and later there was a need for motor trucks, Major General Bell said, but the shortages have been met.

The highest praise of the American morale in France was given by General Bell. The closer to the front line trenches the greater is the morale, he said, adding that "the only pessimism I heard while at the front came from noncombatants, military men back of the front line trenches, and from a few civilians, some of them newspaper men."

General Bell said age is an important factor in efficiency and that in his judgement the average man begins to deteriorate in military efficiency after he passes 50. He pronounced the German general staff as the "ablest the world has ever seen," but modified this to "one of the ablest." He declared Von Hindenburg, Von Mackensen and Ludendorff are exceptions to the general rule.

"Therefore, Germany by virtue of the possession of one of the ablest and best trained general staffs in the world, is able to profit by retaining the experience of some of the old, but able generals," he declared.

FOCH IS GIVEN FULL COMMAND

Famous French General Is Placed Over Haig, Petain and Pershing in France —Hero of Marne.

Washington, D. C., March 30.—The first official reference to General Foch as being in supreme command of the allied forces on the western front is contained in a cablegram President Wilson sent the general today congratulating him on his "new authority."

The president's message said:

"May I not convey to you my sincere congratulations on your new authority? Such unity of command is a most hopeful augury of ultimate success. We are following with profound interest the bold and brilliant action of your forces."

Washington, D. C., March 30.—American staff officers, watching the battle front by dispatches from hour to hour were still unable today to judge whether the French counter assault in the region between Noyon and Montdidier was the beginning of a great counter stroke or was directed at local objectives to strengthen that portion of the French line.

Further than Associated Press cables from France reporting General Pershing's proffer of the American troops to General Foch, the war department had nothing to indicate the extent to which American forces might participate.

On the map, the situation at the apex of the German thrust against the juncture of the French and British armies seems to American experts to offer great possibilities for the French. The turn of the battle apparently has swung the French lines around at right angles with the old battle front and today they are facing almost due north along the general course of their position from Montdidier to the old line. The situation American officers think lends itself to an attempt by the French to cut off the apex of the German thrust which carried Montdidier, but the general counter assault plans may possibly make it wiser to forego this indicated chance for a lesser success. It is regarded as possible that the stress of the emergency will bring about a complete merger of the French, British and American troops under one supreme commander. Dispatches previously have indicated General Foch as the man and General Pershing's action tends to support that theory.

ANOTHER MOVEMENT OF SELECTIVES IS STARTED

Washington, D. C., March 30.—With the exception of a few districts in the large eastern cities, where delays have been permitted because of religious ceremonies at Easter time, the mobilization of 95,000 men comprising the last increment of the first draft and 15,000 men of the second began to get under way today. The first 70,000 white men and 25,000 negroes began moving to the national army cantonments.

Vienna Dispatches Refute Claim Black Sea Port Has Been Lost.

Amsterdam, March 30.—Denial that the bolshevists have retaken the Black sea port of Odessa is made officially in Vienna. It is said the city is still occupied by the Austro-Germans.

Official announcement was made by the Russian government Wednesday that Odessa had been recaptured by the bolshvists after a desperate battle for three days.

CAUCASUS TO BECOME INDEPENDENT NATION

Will Make Peace With Turkey —Demand Autonomy For Armenia.

London, March 30.—The Caucasus diet, after proclaiming the independence of the country, has approved the basis of a separate peace agreement with Turkey, Reuter's Petrograd correspondent reports. The agreement is said to provide autonomy for Armenia and reestablishment of the frontiers as they were before the war.

FIRST CAMP DODGE MEN REACH FRANCE

Des Moines, Ia., March 30.—The first contingent of sildiers from the 88th National Army division at Camp Dodge, has arrived safely in France, according to advices received here today. The contingent includes more than 100 men selected from all organizations at the cantonment shortly after Christmas and transferred to a regiment of engineers. The men were selected for service with the first draft. Many were from Iowa, but the larger percentage were Minnesota men.

ALLEGED HEAD OF AUTO THIEVES TAKEN

Des Moines, Ia., March 30.—Ira Bond, of Minneapolis, reported to be under indictment in Chicago as the head of an organized band of Automobile thieves, was arrested in Ottumwa today by State Agent Henry Tyrrell. Bond is said to have jumped a $37,000 bond in Chicago, under which he was placed following his arrest some months ago. His organization is said to have operated extensively in the middle west. He was known in Minneapolis as a broker.

U. S. SAILOR DROWNED.

Washington, D. C., March 29.—John Parker Hawthorne, of Jersey City, N. J., a seaman of the naval reserve, fell overboard from the United States ship Rutoma, March 26 and was drowned, the navy department today announced. His body was not recovered.

IN MISERY FOR YEARS

Mrs. Courtney Tells How She Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Oskaloosa, Iowa.—"For years I was simply in misery from a weakness and awful pains—and nothing seemed to do me any good. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and got relief right away. I can certainly recommend this valuable medicine to other women who suffer, for it has done such good work for me and I know it will help others if they will give it a fair trial."—Mrs. Lizzie Courtney, 108 8th Ave., West, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Why will women drag along from day to day, year in and year out, suffering such misery as did Mrs. Courtney, when such letters as this are continually being published. Every woman who suffers from displacements, irregularities, inflammation, ulceration, backache, nervousness, or who is passing through the Change of Life should give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial. For special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of its long experience is at your service.

Springs His Usual Conundrum, to the Delight and Bewilderment of the Prune Club.

"We've missed you for several mornings," remarked the blond typewriter to the thin boarder as he glided into the meatless-wheatless breakfast table, according to the Yonkers Statesman.

"Well, see if you can miss this one, Cutie," replied the conundrum thrower. "Why is the English general, Sir Julian Byng, the hero of Cambrai, like Annette Kellermann, the swimmer?"

"One has made good in flights and the other in tights," suggested the bank clerk with the red necktie.

"Back up! I said why are they alike, not why are they different," came from the thin man.

"Because they are prominent for divers reasons," ventured the schoolteacher with the shell glasses.

"Won't do," answered the man who started the trouble. "Listen. Here's the answer: Because they were both made famous by the tanks."

Still Resting.

"I see in the Weekly Banner of Spruceville that Lem Higgins has 'fallen asleep.'"

MARCH TO VICTORY

Courage is a matter of the blood. Without good red blood a man has a weak heart and poor nerves.

In the spring is the best time to take stock of one's condition. If the blood is thin and watery, face pale or pimply, generally weak, tired and listless, one should take a spring tonic. One that will do the spring house-cleaning, an old-fashioned herbal remedy that was used by everybody nearly 50 years ago is still safe and sane because it contains no alcohol or narcotic. It is made up of Blood root, Golden Seal root, Oregon Grape root, Queen's root, Stone root, Black Cherry bark—extracted with glycerine and made into liquid or tablets. This blood tonic was first put out by Dr. Pierce in ready-to-use form and since then has been sold by million bottles as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If druggists do not keep this in tablet form, send 60 cents for a vial to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y.

Kidney disease carries away a large percentage of our people. What is to be done? The answer is easy. Eat less meat, eat coarse, plain food, with plenty of vegetables, drink plenty of water between meals, and take an uric acid solvent after meals for a while, such as Anuric (double strength), obtainable at almost any drug store. It was first discovered by Dr. Pierce. Most every one troubled with uric acid finds that Anuric dissolves the uric acid as hot water does sugar. You can obtain a trial package by sending ten cents to Doctor Pierce's Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute in Buffalo, N. Y.

Mr Farmer!

Dear Sir:

This letter tells you of a plan by which you can save considerable time, trouble and money.

You will be in need of repairs very soon. Perhaps you already know of some you will have to buy. Well, your order should be in our hands now. Here is the reason:

Materials are hard to get and train service is uncertain and slow at the best The earlier you place your order the quicker it will be filled Get busy now and overhaul your machinery. List your repair needs and bring them or mail them to us as soon as possible. Then when Spring opens you will be ready to go to work. There will be no delay or trouble and you will be money ahead.

Yours truly,

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH
J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

"In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, 'If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again, but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life. And the spirit and the bride say come. And let him that heareth say come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely.'"

It seems that with these beautiful invitations, and wonderful promises facing humanity there ought not to be a thirsty soul in all the world. But alas! we are afraid there are many of them living within easy reach of the springs, rivers and wells of salvation as offered by our Lord in His great message to mankind. My dear friend, do not eat husks, and drink skimmed milk while in the Father's house there is plenty and to spare, and just over Jordan, in Canaan, the land is flowing with milk and honey.

We cordially invite all to the services of the church where we teach and preach the Christ who offers regeneration, sanctification and glorification, all without money and without price.

Preaching service at 10:30 o'clock next Sunday morning. Note the hour and be on hand for the full service.

Sunday school at 11:30 o'clock. Let young and old begin life afresh in the Sunday school work since Easter.

Epworth League at 8:00 o'clock in the evening. Topic—Understanding and Doing Christ's Will. Leader—Mr. Sylvan Johnson. Let's make these devotional services of the League very profitable to all, and we can if we put life into them.

Preaching service at 8:30 o'clock.

Prayermeeting on each Thursday evening at 8:00 o'clock.

Dr. Clegg will preach for us on Thursday evening, April 11th, and hold quarterly conference at the close. Let everybody turn out and hear him. Let's consider this just as important a service as if it were Sunday Remember the date, April 11th.

WHAT THE JUNIOR RED CROSS SIGNIFIES

A PATRIOTIC MOVEMENT

COMMUNITY CENTER WORK

(By F. A Welch, Iowa Superintendent Junior Red Cross)

Today schools in practically every county in our state and every state in our nation are either organized for Junior Red Cross work or are organizing for these Junior activities. Some counties in our own state are already fully organized, funds have been raised and work is being done to assist local chapters or branches of the American Red Cross. Some counties are now in the "big drive" for membership, while still others are beginning to organize. The ambition of the organizers is to enroll every elementary and every school, public, private and parochial, in the national patriotic movement. If this purpose is accomplished practically 22,000,000 children of our land will thus be affiliated with the American Red Cross in its noble work.

The purpose of the organization is threefold: To secure the assistance of children and young people in sharing in the tremendous burdens the American Red Cross is now bearing, is the first and most pressing purpose. By the schools assisting in the local work in doing the more imple operations, the regular members of the chapters and branches can give their time to the major operations of preparing war material and Belgian relief. The work done by the schools is under the direction of the chapter or the branch. The second, and no less important purpose of the Auxiliary is to provide means of teaching, through the schools, the lesson of patriotism and citizenship in the most practical way. Through community and national service the schools thus become laboratories for shaping right ideals of citizenship. The third purpose is the opportunity the organization will offer the teachers of our schools to teach Thrift and Conservation. Conservation of time, of material, of food and of money are embodied in the idea of the organization. Incidentally the spirit of service and of patriotism will be carried by the children into their homes.

The work of organization is carried on in the various counties through Chapter School Committees consisting of three or more members appointed by the Chairman of the American Red Cross Chapter. Branches may also appoint Branch School Committees for the same purpose if requested by their chapter. When a school becomes an Auxiliary, or a Junior Red Cross, the school and not the pupil becomes a unit. Membership by a school carries membership to every pupil in the school, and each pupil is entitled to the button. Each pupil should contribute 25c, take a pledge of service, or both. The school, on applying to the Chapter School Committee for membership, agrees to raise an amount equal to 25c per pupil enrolled, which fund is used for the purchase of material for Belgian relief, for surgical dressings, or for other material for war service, as directed by the chapter.

The possibilities for good of this important organization can scarcely be overestimated. In time fo war it priveleges the child to assist his government, which is conducting the struggle, above all, for the child. In time of peace the efforts can be turned to assist in some permanent betterment work, such as waging an anti-disease campaign, or in any worthy community enterprise. The needs are always at hand, and if the organization becomes permanent these needs can at any time be assisted by the Junior Red Cross School.

The educational advantages accruing from such organization are readily seen by educators; and teachers, superintendents and others are enthusiastic in the organization work. The promoters of the enterprise are planning to place the Junior Red Cro on a permanent basis of organization. The work can then go on, in season and out of season, during school year or in vacation time, and become as permanent a factor in our national life as is now the American Red Cross. No educational movement in recent times has arisen which promises more results in education and in service for the small amount of time and means expended. Every community of patrons should assist its school in going "over the top" with this enterprise. No child in our land ought to be deprived of the privelege of belonging to the Junior Red Cross.

Lights and the Color Scheme.

Did you ever wish that you could get electric light bulbs to match the color scheme of your room? If so, you may be glad to know, if you have not already discovered the trick for yourself, that you may color them at home to suit your own taste. It is very simple. Just buy some water-color paints, a soft brush, and set to work. You may paint them any shade that you desire, and get a lovely effect of softened light through the painted glass. For instance, if your living room is done in shades of brown and yellow, you can get a beautiful sunshiny light through bulbs painted a delicate yellow.—Christian Science Monitor.

Be Fair With Children.

Do not keep a list of your children's faults constantly before you, and do not, if you would be happy and at the same time make these little ones happy, elaborate upon their failings before company. On the other hand, if you must speak of the day's events, emphasize their good deeds, tell of the splendid work done during school hours, and admit in the right spirit that these small members of the household save you many weary steps.

To Be Remembered.

Frugality is good, if liberality be joined with it. The first is leaving off superfluous expenses; the last bestowing them to the benefit of others that need. The first without the last begins covetousness; the last without the first begins prodigality; both together make an excellent temper.—William Penn.

Kitchen Patriots Need The "HOOSIER"

Read These Four Reasons why You Should Get It at Once

FOOD, time, work and money are being saved in more than a million homes every day by the use of the Hoosier Kitchen Cabinet. Hunqreds of Domestic Science schools are using it, so the coming housewives can be good and real home managers.

It is wasteful to be without this "automatic servant. And there are four strong reasons why you should get it without delay'

1--For loyalty sake. The Hoosier System protets your flour, sugar and other foods. It prevents waste in measuring and mixing, And it gives you more time for knitting. Red Cross work and other patriotic service. Also for rest.

2--we are now offering popular models at before-war prices. Moreover you can pay as convenient.

Your money back if you are not delighted

3--Hoosier's Council of Kitchen Scientists pronounce the new models as complete as can be made. Anb remember these brilliant women of the Hoosier staff are always in touch with home needs.

4--Due to the war time demand for Hoosier our allotment is very limited. Lest you be unable to get the model you want later on come and pick out at once.

"Silver and gold have I none, but such as I have give I thee." What comfort is suggested by these words to some of us, who have neither the silvery tongue of eloquence nor the golden ore of knowledge, who, like Moses or Jeremiah, cry: "Behold I am a child; I cannot speak." Believe me young people, that gold and siver are the last things that men need. They can dispense with these more quickly than with the gifts of the heart; and though you have none of them, either literally or symbolically, though you have nothing to distinguish you in the way of talent or gift, though you may account yourself unable to supply the lack that cries aloud from the heart of your fellows, yet you may have and give that which silver could not purchase and gold could not procure, and compared with which the rubies of the mine would be worthless as bags of pebbles.

Remember that the world has been enriched more through the poverty of it's saints than by the wealth of it's millionaires. Remember that the men whose hymns and words and achievements are the priceless heritage of the ages; that the martyrs, confesssors, reformers, prophets, teachers and leaders of men, have all been classed in that great and noble brotherhood which Peter represented when he became the medium into the common coniage of the earth. These men have given blood, tears, spiritual impulses, faith, hope, love. What have you to give? Have you anything in your heart with which to enrich this poor and needy world? All around the beggars lie with their whining voices, their thin outstretched hands, their helplessness and misery. Are you preparing to go into the great temple of life by yourself, passing alone through the beautiful gate of early manhood and womanhood? Or will you pick up the lame beggars as you pass by, lifting them up and leading them in with you, your joy being doubled by theirs and your praises being all the sweeter because you hear them praising God and saying as they hold you tightly: "Oh magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt His name together"?

Grease From Sewage.

Experiments in the recovery of grease from sewage sludge have been conducted the past three years in Boston by Prof. Robert Spurr Weston of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. These experiments have led to a process now embodied in workable form, according to the Oil, Paint and Drug Reporter, which consists of recovery by the precipitation of the sewage by the use of an acid, the grease then being removed and the residue sold for fertilizer. The grease is precipitated by the use of sulphur dioxide as a solvent, the latter being so strong a disinfect: . that the treated sewage contains few bacteria. More than 21 per cent of grease is recovered from the dry sludge, and in addition 1,300 pounds of fertilizer base per million gallons of sewage. Cost of treatment is low, yielding 25 per cent profit.

The Russian Soviet.

In time of revolution the Soviet is the only form of government—if such it can be called—now existent in Russia, notes a correspondent. The Central or Petrograd Soviet is composed of between 3,000 and 4,000 delegates, mainly from the army and the factories. They are all men of little or no education, many entirely illiterate, and are drawn from the lowest elements of the people. These delegates appoint a parliament of some 600 members, who again appoint an executive committee of any number from 60 to 120.

This executive council is the organization which really matters. They are the men with the brains, and consist mainly of international Jews.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

She took her head between her hands.

"Oh, my brain is throbbing as if it would burst! What does all this mean? I have done no wrong. * * * I knew nothing. It was you who told me this morning. * * * Could I have suspected? My poor husband * * * and that dear Edmond who loved me * * * and whom I loved! Why should I have killed them? Tell me that! Why don't you answer?" she demanded. "People don't commit murder without a motive. * * * Well? * * * Well? * * * Answer me, can't you?"

And once more convulsed with anger, standing in an aggressive attitude, with her clenched hands outstretched at the group of magistrates, she screamed:

"You're no better than butchers * * * you have no right to torture a woman like this. * * * Oh, how horrible! To accuse me * * * to arrest me * * * for nothing! * * * Oh, it's abominable! * * * What butchers you all are! * * * And it's you in particular," addressing Perenna, "it's you—yes, I know—it's you who are the enemy.

"Oh, I understand! You had your reasons, you were here last night. * * Then why don't they arrest you? Why not you, as you were here and I was not and know nothing, absolutely nothing of what happened. * * * Why isn't it you?"

The last words were pronounced in a hardly intelligible fashion. She had no strength left. She had to sit down, with her head bent over her knees, and she wept once more, abundantly.

Perenna went up to her and, raising her forehead and uncovering the tear stained face, said:

"The imprints of teeth in both apples are absolutely identical. There is therefore no doubt whatever but that the first comes from you as well as the second."

"No!" she said.

"Yes," he affirmed. "That is a fact which it is materially impossible to deny. But the first impression may have been left by you before last night, that is to say, you may have bitten that apple yesterday, for instance——"

She stammered:

"Do you think so? Yes, perhaps, I seem to remember—yesterday morning——"

But the prefect of police interrupted her.

"It is useless, madame; I have just questioned your servant, Silvestre. He bought the fruit himself at 8 o'clock last evening. When M. Fauville went to bed, there were four apples in the dish. At 8 o'clock this morning there were only three. Therefore the one found in the garden is incontestably the fourth; and this fourth apple was marked last night. And the mark is the mark of your teeth."

She stammered:

"It was not I * * * it was not I * * * that mark is not mine."

"But——"

"That mark is not mine. * * * I swear it as I hope to be saved. * * * And I also swear that I shall die, yes, die. * * * I prefer death to prison. * * * I shall kill myself. * * * I shall kill myself——"

Her eyes were staring before her. She stiffened her muscles and made a supreme effort to rise from her chair. But, once on her feet, she tottered and fell fainting on the floor.

While she was being seen to, Mazeroux beckoned to Don Luis and whispered:

"Clear out, chief."

"Ah, so the orders are revoked? I'm free?"

"Chief, take a look at the beggar who came in 10 minutes ago and who's talking to the prefect. Do you know him?"

"Hang it all!" said Perenna, after glancing at a large red faced man who did not take his eyes off him. "Hang it, it's Weber, the deputy chief!"

"And he's recognized you, chief! He recognized Lupin at first sight. There's no fake that he can't see through. He's got the knack of it. Well, chief, just think of all the tricks you've played on him and ask yourself if he'll stick at anything to have his revenge!"

"And you think he has told the prefect?"

"Of course he has; and the prefect has ordered my mates to keep you in view. If you make the least show of trying to escape them, they'll collar you."

"In that case, there's nothing to be done?"

"Nothing to be done? Why, it's a question of putting them off your scent and mighty quickly!"

"What good would that do me, as I'm going home and they know where I live?"

"Eh, what? Can you have the cheek to go home after what's happened?"

"Where do you expect me to sleep? Under the bridges?"

"But, dash it all, don't you understand that, after this job, there will be the most infernal stir, that you're compromised up to the neck as it is, and that everybody will turn against you?"

"Well?"

"Drop the business."

"And the murderers of Cosmo Mornington and the Fauvilles?"

"The police will see to that."

"Alexandre, you're an ass."

"Then become Lupin again, the invisible, impregnable Lupin, and do your own fighting, as you used to. But in Heaven's name don't remain Perenna! It's too dangerous. And don't occupy yourself officially with a business in which you are not interested."

"The things you say, Alexandre! I am interested in it to the tune of 100,000,000. If Perenna does not stick to his post, the 100,000,000 will be snatched from under his nose. And, on the one occasion when I can earn a few honest centimes, that would be most annoying."

"And, if they arrest you?"

"No go! I'm dead!"

"Lupin is dead. But Perenna is alive."

"As they haven't arrested me today, I'm easy in my mind."

"It's only put off. And the orders are strict from this moment onward. They mean to surround your house and to keep watch day and night."

"Capital. I always was frightened at night."

"But, good Lord! what are you hoping for?"

"I hope for nothing, Alexandre. I am sure. I am sure now that they will not dare arrest me."

"Do you imagine that Weber will stand on ceremony?"

"I don't care a hang about Weber. Without orders, Weber can do nothing."

"But they'll give him his orders."

"The order to shadow me, yes; to arrest me, no. The prefect of police has committed himself about me to such an extent that he will be obliged to back me up. And then there's this: the whole affair is so absurd, so complicated, that you people will never find your way out of it alone. Sooner or later, you will come and fetch me. For there is no one but myself to fight such adversaries as these: not you nor Weber, nor any of your pals at the detective office. I shall expect your visit, Alexandre."

On the next day an expert examination identified the tooth prints on the two apples and likewise established the fact that the print on the cake of chocolate was similar to the others.

Also, the driver of a taxicab came and gave evidence that a lady engaged him as she left the opera, told him to drive her straight to the end of the Avenue Henri Martin, and left the cab on reaching that spot.

Now the end of the Avenue Henri Martin was within five minutes' walk of the Fauvilles' house.

The man was brought into Mme. Fauville's presence and recognized her at once.

What had she done in that neighborhood for over an hour?

Marie Fauville was taken to the central lockup, was entered on the register, and slept, that night, at the Saint-Lazare prison.

That same day, when the reporters were beginning to publish details of the investigation, such as the discovery of the tooth prints, but when they did not yet know to whom to attribute them, two of the leading dailies used as a headline for their article the very words which Don Luis Perenna had employed to describe the marks on the apple, the sinister words which so well suggested the fierce, savage, and so to speak, brutal character of the incident: "THE TEETH OF THE TIGER."

CHAPTER V.

THE IRON CURTAIN.

It is sometimes an ungrateful task to tell the story of Arsene Lupin's life, for the reason that each of his adventures is partly known to the public, having at the time formed the subject of much eager comment, whereas his biographer is obliged, if he would throw light upon what is not known, to begin at the beginning and to relate in full detail all that which is already public property.

It is because of this necessity that I am compelled to speak once more of the extreme excitement which the news of that shocking series of crimes created in France, in Europe and throughout the civilized world. The public heard of four murders practically all at once, for the particulars of Cosmo Mornington's will were published two days later.

There was no doubt that the same person had killed Cosmo Mornington, Inspector Verot, Fauville the engineer, and his son Edmond. The same person had made the identical sinister bit, leaving himself or herself, with a heedlessness that seemed to show the avenging hand of fate, a most impressive and incriminating proof, a proof which made people shudder as they would have shuddered at the awful reality: the marks of his or her teeth, the teeth of the tiger!

And, in the midst of al lthis bloodshed, at the most tragic moment of the dismal tragedy, behold the strangest of figures emerging from the darkness!

An heroic adventurer, endowed wit hastounding intelligence and insight, had in a few hours partly unravelled the tangled skeins of the plot, divined the murder of Cosmo Mornington, proclaimed the murder of Inspector Verot, taken the conduct of the investigation into his own hands, delivered to justice the inhuman creature whose beautiful teeth fitted the marks as precious stones fit their settings, received a cheque for 1,000,000 francs on the day after these exploits, and, finally, found himself the probabl heir to an immense fortune.

And here was Arsene Lupin coming to life again!

For the public made no mistake about that, and, with wonderful intuition, proclaimed aloud that Don Luis Perenna was Arsene Lupin, before a close examination of the facts had more or less confirmed the supposition.

"But he's dead!" objected the doubters.

To which the others replied.:

"Yes, Dolores Kesselbach's corpse was recovered under the still smoking rpins of a little chalet near the Luxemburg frontier and with it ,the corpse of a man whom the police identified as Arsene Lupin. But everything goes to show that the whole scene was contrived by Lupins, who, for reasons of his own, wanted to be thought dead. And everything shows that the police accepted and legalized the theory of his death only because they wished to be rid of their everlasting adversary.

As a proof, we have the confidences made by Valenglay, who was prime minister at the time and whom the chan es of politics have just replaced at the head of the government. And there is the mysterious incident on the island of Capri when the German emperor, just as he was about to be buried under a landslip, was saved by a hermit who, according to the German version, was none other than Arsene Lupin.

To this came a fresh objection:

"Very well; but read the newspapers of the time: 10 minutes afterward, the hermit flung himself into the sea from Tiberius' leap." And the answer:

"Yes, but the body was never found. And, as it happens, we know that a steamer picked up a man who was making signals to her an dthat this steamer was on her way to Algiers. Well, a few days later, Don Luis Perenna enlisted in the foreign legious at Sidi-bel-Abbes."

Of course, the controvery upon which the newspapers embarked on this subject was carried on discreetly. Everybody was afraid of Lupin; and the journalists maintained a certain reserve in their articles, confined themselves to comparing dates and pointing out coincidences, and refrained from speaking too positively of any Lupin that might lie hidden under the mask of Perenna.

But, as regards the private in the foreign legion and his stay in Morocco, they took their revenge and let themselves go freely.

Major d'Astrignac had spoken. Other officers, other comrades of Perenna's, related what they had seen. The reports and daily orders concerning him were published. And what became known as "The Hero's Idyll" began to take the form of a sort of record each page of which described the maddest and unlikeliest of facts.

At Mediouna, on the 24th of March, the adjutant, Captain Pollex, awarded Private Perenna four days' cells on a charge of having broken out of camp past two sentries after evening roll call, contrary to orders, and being absent without leave until noon on the following day. Perenna, the report went on to say, brought back the body of his sergeant, killed in ambush. And in the margin was this note, in the colonel's hand:

The colonel commanding doubles Private Perenna's reward, but mentions his name in orders and congratulates and thanks him.

After the fight of Ber-Rechid, Lieutenant Fardet's detachment being obliged to retreat before a band of 400 Moors, Private Perenna asked leave to cover the retreat by installing himself in a kasbah.

"How many men do you want, Perenna?"

"None, sir."

"What! Surely you don't propose to cover a retreat all by yourself?"

"What pleasure would there be in dying, sir, if others were to die as well as I?"

At his request, they left him a dozen rifles, and divided with him the cartridges that remained. His share came to 75.

The detachment got away without being further molested. Next day, when they were able to return with reinforcements, they surprised the Moors lying in wait around the kasbah, but afraid to approach. The ground was covered with 75 of their killed.

Our men drove them off. They found Private Perenna stretched out on the floor of the kasbah. They thought him dead. He was asleep!

He had not a single cartridge left. But each of his 75 bullets had gon home.

What struck the imagination of the public most however, was Major d'Astrignac's story of the battle of Dar-Dbibarh. The major confessed that this battle, which relieved Fez at the moment when we thought that all was lost and which created such a sensation in France, was won before it was fought and that it was won by Perenna, alone!

At daybreak, when the Moorish tribes were preparing for the attack, Private Perenna lassoed an Arab horse that was galloping across the plain, sprang on the animal, which had no saddle, bridle, nor any sort of harness, and without jacket, cap or arms, with his white shirt bulging out and a cigaret between his teeth, charged with his hands in his trousers pockets!

He charged straight toward the enemy, galloped through their camp, riding in and out among the tents, and then left it by the same place by which he had gone in.

This quite inconceivable deatli ride spread such consternation among the Moors that their attack was half hearted and the battle was won without resistance.

This, together with numberless other feats of bravado, went to make up the heroic legend of Perenna. It threw into relief the superhuman energy, the marvellous recklessness, the bewildering fancy, the spirit of adventure, the physical dexterity, and the coolness of a singularly mysterious individual whom it was impossible not to take for Arsene Lupin, but a new and greater Arsene Lupin, ligniied, idealized, and ennobled by his exploits.

One morning, a fortnight after the double murder in the Boulevard Suchet, this extraordinary man, who aroused such eager interest and who was spoken of on every side as a fabulous and more or less impossible being: one morning, Don Luis Perenna dressed himself and went the rounds of his house.

It was a comfortable and roomy 18th century mansion, situated at the entrance to the Faubourg Saint-Germain, on the little Place du Palais-Bourbon. He had bought it, furnished, from a rich Hungarian, Count Malonyi, keeping for his own use the horses, carriages, motor cars, and taking over the eight servants and even the count's secretary, Mlle. Levasseur, who undertook to manage the household and to receive and get rid of the visitors—journalists, bores and curiosity dealers—attracted by the luxury of the house and the reputation of its new owner.

LEMONS WHITEN THE COMPLEXION

ANY WOMAN CAN MAKE UP THIS CREAMY BEAUTY LOTION FOR A FEW CENTS.

The juice of two fresh lemons strained into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white makes a whole quarter pint of the most remarkable lemon skin beautifier at about the cost one must pay for a small jar of the ordinary cold creams. Care should be taken to strain the lemon juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach a darkened skin and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener, whitener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any drug store and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands.—Adv.

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but not the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Wherever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

FRECKLES

Now Is the Time to Get Rid of Those Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

Some Real Conservation.

From the Outlook.

Germany, Austria, Australia, Bermuda, Denmark, France, Great Britain, Holland, Iceland, Italy, Norway, Portugal, and Sweden have adopted the daylight saving plan, which consists in setting the clock forward one hour during certain of the spring, summer and autumn months, and setting it back to standard time in the winter. The practical working of this plan is very simple. If at midnight at the close of April 30 next every clock and watch in the United States were set forward one hour; the man who rises at 7 and breakfasts at 7:30 would still pursue his accustomed habits by the watch, but by standard solar time he would rise at 6 and breakfast at 6:30. He would apparently be getting up, taking his breakfast, going to the office or shop, and eating his midday and evening meals at just the hour he always had been, but he would actually have an hour more of the cool and refreshing daylight of the morning and a longer evening of daylight after his day's work was done.

The countries that have tried this plan are completely satisfied with it. It not only gives more time for daylight work and pleasure, but it is of distinct economic value. It has led to the annual saving in the last year of $35,000,000 in Germany, $12,000,000 in England, and $4,000,000 in France. A British parliamentary commission has reported, moreover, that this simple device for providing more daylight hours has resulted in a manifest saving of light and health. Last year bills were introduced into congress providing for setting the clock forward on the last Sunday of April and setting it back the last Sunday in September. The Senate passed this legislation last June, but the House has debated and discussed it until about a month ago. A compromise has been reached between the Senate and House committees, and the two bodies have now agreed, we believe, on legislation which, if passed, will make the period of daylight saving in this country extend from the last of March to the last of October, a period of seven months. It is believed that if the daylight saving plan is adopted it will have a very beneficial effect on the production of food in this country during the coming summer.

Our Valuable Peat Supply.

From United States Geological Survey Bulletin.

The commercial development of the vast peat deposits in the United States would materially relieve our present shortage of fuel. Although peat has not been largely used as fuel in this country because of our abundant supply of coal, which can be more readily prepared for consumption and in normal times more cheaply brought to the consumer, it has long been used in Europe, where 15,000,000 to 20,000,000 tons are consumed annually in general heat and power.

The attempts made in this country to manufacture peat fuel on a commercial scale have not been successful, but the failure appears to have been due not to a lack of market for the product, but to the lack of sufficient capital, to the inexperience of the operators, and to preventable engineering errors. It is said that air dried machine peat, which is but little inferior in calorific value to many grades of lignite coal, can be produced at a cost ranging from 75 cents to $2.50 a ton, the exact figure depending on the demand and the efficiency of the plant; and it is believed that in some parts of the country it could successfully compete with other fuels for both domestic and industrial use. It burns with little smoke and ash, and wherever it has been used in this country it has proved entirely satisfactory, and has found ready sale as fast as it has been produced. The lack of other fuel in many European countries is now being supplied in part by an increased use of peat. According to United States commerce reports, 216 peat machines were in operation in Norway in 1917, compared with 55 in 1916 and 36 in 1914. Among these were two automatic machines, each costing $13,400, having a daily capacity of 30 to 40 tons of fuel, and requiring only two men for its operation.

Peat consumed in a properly designed gas producer yields gas of good quality and in abundant quantity in comparison with the yield from coal, as well as many valuable byproducts. It is perhaps the most effective utilization of peat fuel for generating heat and power, because peat that is to be used in this way does not need to be carefully prepared nor so thoroughly dried as peat that is to be consumed under steam boilers.

Nature of Peat Deposits.

Peat is a dark brown or black material produced by the partial decomposition of mosses, sedges, and other vegetable matter in marshes and like places. Most of the peat deposits in this country occur in depressions in poorly drained areas in regions where the temperature of the air and soil is low in summer and the humidity of the air is high. The most extensive peat beds are found in New England and around the Great lakes, where the climate and the topography are favorable to the accumulation of partly decomposed vegetable matter. Many deposits are found also in the Atlantic coastal plain, from New Jersey southward to Florida. In regions of heavy rainfall along the Pacific coast peat bogs occur wherever the drainage is so greatly interrupted that the soil becomes permanently saturated with water.

It is estimated that more than 11,000 square miles of swamp land in the United States contains peat beds of good quality, and that the total available fuel in these deposits would amount to more than 12,000,000,000 tons, a quantity that, if it could be distributed, would furnish heat and power for the entire country for many years. Much of this material is in states that have no known deposits of coal and that account of their cold climate and their manufacturing industries consume large quantities of fuel, a constantly increasing percentage of which has to be bought by rail and water from distant mines. According to a recent estimate made by Prof. E. K. Soper in a paper on the peat deposits of Minnesota, published by the Minnesota geological survey, more than 6,000,000,000 tons of air dried peat fuel can be obtained from deposits in that state alone. The utilization of these deposits would augment the local fuel supply and incidently would relieve the strain on our transportation facilities by furnishing fuel to an area where coal is now brought by the longest haul.

Peat produced by the decomposition of sphagnum moss is so antiseptic and absorbent that it is used as a dressing for wounds and is an excellent substitute for medicated cotton. This fact was recognized many years ago in Europe, where Sphagnum peat is now extensively used in preparing surgical dressings. According to Professor Soper, who has made a detailed study of the peat deposits in northern United States, there are many square miles of sphagnum bog in the northern counties of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan that would supply material suitable for antiseptic applications. It will not be necessary to incur the expense of deep excavation, for immense quantities of sphagnum can be taken from the upper parts of the deposits. Sphagnum peat is also abundant in Maine, and some is found in New York and northeastern Pennsylvania.

Peat has frequently been used as a source of charcoal and coke, of various by-products from coke retorts, such as those obtained from the distillation of wood and of fuel and illuminating gas, as well as in making paper, substitutes for wood, and packing material. The prospective value of the peat deposits of the country as a source of these products is much larger than their value as a source of fuel.

Tommie Pets the Fritzies.

Capt. Coningsby Dawson, in Good Housekeeping.

I wouldn't think that men would go over to learn how to be kind, but they do. There's no kinder creater in the whole world than the average Tommy. He is a friend of any stray animal he finds. He shares his last franc with a dog who isn't his pal. He risks his life inconsequently to rescue anyone wounded.

When he's gone over the top with bomb and bayonet for the express purpose of "getting in" the Hun, he makes a comrade of the Fritzie he captures. You'll see them coming down the battered trenches with some scared lad of a German at his side. He's gabbling away making throat noises and signs, smiling and doing his very late best to be intelligible. He pats the Hun on the back, hands him cigarettes and cigarets, exchanges souvenirs and shares with him his last luxuries if anyone interferes with his Fritzie refusing to fight. When they come to a cage where the prisoner has to be locked over, the farewells of these comrades who acquaintance has been made at bayonet point are often as absurd as they are affecting.

I suppose one only learns the value of kindness when he feels the need of it himself. The men "out there" have said good-by" to everything they loved, but they've got to love, someone—so they have given their affections to captured Fritzies. Poor fellows who've collected a shell—in fact to anyone who's worse off than themselves.

Lincoln and the Kittens.

From Manford's Magazine.

President Lincoln was as sensitive to moral impressions as the test paper of a chemist. The results of a battle pained him as much though he himself were among the killed or had lost a brave son. This sympathy—that is, his power of putting himself in another's place—extended even to animals.

On the day on which Grant's army began its final advance the president sat in a room at the telegraph office at City Point, reading telegrams and examining a pocket-map. Three little kittens were running about the hut, in which was the president of the nation, whose fate was in the scales, picked up the kittens, placed them on the table, and said:

"You poor little miserable creatures, what brought you in this camp of warriors? Where is your mother?"

"The mother is dead," answered the colonel in charge.

"Then she can't grieve for them," said the president, with a sigh, "as many a poor mother is grieving for the son who has fallen in battle. Ah, kitties, thank God you are cats, and can't understand this terrible strife.

"There, now go, my little friends," wiping the dirt from their eyes with his handkerchief; "that is all I can do for you. Colonel, get them good milk and don't let them starve. There is too much starvation going on in this land, anyhow. Let us mitigate it when we can."

The great president, even at such a crisis, could, as Admiral Porter says, "find time to look at God's creatures, and be solicitous for their comfort."

Scotland's Bit.

From the Minneapolis Journal.

Little has been said of Scotland's part in the war, but close followers of events have given the Scotch people credit for the great part they have taken in the attempt to keep the world sweet and free. More than 200,000 Scotchmen are under arms, or have suffered death or wounds. In the cities and towns there are no more eligible men fit to bear arms. They have all gone. Scotland is now a land of old men, crippled men, boys and women—and the boys are looking forward eagerly for a chance to do their part. The people do not complain. It is war.

The Scotch fight it out to the last available man. That is the spirit. And as for the Scotchmen in the trenches, the Germans know their mettle. This and their kilts have won them the title born of thorough German understanding, of "Ladies from Hell." Scotch music, Scotch poetry and Scotch history tell the tale. The Scotchman is a born fighter, and he never gives up. These men have not failed the call of their country nor the call of humanity, and they will not fail. Scotland is a small country, but nearly 1,000,000 of soldiers have come from her mines, her mills and her fields to make way for liberty. It is a great and noble record—but just what might have been expected. "Does he blench from the helm when the wind blows highest? He blenches not."

CHANGE IN THE FARMER'S LIFE

"Making a Living" Idea Has Developed Into a "Money Making Fact."

A few years ago and not so many at that—most farmers were satisfied if they saw ahead of them the opportunity to make a fair living, a reasonable competence in their failing years, and an assurance of an existence for their families. They worked hard, and tilled their acres with this end in view. Honest struggle, earnest effort and a true conception of upright manhood, together with the increasing knowledge that upon the fruits of their endeavor rested the structure of the world, whose people had to be fed and maintained. Economy in method, improved conditions of working, have added to the farmer's possibilities, and today instead of being a plodder for an existence, which his early training had bred into him, he has become the bulwark of the nation, and, as such, has become elevated to a position where his word and his work are recognized as the factors it was always intended they should be. He is now the man of business—of big business. He has forced an appreciation of his work, and the true value has been placed upon it. The big men of the country today are the farmers, who, with business acumen and forensic forethought are able to tell you—from their books—what it costs to produce a bushel of wheat or a pound of wool.

All of which is intended to prove that farming is a business, as much as banking or selling a suit of clothes. It is an industrial business, with more certain profits than accompany any other line of trade. It is a manufacturing enterprise, devoid of any of the dangers that the frills of fashion's follies and desires force upon ordinary pursuits. Food is something that all must have and the farmer produces it. The cheaper it can be produced the less will be the cost to the consumer. And this is one of the chief thoughts of the farmer. Within the memory of the ten-year-old boy there have been improvements in machinery, changes in methods, scientific discoveries of chemicals as adapted to agriculture, all of which have lessened cost of production and made possible the cultivation of increased acres. In some parts these things have brought about more intensified agriculture, growing heavier crops on less acres. Improved machinery and demand for greater production have led another class in search of larger areas, where their ability may cope with the growing of a greater number of bushels. That is one of the reasons why Western Canada lands have recently come into such demand. These, at from twenty to thirty dollars an acre, and producing the prodigious crops that are claimed for them, have attracted thousands of American settlers, while other thousands have gone out into the lands in the Western states. But, as to the Canada lands, there is this to say of them, today they are cheap, and if they will yield sufficient in one year to pay the cost of the entire purchase, why should not there be a demand. The country is well settled, and settlement is increasing. As evidence of the growth of the three Western Provinces into whose territories the Canadian Government invites settlers, recent reports show the following increases from 1913 to 1917 inclusive:

	Value of Field Crops 1913	1917
Manitoba	$ 64,557,000	$137,470,550
Saskatchewan	129,376,000	349,488,200
Alberta	46,712,000	176,965,800
Total	$240,645,000	$663,924,550

The total value of field crops for 1917 was $663,924,550, produced on less than 50,000,000 acres of land.

Further evidence of prosperity and progress is found in the Government estimate of the value of farm lands, and increase in value since 1908:

	1908	1916
Manitoba	27.30	32.03
Saskatchewan	20.40	23.07
Alberta	18.20	22.18

It will be observed that the average price of lands has not kept pace with their producing value. It is therefore pointed out that the opportunities for the purchase of high-class land is still within the reach of those with limited means.

A good idea of advancement in a country's progress may be obtained by a knowledge of what has been done in the production of cattle, and when these figures are studied in connection with Western Canada, a country whose fame having been heralded as a grain-growing country, giving the idea that that was what it was mostly adapted to, it will be realized that there is there a vast storehouse of wealth awaiting those who choose to take advantage of it. In the three provinces in 1912 there were—horses, milch cows, other cattle, sheep and swine, four million head, while in 1917 the number was seven million.

In 1901 the entire population was 419,512; in 1916 1,698,220.

One marvels at the rapid progress of the United States during the nineteenth century. But America's opportunities for growth at the beginning of that century were nothing compared to the opportunities which are Canada's at the present time.

The fact that Canada has as its next door neighbor a nation of over 100,000,000—the richest nation in the world—is bound to have a stimulating effect on its progress. Already one sees signs of it on every hand.

Canada not only has the largest area of unoccupied, but fertile, land of any country, but this land is already made available by a network of railways. Cost of production of grain is lower than elsewhere, while the prices are on a basis of those of the United States.—Advertisement.

The Makers.

Booth Tarkington, the novelist, met in a New York book store a young lady who was buying books to send to the soldiers.

"I think I ought to send them serious, heavy books—history and so on—don't you?" she doubtfully inquired.

"Good gracious, no!" said Mr. Tarkington. "Send them novels, rousing novels, and nothing else. History? What do they want with history? Why, they're making it!"

Swift & Company's 1918 Year Book

shows that Swift & Company sells the meat from a steer for less money than the live steer cost!

Proceeds from the sale of the hide, fat, and other by-products covered all expense of dressing, refrigeration, freight, selling expense and the profit of $1.29 per steer as shown by Swift & Company's 1917 figures as follows:

Average price paid for live cattle per steer	$84.45
Average price received for meat	68.97
Average price received for by-products	24.09
Total received	93.06
This leaves for expenses and profit	8.61
Of which the profit per steer was	1.29

J. W. WATERMAN & SON

Mr. R. R. McElmuray, of Wellington, Mo., arrived in Klemme Monday for a visit with his brother Art. We understand that Mr. R. R. McElmuray will enter the barber business with his brother and will make Klemme his future home. We welcome Mr. McElmuray to our city.

Andrew and Jake Pies arrived in Klemme Saturday on business. They have purchased a garage at Rinard where they will go into the automobile business this year. We wish the boys the best of luck and prosperity.

Mr. A. L. Emerson left last Monday for Adel, Iowa, where he has accepted a position. The Emerson family will move to that place as soon as they can locate a suitable residence. Klemme friends regret their leaving but wish them good luck in their new home.

We received a very interesting letter from Walt Bloom this week. He wishes all his Klemme friends good luck. Mr. Bloom is at Redwood City, Cal., and has gone into the saw mill industry.

A Disappearing Island.

At Lake Orion, in Michigan, there is a certain mysterious island which comes to the surface each summer, only to disappear again every winter. Quite regularly, along the middle of August, the island bobs up above the waters of the lake, and down it goes again about the middle of February. Once some farmers of that part of the country loaded the island with heavy stones, thinking that, when it went down the next time, it would stay down. But, when it was summer once more, up came the mysterious island as serene as ever. This is one of the most famous of the curious floating islands.—Christian Science Monitor.

NOTICE OF MASS MEETING

Klemme People Requested to Meet Monday Night At City Hall To Discuss Electric Light Situation

Every citizen of Klemme is requested to be present at a mass meeting which will be held at the City Hall next Monday night at 8:00.

The purpose of this meeting is to discuss the electric light situation which has arisen at this time. The Iowa Falls Company insist on a 10 per cent raise on the price of light current. This is a violation of the franchise as it does not call for any raise. Klemme has not been paying the 10 per cent raise and they do not intend to. The Iowa Falls Company are breaking their contract by so doing, and what will hinder them from another raise, if they once get started?

This is a question that concerns every user of electricity in Klemme and it is to your interest to be at the meeting Monday night.

This thing has got to be settled and the sooner the better.

J. D. G. Houghton of Goodell, the candidate for County Clerk, was calling on Klemme friends here last Thursday.

FOUR MORE KLEMME BOYS ENLIST IN THE NAVY

Last Friday Ernest Lewis and Geo. Hoppe went over to Mason City and enlisted in the Navy as apprentice seamen. Monday Tom Rhodes and William Dore went to Mason City to enlist in the Navy as firemen. These young men have the right spirit and have shown that they are not slackers. We wish them good luck and hope for their safe return after the awr. They are now waiting their call to go into training at the Great Lakes Naval Training camp and will perhaps be called in a few weeks, or whenever Uncle Sam needs them.

McADOO SANCTIONS BUILDING OF HOMES

Declares Necessary Construction Not Unpatriotic. Only Non-Essential Building Should Be Postponed

In conference with Secretary of the Treasury, W. G. McAdoo, March 16th, with reference to an article which appeared under a Washington headline February 4th, appealing to the public to refrain from building homes during the War, which read as follows: "Unless there is a real shortage of houses for war-workers, I strongly advise that materials, valuable labor and credit be not used for this purpose," Secretary McAdoo stated to a committee, consisting of A. C. Johnson, Dubuque, Iowa, H. C. Scearce, Mooresville, Ind., and J. R. Moorehead, Kansas City, Mo., which was sent to Washington in the interest of the Lumber Industry, that his views were more fully expressed in his letter of February 22nd, addressed to Mr. Frank W. Connor, Washington representative of the American Lumberman, and also in his letter of March 15th, to Mr. Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, copies of which were given the Committee, with the consent of Mr. McAdoo to give such publicity to same as might be necessary to correct any misconception of his views upon this subject. The letter to Mr. Connor in full is as follows:

"You have asked me for an elaboration of my statement concerning the desirability of restricting at this time unnecessary building operations.

"It is only by subordinating local and personal interests to the general welfare, and by enforcing the most rigid economy in matters of pubic and private enterprises, as well as in matters of personal expenditure, that the United States can hope to bear its part in the financial burden of the war and to release sufficient labor and materials for war purposes without depletion of our own resources.

"It is impossible to lay down a hard and fast rule as to what every patriotic citizen should do in order to live up to his duty in this connection. Things that are necessary for the life and health of the people, must, of course, be procured. So it is with the building of homes. It is obvious that it is unnecessary for me to elaborate the point that building operations absorb the very materials and the very class of labor and the very kind of money that the Government requires most urgently at this time.

"Where it is a question of building a new home simply because it would afford greater comfort, the operation should not be undertaken—be it on account of sanitary conditions or because, without such new construction, other operations essential at this time for the welfare of the country would suffer—there is no doubt that the work should be undertaken. This applies equally to construction work in cities and towns and in farming districts.

"Everybody should weigh conscientiously in his own mind whether or not it is his own comfort and convenience or the National welfare that moves him in his purpose. If that is done honorably I do not think there will be any doubt as to the proper course to be pursued in each case."

We quote only those paragraphs from the Secretary's letter to Mr. Gompers, reiterating his position with reference to building operations as follows:

"I have your letters of February 18th, inclosing copy of a resolution adopted by the Building Trades Council of San Francisco, in which it is stated that I have been reported in the public press as having 'appealed to property owners not to construct any homes or buildings during the War.' This is entirely erroneous. I have said that building operations which are not required to protect the health or provide for the comfortable needs of our people, or to supply facilities necessary for the proper conduct of business essential to the successful prosecution of the War, should be postponed.

"As you know, I have no authority to direct that building operations be curtailed. I have merely suggested that unnecessary building of that kind be postponed until the end of the War. Such postponement would, I am sure, help win the War, but every patriotic man must be determined by his own conscience in the matter that must decide for himself if he can postpone the erection of a contemplated building until the War is over. Compliance with this suggestion may cause some inconveniences which are to be greatly deplored, but such inconveniences are an unavoidable incident to war. The situation must be viewed from a national and not from a local standpoint."

CLEAN UP NOTICE

The public is most earnestly requested and advised that all garbage, manure and waste of whatsoever kind shall be removed from yards, vacant lots, streets and alleys, and that constant and persistent effort should be made to keep the town clean.

Dumping refuse, manure or waste of any kind on vacant lots, streets or alleys is not permitted. The town dumping ground is maintained as a place for disposing of waste and for the burial of dead animals.

Attention should be given to this matter and your garbage cleaned up not later than May 1st, 1918.

All persons violating the above rules will be prosecuted.

What Does "War Time" Mean To You

Are you complaining because "war time" means coal shortage; less sugar in your coffee; bad business; less money than you think you ought to make?

What about the boys who are fighting for you in France?

For you—a little economy and deprivation. For them the trenches; the pitiless storms of rain and sleet; the ceaseless deafening bombardment of the guns; hunger, cold and fever; wounds and death.

That you may dwell in peace, plenty, and security, they sacrifice everything, give everything, brave everything, and face a nameless grave with a smile and a song.

What are you doing, or giving, or sacrificing for them?

The Third Liberty Loan

is your opportunity to prove the patriotism that is in your heart and on your lips.

Your opportunity to show yourself worthy of the heroism, the devotion, the self-renunciation of your soldiers and sailors.

Your opportunity to share, in some small degree, the sufferings of those who stand ready to make the supreme sacrifice for you.

All you can do is little enough. You simply lend your money. Do it, and be glad that you can do so much and sorry you can do no more.

It has been proposed to construct a railway tunnel under the Firth of Forth Scotland, paralleling the famous bridge now spanning that body of water, and to pay for the tunnel by making it largely a coal mining proposition. Mining engineers point out that coal is now being mined on both sides of the Firth from the same seams and that much of this excavating is done under water. At this point the estuary is only about two miles wide and it is contended that a continuous passage could be made beneath it by properly co-ordinating the mining operations. In this way what would otherwise probably prove to be too costly an improvement could be made with profit

The ancient Indians of Peru are now regarded as the world's greatest weavers This noteworthy revelation in the history of textile art is the result of the critical examination of many rich and beautiful tapestries and other fabrics executed by the gifted ancient Indian population of Peru. Though buried three centuries or more in the sandy desert after being made with primitive hand looms and other weaving implements, these wonderful fabrics are now found to be superior to those turned out by the automatic looms of the great mills of today The primitive Peruvian hand looms consisted of two sticks one at the top and one at the bottom

FARMER CONVINCED . LOYALTY IS BEST

After Being Indicted For Pro-German Utterances and Lectured He Sees Light.

Primghar, Ia., April 5.—Hans Peterson, farmer of Carroll township, had aroused his neighbors so by his alleged expresed sympathy with Germany and enmity of England that talk of drastic action was indulged in. Wiser counsel prevailed, and he was brought to Primghar and bound over to the grand jury on $1,000 bail. Incidentally he explained that his prejudices were taught him from early childhood, and he couldn't overcome them. So he was given a good talk about the necessity in a democracy of abiding by the decision of the people, whether he favored the war or not, when once the action was taken. The history of the war, including Germany's terrible attack on Belgium, was given to him in brief, and before the interview was over he saw new light. On his return he erected a pole in his front yard, ran up the American flag, and even went around the next day to his neighbors to apologize for his previous mistaken attitude and express his willingness to aid in every patriotic movement.

COAL SITUATION IN STATE IS DESCRIBED

Des Moines, Ia., April 5.—Iowa's experience the past winter with a coal shortage will be looked on a year hence as a mere "picnic" compared to what will happen to this state next winter.

This is the statement made at the office of Fuel Commissioner Charles Webster today in the light of the facts which the fuel heads are now facing. And the consumers must face these facts and store their coal early, making it possible for the Iowa mines to operate during the summer months or be without coal the coming winter Commissioner Webster declares.

Among the conditions which now signify that Iowa will suffer for coal next winter the following may be cited:

By the new zoning system, which will not be changed to any extent in the coming months, Iowa is shut out of 2,000,000 of eastern coal which she has always hitherto received.

This 2,000,000 tons must be made up from an increased production in Iowa mines.

In order to increase their output 2,000,000 tons Iowa mines must work during the spring and summer months.

Iowa mines have been shutting down for the past six weeks and there are more coal mines idle or operating on short time now than in a normal season

Wholesale dealers who have been out over the state report they are unable to sell their product, and the retail dealers say it's no use for them to stock up because they can't sell their coal. The mines say it's no use for them to operate because they can't sell their output.

Coal in this vicinity is now selling at 75 cents per ton higher than it was a year ago.

In the First and Fourth Iowa districts the federal inspectors, after looking over the field, recommended a cut of 30 cents a ton recently at the mine and this cut has been made The First district includes the counties of Appanoosa and Wayne, while the Fourth district includes the counties of Boone and Webster. In the other Iowa coal producing districts, which it will be observed include the district of larger consumption, no cut has been made The federal inspectors after going over these districts reported to the government fuel heads at Washington that costs of operation in the other Iowa districts were such as not to warrant any cut in price.

LITTLE SILK FLAG SELLS FOR $2,000

Early, Ia., April 5.—The feature of the Red Cross sale which is being held here was the singing of "America" by the 3-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs Kirkpatrick and the auctioning of the little silk flag she waved as she sang the song. The flag brought $2,000. The sale has already amounted to above $12,000 and is expected to continue a day or two longer and bring in a considerably larger sum.

REMSEN SOLDIER BOY'S FUNERAL IS HELD

Remsen, Ia., April 5.—The funeral of Private Albert Fromme, the first draft man from the county to die, was held here Wednesday afternoon.

The body lay in state yesterday and thousands of people passed to view it It is estimated that 1,500 people attended the funeral.

Private Fromme died at Camp Dodge Monday after a short illness with pneumonia. He was 28 years old and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Fromme farmers near Remsen

MAYOR CHANDLER OF ODEBOLT RESIGNS

Death of His Wife Recently Believed Responsible For His Retirement.

Odebolt, Ia., April 5.—Mayor A. L Chandler tendered his resignation to the new town council when it convened to sit as a board of review. After swearing in the new councilmanic body the mayor tendered his resignation and insisted upon its acceptance

While close friends had been aware of a desire on the part of the mayor to give up these duties on account of his age, the passing away of Mrs. Chandler just before the recent election and for other reasons, it was quite generally believed he would serve for a time at least.

Henry Hanson was prevailed to accept the place and was officially installed immediately.

Onawa, Ia., April 6.—Alvin Cromwell, of Smithland, was arrested here, Tuesday by the sheriff. It is charged he was eloping with Mrs. Chilton, wife of Bert Chilton, of Smithland, upon whose farm he had been working for the past six months. The Chiltons have two small children and Mrs. Chilton is said to have had the youngest one with her Cromwell is reported to be an ex-convict, having served a term of five years in prison. Mr. Chilton came to Onawa after his wife and will not prosecute Cromwell.

NONPARTISAN LEAGUE NOT IN POLITICS IN IOWA

Des Moines, Ia., April 6.—The Nonpartisan league will not take any active part in Iowa politics this year its leaders here state; but the organization work will continue.

That farmers are looking for some sort of an organization to fight any proposed paved road schemes is the statement of active farmers seen here at the recent farmers' gatherings Some of them are "scared," it is said, over paved road talk which has been more or less abroad in the state for the past few years, and to escape paved roads will be glad to join almost any sort of an organization which will oppose paved roads.

The Nonpartisan league in its solicitations of memberships among the farmers is not proposing any definite program at this time. The promoters asking farmers to join declare that the farmers should be organized to protect their own interests inasmuch as all other lines of business are organized and it is only through organization that they can escape being exploited by other organized interests.

FORMER IOWA SENATOR BITTER AGAINST GERMAN

Washington, D. C., April 6.—In a speech denouncing the German language press, former Senator Lafe Young, of Iowa, declared that "if the United States Senate would expel Senator La Follette it would be like driving a whole German division from the western front."

Mr. Young declared that if he were in authority all German language newspapers would stop immediately. He assailed the teaching of German in the elementary schools, declaring that in more than 1,000 schools in Iowa and other western states the day's session even now is closed with the singing of the "Deutschland Uber Alles" and "Die Wacht Am Rhine"

ELEVEN MEN TAKEN FROM MONONA COUNTY

Onawa, Ia., April 6.—All of the registered men asked by the government from Monona county for service in the Aerial squadron as mechanicians and gas-engine men have been enrolled. They will meet at Onawa and leave here Friday evening with other contingents of nearby counties for Kansas City, where they will take a two months' course at the Sweeney Auto school before they are assigned to their stations. Four of these are Onawa boys and all are in class one of the draft.

SUPERINTENDENT GIVEN BIG SALARY BOOST

Denison, Ia., April 6.—Prof. F. N. Olry, who has been the county superintendent of schools for two terms was re-elected for another term by the presidents of the various school boards of the county He received 28 out of a possible 30. As an appreciation of his work the salary of the office was made $3,000, which was a raise of over 100 per month. The deputy, Miss Flynn, was voted $100 a month.

FIX PRICES OF COAL MINED IN MARION COUNTY

Washington, D. C., April 6.—The fule administration has announced a revision of maximum prices at which coal may be sold at the mines in Marion countw, Iowa. Prices were fixed March 11, but are now altered. The new prices, effective April 5, are $2.70 for run of mine; $2.95 for prepared sizes and $2.45 for screenings. Prices in the March 11 order were $2.75, $3.10 and $2, respectively.

DUBUQUE DOCTOR IS CONVICTED BY JURY

Dubuque, Ia., April 6.—Dr. C. A. Snyder was found guilty of murder in the second degree by a jury last night. The jury was out a little over three hours. The defendant was granted 10 days' time to file a motion for a new trial. He is still at liberty on a bond of $12,500.

Rapid time was made in the trial of the case. The jury was secured last Friday and the closing arguments started Tuesday. The case went to the jury at 3:50 yesterday afternoon and verdict was returned at 7:15.

WOULD BOYCOTT ALL MILWAUKEE PRODUCTS

Iowa City, Ia., April 6.—"Made in Germany" and "made in Milwaukee" will amount to the same if Samuel W. Mercer, former president of the Iowa State Manufacturers' association has his way. He suggests, because of Milwaukee's big socialist vote in Wisconsin's senatorial election, that all products manufactured in Milwaukee be boycotted from this state.

HOD CARRIERS OUT ON STRIKE IN DES MOINES

Des Moines, Ia., April 6.—With 500 hod carriers and other common laborers on strike this morning the building industry in Des Moines was halted. Leaders say more than 1,000 will be out before night.

OSKALOOSA HAS FIRE, LOSS OF OVER $50,000

Oskaloosa, Ia., April 6.—The three story Reigal building occupied by stores on the ground floor with offices above was destroyed by fire today. The loss is estimated at more than $50,000.

TWO CHILDREN BURNED HANDLING PHOSPHORUS

Onawa, Ia., April 6.—Richard and George Selleck, two small sons of Edwin Selleck of Onawa, were severely burned by phosphorus. The eldest son, John, who is assistant Scout master, had been experimenting with the phosphorus and left it in the reach of the children. Both of the boys have burned hands and it will probably leave the youngest one with a crippled hand as the flesh was burned to the bone in several places.

WILL TRAIN EXPERTS AT STATE COLLEGE

Government to Send 500 Enlisted Men There Middle of This Month.

Ames, Ia., April 3.—A dispatch received today from the war department in Washington indicates that the army will send 500 enlisted men to Iowa State college about the middle of April for special trade and technical training by the engineering division of the college. "Please rush preparations," says the telegram. "We are proceeding with calling men and the provost marshal general advises that they may be ready as early as April 15 to 18."

"Negotiations for this special war emergency work by the college have been underway for a considerable time," says acting President E. W. Stanton. "The arrangement between the war department and the state board of education will cover a period of six months, although it may be renewed later. During this period we will provide all the necessary instruction and shop equipment for training these 500 men, the war department reimbursing the college on an agreed cost basis. The college also undertakes to arrange for the housing and feeding of the men."

While three lines of instruction will be given, the major portion will be in auto mechanics. Of the 500 men to be sent to Ames, 425 are to receive special training in various phases of auto mechanics; 25 are to be trained as mechanics, and 50 are to get special instruction in blacksmithing. One instructor is to be provided for each 15 men, and the government is to furnish one truck or tractor for each 25 men.

The coming of these men will in no wise interfere with the regular engineering instruction of the college, either now or later, the facilities being adequate for both lines of work, especially during the summer season

IOWA AUTO OWNERS DELAY GETTING LICENSES

Des Moines, Ia., April 3.—A considerable number of the automobile owners of the state failed to get under the wire for a renewal of their auto licenses by April 1, according to W S. Allen, the secretary of state.

"There were some 298,000 machines in the state on January 1, subject to registration," said Mr. Allen. "Approximately 150,000 of these have thus far failed to renew. Of course it may be that some of these machines have been discarded, but by far the greatest number of them will renew their licenses."

The law provides that every automobile in the state must be registered on January 1 The owners are given until April 1, however, to make application for a renewal of their licenses and pay the fees. After that date a penalty is imposed amounting to 10 per cent of the fee for the first month of delinquency, and after that 5 per cent per month until paid.

FOOD HOARDER PAID FINE WITH BAD CHECK

Marshaltown, Ia., April 3 —When John O'Connor, a well-to-do farmer living near Dike, Ia., was reported to have hoarded 40 sacks of wheat flour, Charles J. Adams, county food administrator of Grundy county, ordered him to return it to the merchant from whom he bought it. The flour was not returned, and Adams, accompanied by an officer, went to the O'Connor home to secure it. The administrator imposed a fine of $100, which was to be turned over to the Red Cross. Upon attempting to cash the check, it is alleged, it was found that O'Connor had no funds in the bank on which he drew the check.

ODEBOLT SCHOOLS ARE HARD HIT BY THE WAR

Odebolt, Ia., April 3.—The local high school has felt the effects of the war the past week in the loss of two members of the faculty. Principal F. R. Prusha resigned and went to his home in Cedar Rapids to care for his aged parents left alone by a brother being called in the draft. Prof. M. H. Shearer, instructor in manual training and agriculture, resigned to enlist in the United States radio service. He left for Newport, R. I., yesterday. Manual training will be discontinued for the remainder of the school year.

TWO SECTION HANDS ARE FOUND MURDERED

Creston, Ia., April 3.—Section Foreman Wilson, of Malvern, came to Creston and positively identified the two men found murdered in a car in a train which came in here from the west Sunday as David Deon and Antone Contarivias, a Mexican and an Italian, who have been working on his section at Malvern. The men left Malvern Saturday night for Creston to spend Sunday. The range of the bullet which caused their death was downward, indicating they had been murdered by being shot from the roof of the car Every available man on the Burlington railway is trying to locate the murderers.

SENATOR KENYON IS TO SPEAK IN WEST

Washington, D. C., April 3.—Senator Kenyon decided to leave Washington Thursday to speak in the Liberty loan drive as far west as the Pacific coast. He will speak four days in Iowa and will speak in Nebraska, Nevada, Wyoming, Idaho, Montana, Washington, Oregon, California, Utah, Colorado and Kansas. Senator Kenyon gave out a statement about his trip tonight, saying he did not think fault would be found with him for absenting himself from Washington during the Liberty loan drive.

SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT OF PLYMOUTH COUNTY

LeMars, Ia., April 3.—At a convention of school district presidents held yesterday, Miss Erna H. Plath was re-elected county superintendent of schools. The vote stood: E. H. Plath, 28; Josephine Winstow, 6. The salary was raised from $1,500 to $1,720 and the deputy superintendents' salary raised from $55 to $75 for nine months.

ASSERTS OTTUMWA IS VERY BAD CITY

Ottumwa, Ia., April 3.—"Ottumwa's officials who possess police powers are absolutely ineffective," declared State Agent H. W. Terrill, law enforcement expert and conductor of raids. "There is no place in Iowa where there is such unanimous unwillingness to enforce the law against bootlegging and disorderly houses as exists in Ottumwa, not only on the part of the city officials but those of Wapello county and the United States marshal's office. Law enforcement in their hands is a ghastly joke."

German Soldiers Are Seen to Literally Butcher Yan

Chicago, April 6.—A ghastly illustration of German hatred of American soldiers is given in a Salvation army letter made public here today by Adjt. Fletcher Agnew. It was written in France by Adjt. R. C. Stabard, who has charge of a Salvation army hut, to Commander Eva Booth, who turned it over to Adjutant Agnew.

"I visited a base hospital recently," says the letter, "and had this story from a sergeant who had passed through one of the raids. The sergeant was horribly wounded by a grenade, and was passed by the Germans as dead. Before the sergeant lost consciousness, however, he saw a dozen Germans overpower three American boys and cut their throats from ear to ear. The sergeant said the murder of the third American was the most horrible. Four Germans held him while a fifth fairly severed his head from his body.

"I have just learned conti... letter, "that this same comp... THINK CZERNIN HAS REACHED PRESIDENT

Members of Austrian Parliament Believe He Did Not Tell All He Knew.

Zurich, April 6—Members of the Austrian parliament believe communications have been opened between the foreign office and President Wilson and have proceeded further than Foreign Minister Czernin's statement indicates, according to the Munich Nachrichten.

COMMENT IN GERMANY.

Amsterdam, April 6.—The German papers comment on Count Czernin's speech in contradictory terms. The Berlin Boersen Courier says Count Czernin evidently does not think that the offensive on the western front has paralyzed the possibility of an understanding.

The Deutsche Tageszeitung attacks the Austrian-Hungarian foreign minister for "his weak placidity."

The Lokal Anzeiger says:

"Berlin will be particularly glad to hear of the manner in which Count Czernin regretted the peace offer of Clemenceau."

YOUNG BERNSTORFF IS SUED FOR LIBEL

German Army Officer Renews Old Scandal Concerning American Woman.

Amsterdam, April 6.—Berlin society is much stirred by a suit for libel against Count Christian Gunther Von Bernstorff, son of the former German ambassador to the United States, by Baron Walter Von Radeck, a member of an old Russian family who lived for many years in England. Count Gunther's wife, who was Mrs. Margaret Vivian Burton Thomason, of Burlington, N. J., and a number of others, including the wife of one of the generals commanding an army on the western front, also are defendants in the suit.

Baron Von Radeck and his wife, according to the Rheinsische Westfalische Zeitung, were divorced in October 1917 and she subsequently married Count Von Bernstorff.

The result was a physical encounter between the two men in which Von Radeck tore the epaulettes from Von Bernstorff's uniform. Thereupon Von Bernstorff declared that Von Radeck was not capable of giving satisfaction as a gentleman and he charged Von Radeck of spying for England.

This resulted in Von Radeck leaving the army and Von Bernstorff being punished by a military court. The baron now charges that Von Bernstorff with 14 others caused his divorce and dismissal from the army by circulating untruthful reports.

Count Christian Gunther Von Bernstorff and Mrs. Thomason were married last December 8. He is 26 years old. He entered the German diplomatic service shortly after the outbreak of the war.

Countess Von Bernstorff is about 30 years old. Her first husband was an American from whom she was divorced, after which she married Baron Von Radeck. She was born in Stroudsburg, Pa., of English parents and was adopted by E. J. Thomason, of Burlington, N. J. After her first marriage she met Baron Von Radeck in New York and they were married in London in 1911. Two years later she filed suit for divorce on the grounds of cruelty and the case dragged on until last October. Four years ago the countess fell heir to an estate of $100,000 from her foster mother.

Baron Von Radeck was formerly an attache of the German embassy in London. His father was a general in the German army.

FORMER CHANCELLOR TALKS OF FUTURE

Picture of Gloom Is Held Up by Michaelis Before German People.

Amsterdam, April 6.—Dr. George Michaelis, former imperial chancellor on leaving to assume his post of president of Pomerania, made an address at Berlin. He said:

"If I were ever again responsible for the government, I would decline to ask a war idemnity. Rather than see our people throw itself into the abyss of materialism, which would be the case if our war expenditures were defrayed by our enemies, we must teach our people to become simple, sober and economical.

"Our time of trial will not end with the termination of the war. Our misery will continue. We must bear it without murmuring. Poverty will be our cook. We must admit we, too, are guilty for this war, not in the political sense for the emperor tried to maintain peace to the last minute, but circumstances have brought us trials which threaten to make money the master of the day. We must save the country from a surrender to materialism."

Each New England state has a law that requires five days to elapse between the application for a license and the marriage of the persons to whom it is issued.

KING OF ITALY TALKS AMERICAN RED CROSS

Says It Has Taught His People Lesson of Feeling of People Over Here.

Rome, April 6.—King Victor Emmanuel in receiving H. P. Davison, chairman of the American Red Cross war council, expressed deep appreciation and admiration for "the manner in which the American Red Cross has shown to Italy the support and sympathy of the American people."

The king said that not only had this in itself been of great value, but the war in which the assistance had been rendered made it doubly valuable. The whole Italian people had been impressed with character of the man sent here by the American people to do the work.

"Italy," the king continued, "feels a very warm spirit of understanding and sentiment for America. Italy delights to think of America as the ally of Italy and knows that the American army and navy are rendering great assistance to her allies.

"The American Red Cross is the messenger telling Italy in a very practical way that America is with her heart and soul. The Italian peoples are profoundly grateful for it all. It is distinct contribution to the winning of the war. It is a supreme expression of international sympathy and good will."

NEGRO JANITOR SAYS —HE KILLED WATCHMAN

Washington, D. C., April 5.—Will Clements, a negro janitor employed at the offices of the committee on public information, confessed last night that he shot James King, a watchman, at the committee headquarters, who was found dead at his post early yesterday. Clements, located after an all day search, told the police that he and King had an argument when he reported for work and that he shot in self-defense after the watchman had drawn a pistol. King's cartridges failed to explode.

Washington, D. C., April 5.—Unusual activity along the entire front was reported at the Italian embassy today, following the of an official war bulletin from Rome. It was announced that patrols were routed at numerous points.

The French lines have held below Amiens and the Germans have defeated with great losses in what probably constituted their most rate effort yet to break in and cut off the communications of this tant base from the south. Similarly, to the east of Amiens the h have maintained a strong defense and prevented the Germans making any important headway here.

This battle, which raged yesterday and virtually all last night, ought along a line of approximately 30 miles south of the Somme. y, according to unofficial dispatches, the Germans switched their to the north of the river and engaged the British along a front of iles, but again were unable to make any progress, except a slight ce near the river.

In the great battle to the south of the Somme the contending armies t with fluctuating fortunes, the French giving some ground in the erly sector of their battle area, but closing the engagement with line not only standing where it was along its southerly course, ven advanced in one or two sectors where the Germans had been ntly thrown back.

As a whole, the entente line may be considered, as the French ial statement puts it, maintained in its entirety. So far the Gerobjective south of Amiens, the railway line to Clermont, is con, the stupendous German effort resulted merely in a slight ection of the fighting front.

DEMAND CANDIDATES PLEDGE LOYALTY

Republicans of Illinois Serve Notice on Prospective Ones What to Expect.

Chicago, April 6 -Notice that the Illinois senatorial campaign next fall will be run on a loyalty basis was served on Mayor William Hale Thompson and Ex-Governor Chas. C Deneen when a members of the republican county committee signed a declaration of principles of unswerving and uncompromising loyalty "Thompson and Dineen are expected to be candidates for the seat of J. Hamilton Lewis.

The committee contains eight "Dineen and 14 Thompson" members and the declaration of the remaining 19 "neutrals" means neither will be able to swing more support into line without subscribing to the loyalty articles.

The declaration was drafted immediately following Tuesday's aldermanic elections here which showed an overwhelming vote against anti-war and near pacifist candidates.

AERO SOCIETY RAPS OFFICIALS

Statements Issued by Government Heads Misleading and Delays Avoidable, It Charges.

MONTHS OF INVESTIGATING

Intimation Given That Many Accidents in Training Due to Improper Organization of the Service.

New York, April 6 -The special investigating committee of the Aeronautical Society of America, which has for several months been studying the aircraft situation with a view to learning the exact cause for the alleged delays in the manufacture and shipping of airplanes to the seat of war has made its official report to the society at a public meeting here.

Charges that virtually all statements issued by government officials with respect to the execution of the aircraft problem had been found to be untrustworthy, and should be disregarded, and that the very vigorous censorship over all matters connected with it had been of no military value, were contained in the report of the committee, which also reported the conviction that the only purpose of the rigor of the censorship was to preclude the country from finding out the character of the official statements.

Accidents in training, while not excessively numerous, were of such a nature, according to the report, as to indicate that they were in part preventable and in part due to improper organization of flying and handling of machines The committee in its report also said that the production of fighting planes was lagging because of lack of cooperation between departments, that the entire system of production was such that delays would grow with the rate of production, and that the Liberty motor while doubtless of good design basically, has been discredited by exaggerated claims of its performances

PEOPLE OF RUSSIA FACING STARVATION

Men Trading Wives and Children For Flour and Other Foods

Washington, D. C., April 6 --Starvation has reached such a point in certain districts of Russia that members of the impoverished classes are selling their wives and children for bags of flour, according to reports reaching this government today through official channels.

Food reserves are exhausted in most parts of the nation, crops are not being planted and many farmer landords are hoarding what supplies they have for extortionate prices.

Officials of the Kuban district have appealed to the peasants to run loose their grain reserves for relief of the starving population in neighboring communities and warned that hoarding may bring mob vengeance

Moscow, the new capital, is on the brink of famine and officials there are making every effort to secure grain from the sugar country

The armies of the Caucasus it is reported are now without bread reserves

Germany, it is pointed out, can have small hope of obtaining foodstuffs from her vanquished neighbor

LOAN PROGRAM IS FINALLY COMPLETED

Workers All Over the Country Ready For Opening of Campaign.

Washington, D. C., April 5 -The legislative program for the Liberty loan was laid last night when congress completed and President Wilson signed the bill authorizing issuance of additional bonds at 4½ per cent.

Earlier in the day the treasury announced that the bonds would mature in 10 years, that the loan campaign, opening Saturday, will continue four weeks until May 4 and that after the initial payment of five per cent on subscriptions of 20, 35 and 40 per cent would be due respectively, on May 28, July 18 and August 15. The amount is $3,000,000,000 and over-subscriptions and the only remaining details to be determined by the treasury are the arrangements for conversion of bonds of the first and second loans into third Liberty bonds.

Within an hour after President Wilson signed the bond bill, the first completed bond of the third Liberty loan came from the press of the bureau of engraving and printing. It was a $50 "baby bond" and was laid aside by James L. Wilmeth, director of the bureau for special disposition to be determined later. Forty thousand more bonds will be ready in the morning, 100000 by Saturday and thereafter they will be turned out at the rate of 500,000 a day.

Reports to the treasurer told of workers all over the country preparing for celebrations Saturday for the opening of the loan campaign and the anniversary of the entry of the United States into the war.

GERMAN PRESS AGAIN SHOWING PESSIMISM

Just a Trace of Dissatisfaction Evident Over Great Losses in the West.

Ottawa, Ont., April 6.—The German press is warning its readers not to expect too much of the offensive in the west, says a Reuter dispatch from London.

The Cologne Gazette says extraordinary rumors are prevalent in Germany regarding the extent of the German "victory" and are inspired by the enemy who is exaggerating the Teutonic successes for the purpose of depressing the masses through disappointment.

The war correspondent of the Frankfurter Zeitung, says that hitherto it has been impossible exactly to estimate the German losses, but it is unnecessary to jump to the conclusion that they are enormous because the victory was difficult. He states that the enemy's resistance is hardening and has been favored by rain and stormy weather that have greatly hampered the offensive operations.

The German-Swiss Zurich Poste, war expert writes that Germany has reserves and the continuance of the violent attacks demand immense sacrifices.

The Frankfurter Zeitung, attacks Von Hindenburg for attempting to override the reichstag. It appears that Von Hindenburg telegraphed the vice president of the reichstag as follows

"The fresh sacrifices of blood forced upon us have not been made for nothing. I know that the reichstag understands this and that it will champion a strong German peace."

The newspaper, commenting on this says:

"With all the respect and admiration with which we treat a commander, we feel that Von Hindenburg's intervention in politics is the most serious thing that has happened, as yet, for the fatherland. He is encouraging the pan-fatherland. He is encouraging the pan-German annexationists, who are already exploiting the western offensive.

CANADIAN WHEAT PRICE O. K.

Winnipeg, April 5.—The board of grain supervisors for Canada has issued a statement expressing its opinion that the present price of Canadian western wheat, $2.21 a bushel for No. 1 northern at Fort William, Ont., and Port Arthur, Ont., was a reasonable one for the crop of 1918. The board said that in reaching this conclusion it had considered carefully the necessity of stimulating production the price of coarse grains and the increased cost of production. The board said this price should be guaranteed at once by the government

PROFITEER IS FOUND IN ALL COUNTRIES

One German Concern Made 173 Per Cent But Cleverly Concealed It.

Washington, D. C., April 5.—The war profiteer is a cosmopolite, peculiar to no one nation, developments here showed today. Disclosure has just been made in Berlin, cables reported, that the Daimler Motor works has been making 173 per cent profit, reporting only 11 per cent to the government examiners.

Simultaneously the war department here today disclosed a profiteering scheme by which the government was to pay $99,000 rental for a hotel at Cape May, N. J., whereas the total value of the structure was far less than this, according to sworn statement of its owners.

Consequently the department today cancelled its contract for the building which was to have been used as a reconstruction hospital "for the duration of the war and one year afterwards."

REED FIGHTS OVERMAN BILL

Missouri Senator's Two-Hour Speech Interrupted For a Jab at Burleson.

Washington, D. C., April 5.—Opponents of the Overman bill to authorize the president to reorganize government departments and agencies for the war period, made a strong attack in the Senate.

In an address of two hours, opposing the legislation, urging amendments specifically limiting the proposed powers, Senator Reed, of Missouri, democrat, declared the president, under the pending draft, could "wipe out and destroy the Interstate Commerce commission, transfer questions of the federal trade commission to Chairman George Creel, of the bureau of public information, and give those of the federal reserve board to the comptroller of the currency, or any banker or private individual.

When Senators Fletcher, of Florida, and Wolcott, of Delaware, democrats, declared their confidence that the president would not make such use of the bill, Senator Reed urged that they should not object, therefore, to special exceptions.

While Senator Reed was speaking, Postmaster General Burleson, who took the Overman bill to the capital, where it was introduced, appeared in the president's room just outside the Senate chamber, and conferred with a number of supporters of the measure. Referring to Mr. Burleson's visit, the Missouri senator declared he would not "object to replying to cabinet members' arguments if they were made on the floor of the Senate, rather than in whispered conversation in the cloak rooms."

Senator Borah, of Idaho, republican, said the powers of the Interstate Commerce commission had practically been dispensed with, owing to the taking over by the government of control of the railroads, and asked what could be expected from the commission in reviewing rates fixed by the president and based upon financial needs of the roads, growing out of the war. While the commission's powers have been circumscribed, Senator Reed replied, it still retains many powers of a "wholesome" character.

HINDENBURG PLAYS THE ALLIES' GAME

Slaughtering of German Troops For Small Gains Means Defeat in End.

BY J. W. T. MASON.

New York, April 5.—Resumption by Von Hindenburg of his slaughter of German man power to reach Amiens is playing the game of the allies.

As long as General Foch is able to save Amiens and prevent the Germans from cutting the Amiens-Paris railway, every new assault ordered by Von Hindenburg must increase the inevitable reaction in Germany against the blood lust of the Hohenzollerns. The small gains made by the Germans in the last 24 hours are not worth the casualties. German losses in these operations are two to three times the losses of the British and French, who are remaining on the defensive.

Foch's policy of caution is being fully rewarded by Von Hindenburg's ferocious recklessness. It is advantageous for the allies to incite the Hohenzollerns into these increasing sacrifices of German troops. Each destruction of a German division at this time is a victory for the allies, whether or not the Germans gain a small additional area of territory. The territory certainly will be restored to the rightful owners at the peace conference, but the peace conference will not come until the blood letting of Germany has worked its cure.

Von Hindenburg's renewed drive toward Amiens makes him once more the leach who is unconsciously curing Germany of her military ills. General Foch's great purpose now is to remain steadfastly on the defensive, holding his lines for further German blood letting. If this is done successfully, Foch will have won his right to be regarded as a great allied commander.

GET VALUE OF WIRE COMPANIES.

Washington, D. C., April 5.—The Interstate Commerce commission today ordered investigation of the physical valuation of 45 telegraph and cable companies property and of their financial condition similar to the valuation proceedings of valuing railroads under way for several years.

INVESTIGATE PETROLEUM RATES.

Washington, D. C., April 5.—A general investigation of railroad freight rates on petroleum and petroleum products was ordered today by the Interstate Commerce commission.

The investigation was decided on in view of wide differences in the amounts and percentages of recent rate increases sought by the railroads. It appeared, said the order that an equitable adjustment of rates could be effected only by a general investigation covering the whole situation.

LYNCHING TAKEN TO PRESIDENT

U. S. Attorney General Gregory Places Report of Illinois Hanging Before Wilson.

THREATEN MARTIAL LAW

Illinois Governor Calls Conference in Effort to Trail Down the Mob Members.

Bulletin: Springfield, Ill., April 6.—Attorney General Brundage sent a deputy to Collinsville accompanied by a representative of the state adjutant general's office. Lowden declared he is prepared to declare martial law promptly, if necessary to have the laws respected.

"I think I can say for both the attorney general's office and my own that every power with which we are vested will be used to the limit to punish those who are responsible for the violence at Collinsville," concluded the governor's statement.

Washington, D. C., April 6.—Attorney General Gregory took to the cabinet today a report of the lynching of a German, Robert P. Prager, at Collinsville, Ill., last night, for discussion with President Wilson. The government is expected to denounce the mob's lawless act and to express the hope that there will be no repetition elsewhere.

Springfield, Ill., April 6.—After long distance telephone conversations today with federal and county officials at the scene of the lynching of Robert Prager at Collinsville last night, Governor Lowden called a conference with Attorney General Edward J. Brundage.

Collinsville, Ill., April 6.—Robert P. Praeger, 45, alleged pro-German, was taken from hiding in the city hall here early today by a mob of 350 "loyalists" and hanged to a tree two miles west of town. No arrests have been made, although the lynchers were not masked and were said to have been led by prominent citizens.

Early last night Praeger came to Collinsville after evading a patriotic band at Maryville, where he was alleged to have talked socialism and made disloyal remarks. Members of the mob followed and captured him here.

He was compelled to march barefooted and draped with an American flag, down the main street. Police rescued him and him him in the city hall basement.

The mob demanded the prisoner and when refused rushed past authorities and dragged him from his hiding place beneath a pile of tilings. Mayor Siegel's pleadings were disregarded.

Still barefooted, Praeger was led along the old national highway with a noose around his neck. Police and the coroner followed an hour later and found his body dangling from a tree.

Collinsville and Maryville are small mining towns, 15 miles east of St. Louis. While the mob was storming the jail searching for him, Praeger wrote his parents in Dresden, Germany, this note:

"I must this, the 4th day of April, die; please pray for me, my dear parents. This is my last letter and testament."

A second note, also in German, protested his loyalty. As he was jerked upward on the tree Praeger pleaded he was loyal to his country. Mayor Siegel declared today he had found no evidence of disloyalty against Praeger. The victim had taken out his first papers and applied for full citizenship.

Collinsville was quiet today with its miners back at work and apparently in high spirits following last night's activity. Praeger recently had quarreled with the president of the miners' union here, it is reported. Authorities believed today this was connected with the lynching.

Several suspected pro-Germans disappeared from this vicinity immediately following the lynching. Maryville and Collinsville have been hot beds of anti-German acts for months. Maryville's mayor, a citizen of German birth, was forced to kiss the flag two months ago. No suspicion had been directed at him until he defended three men, alleged disloyalists, threatened with violence. Ten men, suspected of pro-Germanism, have been forced to leave the two cities because of threats against them.

Prager was a coal miner and yesterday at Maryville, Ill., in an address on socialism he is said to have made remarks derogatory to President Wilson. Miners there became angry and when they threatened to do him bodily harm he escaped to Collinsville, his home. Some of the miners, however, followed.

The police said that Prager while in their custody had declared he was a registered enemy alien, that he was born in Germany, but that he had taken out his first naturalization papers and had hoped to become an American citizen.

In Prager's pocket was found a long "proclamation" in which he stated his loyalty to the United States and to union labor; and told of his difficulty in entering the miner's union. Prager, yesterday afternoon, put up posters at the Maryville mine, proclaiming his loyalty to the government. When the miners left the workings they were incensed by these proclamations and began to hunt Prager.

Before the conference, Attorney General Brundage said that instructions had been given to begin at once a strenuous attempt to identify members of the mob that hanged Prager with a view to prosecution. It was said that quiet prevails, but that feeling against others suspected of being pro-German until was running high in the vicinity of Collinsville.

FRENCH EDITOR IN U. S. TO BE INVESTIGATED

New York, April 6.—At the request of the French ambassador the activities of Senator Charles Humbert, editor of Le Journal of Paris, in this country will be investigated by Morton E. Lewis, state's attorney general, it was announced here tonight. The inquiry to be begun in New York next week will be conducted in connection with the French government's prosecution of Senator Humbert on a charge of having had transactions with Germany.

The examination of witnesses will take place in private, but it is expected that the disclosures will be made public from time to time. The evidence will be turned over to the French ambassador.

J. B. Ragless, carpenter, 210 W. 60th St., Chicago, Ill., says: "My back gave out completely and I had to quit work. I could hardly endure the pain in my back and nights I tossed and turned, unable to sleep. Often in the morning my back was as stiff as a board, so that I couldn't stoop to dress myself. When I did manage to bend over, everything before me turned black. My head seemed to be whirling and sometimes I was so dizzy I had to grasp something to keep from falling.

The librarian at a certain museum was engaged in cataloguing and arranging some ancient books that had just arrived from Egypt, when he noticed a perplexed look on the face of his assistant.

"What's the matter, Brown?" he asked. "Is there anything that you don't understand?"

"Yes," answered Brown. "Here is a small papyrus on which the characters are not decipherable. How shall I class it?"

"Uh," thoughtfully returned the librarian, examining the papyrus. "Suppose you call it a doctor's prescription in the time of Pharaoh."

HAVE YOU A SWEETHEART,

Son or Brother in training camps in the American Army or Navy? If so, mail him a package of ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE, the antiseptic powder to be shaken into the shoes and sprinkled in the foot-bath. The American, British and French troops use Allen's Foot-Ease, because it takes the Friction from the Shoe and freshens the feet. It is the greatest comforter for tired, aching, tender, swollen feet, and gives relief to corns and bunions.

Soldiers use Foot-Ease

The Plattsburg Camp Manual advises men in training to shake Foot-Ease in their shoes each morning. Ask your dealer to-day for a 25c. box of Allen's Foot-Ease, and for a 2c. stamp he will mail it for you. What remembrance could be so acceptable?

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

John said, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." And the question arises, what is the sin of the world? This question is easily answered in the words of David, Psa. 51:5, "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." This is the sin of depravity that was not only conceived in the heart of David, but in your heart and mine. David was not responsible for this inbred sin, neither are we, but we are responsible for harboring the thing in our hearts while God has provided a remedy for it. This sin caused David a lot of sadness and to commit real transgressions. It will do for others what it did for him if not removed. But where is the remedy? John gives the remedy. In Matt. 3:11, he says, "I indeed baptize you you with water unto repentance, but He that cometh after me (that is Jesus) is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear; He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire." Thus men are sanctified and cleansed from carnality. All honest Christians after their conversion have discovered something in their hearts that at times would not behave itself as becometh the children of God, and thousands, thank God, have gone back to the fountain for the second blessing and got it. But other thousands have tried to grow into holiness, others have tried to educate into a holy life, but only those who have sought holiness as a second work of grace after they were clearly justified, are in possession of this blessed experience of full salvation. Thank God for the privilege of enjoying holiness while we live. My dear converted brother and sister if you want God's best for you, cross Jordan today and your heart will enjoy such holy communion with God as you never dreamed of. Remember that sanctification is a clear second definite work of grace.

We invite you to the services of the church where we are standing on the good old Bible lines of salvation.

Preaching service at 10:30 o'clock a. m. Sunday School at 11:30 a. m.

Preaching service at 8:30.

We are going to look for you at the morning and evening service next Sunday, and shall be disappointed if you are not there.

Prayermeeting on each Thursday evening at 8:00 o'clock.

The King's Heralds and Little Light Bearers will meet at the church Saturday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock, April 13th.

The Win One class will meet at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Yahnke for their regular monthly social on Tuesday evening, April 16th. Let all of the members come and bring your friends. We are expecting as usual, a good time. We truly believe in the development of the social life along with the religious, and find these social meetings to be very helpful along these lines. We have in this class a band of ladies and gentlemen who do not only respect the church and what it stands for in the Sunday School class, but in the social meetings as well.

A Disappearing Island.

At Lake Orion, in Michigan, there is a certain mysterious island which comes to the surface each summer, only to disappear again every winter. Quite regularly, along the middle of August, the island bobs up above the waters of the lake, and down it goes again about the middle of February. Once some farmers of that part of the country loaded the island with heavy stones, thinking that, when it went down the next time, it would stay down. But, when it was summer once more, up came the mysterious island as serene as ever. This is one of the most famous of the curious floating islands.—Christian Science Monitor.

Frugality is good, if liberality be joined with it. The first is leaving off superfluous expenses; the last bestowing them to the benefit of others that need. The first without the last begins covetousness; the last without the first begins prodigality; both together make an excellent temper.—William Penn.

AGES IMPORTANT JUST NOW

Month, Week or Day May Bring Man Within Scope of the Selective Conscription Law.

The exact ages of some 10,000,000 Americans are matters of considerable importance just now, asserts the Chicago Herald. Age determines eligibility to the National army. A month, a week or a day brings a man within the scope of the selective conscription law or gives him honorable immunity. The government must know definitely the birthdays of at least a tenth of the people.

In a very large part of the United States rumor is relied upon to establish age. The war department calls upon the census bureau, which takes an accounting every ten years. But the census officials are too honest to have much confidence in their own data concerning the birthdays of the people. Therefore Secretary Redfield is constrained to make another plea for the registration of the births and deaths of the inhabitants of the United States.

At the present time only in 13 states and in the District of Columbia are the records accurate enough to be regarded by the census bureau. Six other states, however, have been attempting to get rid of their habits, with the result that the so-called registration area may soon be increased.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

CHAPTER FIVE. (Continued.)

After finishing his inspection of the stables and garage, he walked across the courtyard and went up to his study, pushed open one of the windows and raised his head. Above him was a slanting mirror; and this mirror reflected, beyond the courtyard and its surrounding wall, one whole side of the Place du Palais-Bourbon.

"Bother!" he said. "Those confounded detectives are still there. And this has been going on for a fortnight." I'm getting tired of this spying."

He sat down, in a bad temper, to look through his letters, tearing up, after he had read them, those which concerned him personally and making notes on the others, such as applications for assistance and requests for interviews. When he had finished, he rang the bell.

"Ask Mlle. Levasseur to bring me the newspapers."

She had been the Hungarian count's reader as well as his secretary; and Perenna had trained her to pick out in the newspapers anything that referred to him, and to give him each morning an exact account of the proceedings that were being taken against Mme. Fauville.

Always dressed in black, with a very elegant and graceful figure, she had attracted him from the first. She had an air of great dignity and a grave and thoughtful face which made it impossible to penetrate the secret of her soul, and which would have seemed austere had it not been framed in a cloud of fair curls, resisting all attempts at discipline and setting a halo of light and gayety around her.

Her voice had a soft and musical tone which Perenna loved to hear; and, himself a little perplexed by Mlle. Levasseur's attitude of reserve, he wondered what she could think of him, of his mode of life, and of all that the newspaper had to tell of his mysterious past.

"Nothing new?" he asked, as he glanced at the headings of the articles.

She read the reports relating to Mme. Fauville; and Don Luis could see the police investigations were making no headway. Marie Fauville still kept to her first method, that of weeping, making a show of indignation, and assuming entire ignorance of the facts upon which she was being examined

"It's ridiculous," he said, aloud. "I have never seen any one defend herself so clumsily."

"Still, if she's innocent?"

It was the first time that Mlle. Levasseur had uttered an opinion or rather a remark upon the case. Don Luis looked at her in great surprise.

"So you think her innocent, mademoiselle?"

She seemed ready to reply and to explain the meaning of her interruption. It was as though she were removing her impassive mask and about to allow her face to adopt a more animated expression under the impulse of her inner feelings. But she restrained herself with a visible effort, and murmured:

"I don't know. I have no views."

"Possibly," he said, watching her with curiosity, "but you have a doubt: a doubt which would be permissible if it were not for the marks left by Mme. Fauville's own teeth. Those marks, you see, are something more than a signature, more than a confession of guilt. And, as long as she is unable to give a satisfactory explanation of this point——"

But Marie Fauville vouchsafed not the slightest explanation of this or anything else. She remained impenetrable. On the other hand, the police failed to discover her accomplice or accomplices, or the man with the ebony walking stick and the tortoise shell glasses whom the waiter at the Cafe du Pont-Neuf had described to Mazeroux and who seemed to have played a singularly suspicious part. In short, there was not a ray of light thrown upon the subject.

Equally vain was all search for the traces of Victor, the Rousel sister's first cousin, who would have inherited the Mornington bequest in the absence of any direct heirs.

"Is that all?" asked Perenna.

"No," said Mlle. Lavasseur, "there is an article in the Echo de France——"

"Relating to me?"

"I presume so, monsieur. It is called, "Why Don't They Arrest Him??"

"That concerns me," he said, with a laugh.

He took the newspaper and read:

Why do they not arrest him? Why go against logic and prolong an unnatural situation which no decent man can understand? This is the question which everybody is asking and to which our investigations enable us to furnish a precise reply.

Two years ago, in other words, three years after the pretended death of Arsene Lupin, the police, having discovered or believing they had discovered that Arsene Lupin was really none other than one Floriani, born at Blois and since lost to sight, because the register to be inscribed, on the page relating to this Floriani, with the word "Deceased," followed by the words "Under the alias of Arsene Lupin."

Consequently, to bring Arsene Lupin back to life, there would be wanted something more than the undeniable proof of his existence, which would not be impossible. The most complicated wheels in the administrative machine would have to be set in motion, and a decree obtained from the council of state.

Now it would seem that M. Valenglay, the prime minister, together with the prefect of police, is opposed to making any too minute inquiries capable of opening up a scandal which the authorities are anxious to avoid. Bring Arsene Lupin back to life? Recommence the struggle with that accursed scoundrel? Risk a fresh defeat and fresh ridicule? No, no, and again no!

And thus is brought about this unprecedented, in admissible, inconceivable, disgraceful situation, that Arsene Lupin, the hardened thief, the impenitent criminal, the robber king, the emperor of burglars and swindlers, is able today, not clandestinely, but in the sight and hearing of the whole world, to pursue the most formidable task that he has yet undertaken, to live publicly under a name which is not his own, but which he has incontestably made his own, to destroy with impunity four persons who stood in his way, to cause the imprisonment of an innocent woman against whom he himself has accumulated false evidence, and at the end of all, despite the protests of common sense and thanks to an unavowed complicity, to receive the 100,000,000 francs of the Mornington legacy.

There is the ignominous truth in a nutshell. It is well that it should be stated. Let us hope, now that it stands revealed, that it will influence the future conduct of events.

"At any rate, it will influence the conduct of the idiot who wrote that article," said Lupin, with a grin.

He dismissed Mlle. Lavasseur and rang up Major d'Astrignac on the telephone.

"Is that you, major? Perenna speaking."

"Yes, what is it?"

"Have you read the article in the Echo de France?"

"Yes."

"Would it bore you very much to call on that gentleman and ask for satisfaction in my name?"

"Oh! A duel!"

"It's got to be, major. All these sportsmen are wearying me with their lucubrations. They must be gagged. This fellow will pay for the rest."

"Well, of course, if you're bent on it ——"

"I am, very much."

The preliminaries were entered upon without delay. The editor of the Echo de France declared that the article had been sent in without a signature, typewritten, and that it had been published without his knowledge; but he accepted the entire responsibility.

That same day, at 3 o'clock, Don Luis Perenna, accompanied by Major d'Astrignac, another officer and a doctor, left the house in the Place de Palais-Bourbon in his car, and, followed by a taxi crammed with the detectives engaged in watching him, drove to the Parc des Princes.

While waiting for the arrival of the adversary, the Comte d'Astrignac took Don Luis aside.

"My dear Perenna, I ask you no questions. I don't want to know how much truth there is in all that is being written about you, or what your real name is. To me, you are Perenna of the Legion, and that is all I care about. Your past began in Morocco. As for the future, I know that, whatever happens and however great the temptation, your only aim will be to revenge Cosmo Mornington and protect his heirs. But there's one thing that worries me."

"Speak our, major."

"Give me your word that you won't kill this man."

"Two months in bed, major; will that suit you?"

"Too long. A fortnight."

"Done."

The two adversaries took up their positions. At the second encounter, the editor of the Echo de France fell, wounded in the chest.

"Oh, that's too bad of you, Perenna!" growled the Comte d'Astrignac. "You promised me——"

"And I've kept my promise, major."

The doctors were examining the injured man. Presently one of them rose and said:

"It's nothing. Three week's rest at most. Only a third of an inch more, and he would have been done for."

"Yes, but that third of an inch isn't there," murmured Perenna.

Still followed by the detectives' motor cab, Don Luis returned to the Faubourg Saint-Germain; and it was then that an incident occurred which was to puzzle him greatly and threw a most extraordinary light on the article in the Echo de France.

In the courtyard of his house he saw two little puppies which belonged to the coachman and which were generally confined to the stables. They were playing with a twist of red string which kept catching onto things, to the railings of the steps, to the flower vases. In the end, the paper round which the string was wound, appeared. Don Luis happened to pass at that moment. His eyes noticed marks of writing on the paper, and he mechanically picked it up and unfolded it.

He gave a start. He had at once recognized the opening lines of the article printed in the Echo de France. And the whole article was there, written in ink, on ruled paper, with erasures, and with sentences added, struck out, and begun anew.

He called the coachman and asked him:

"Where does this ball of string come from?"

"The string, sir? Why, from the harness room, I think. It must have been that little she devil of a Mirzo who ——"

"And when did you wind the string round the paper?"

"Yesterday evening, monsieur."

"Yesterday evening. I see. And where is the paper from?"

"Upon my word, monsieur, I can't say. I wanted something to wind my string on. I picked this bit up behind the coachhouse where they fling all the rubbish of the house to be taken into the street at night."

Don Luis pursued his investigations. He questioned or asked Mlle. Levasseur to question the other servants. He discovered nothing; but one fact remained: the article in the Echo de France had been written, as the rough draft which he had picked up proved, by somebody who lived in the house or who was in touch with one of the people in the house.

The enemy was inside the fortress.

But what enemy? And what did he want? Merely Perenna's arrest?

All the remainder of the afternoon Don Luis continued anxious, annoyed by the mystery that surrounded him, incensed at his own inaction, and especially at that threatened arrest, which certainly caused him no uneasiness, but which hampered his movements.

Accordingly, when he was told at about 10 o'clock that a man who gave the name of Alexandre insisted on seeing him, he had the man shown in; and when he found himself face to face with Mazeroux, but Mazeroux disguised beyound recognition and huddled in an old cloak, he flung himself on him as on a prey, hustling and shaking him.

"So it's you, at last!" he cried. "Well, what did I tell you? You can't make head or tail of things at the police office and you've come for me! Confess it, you numskull! You've come to fetch me! Oh, how funny it all is! Gad, I knew that you would never have the cheek to arrest me, and that the prefect of police would manage to calm the untimely ardour of that confounded Weber! To begin with, one doesn't arrest a man whom one has need of. Come, out with it! Lord, how stupid you look! Why don't you answer? How far have you got at the office? Quick, speak! I'll settle the thing in five seconds. Just tell me about your inquiry in two words, and I'll finish it for you in the twinkling of a bed post, in two minutes by my watch. Well, you were saying——"

"But, chief," spluttered Mazeroux, utterly nonplussed.

"What! Must I drag the words out of you? Come on! I'll make a start. It has to do with the man with the ebony walking stick, hasn't it? The one we saw at the Cafe du Pont-Neuf on the day when Inspector Verot was murdered?"

"Yes, it has."

"Have you found his traces?"

"Yes."

"Well, come along, find your tongue!"

"It's like this, chief. Some one else noticed him besides the waiter. There was another customer in the cafe; and this other customer, whom I ended by discovering, went out at the same time as our man and heard him ask somebody in the street which was the nearest underground station for Neuilly."

"Capital, that. And, in Neuilly, by asking questions on every side, you ferreted him out?"

"And even learned his name, chief: Hubert Lautier, of the Avenue du Roule. Only he decamped from there six months ago, leaving his furniture behind him and taking nothing but two trunks."

"What about the post office?"

"We have been to the post office. One of the clerks recognized the description which we supplied. Our man calls once every eight or 10 days to fetch his mail, which never amounts to much: just one or two letters. He has not been there for some time."

"Is the correspondence in his name?"

"No, initials."

"Were they able to remember them?"

"Yes: B. R. W. 8."

"Is that all?"

"That is absolutely all that I have discovered. But one of my fellow officers succeeded in proving, from the evidence of two detectives, that a man carrying a silver handled ebony walking stick and a pair of tortoise shell glasses walked out of the Gare d'Auteuil on the evening of the double murder and went toward Renalagh. Remember the presence of Mme. Fauville in that neighborhood at the same hour. And remember that the crime was committed round about midnight. I conclude from this——"

"That will do: be off!"

"But ——"

"Get!"

"Then I don't see you again?"

"Meet me in half an hour outside our man's place."

"What man?"

"Marie Fauville's accomplice."

"But you don't know ——"

"The address? Why, you gave it to me yourself: Boulevard Richard-Wallace, No. 8. Go! And don't look such a fool."

He made him spin round on his heels, took him by the shoulders, pushed him to the door, and handed him over quite flabbergasted, to a footman.

He himself went out a few minutes later, dragging in his wake the detectives attached to his person, left them posted on sentry duty outside a block of flats with a double entrance and took a motor cab to Neuilly.

He went along the Avenue de Madrid on foot and turned down the Boulevard Richard-Wallace, opposite the Boise de Bologne. Mazeroux was waiting for him in front of a small three storied house standing at the back of a court yard contained within the very high walls of the adjoining property.

"Is this number eight?"

"Yes, chief, but tell me how——"

"One moment, old chap; give me time to recover my breath."

He gave two or three great gasps.

"Lord, how good it is to be up and doing!" he said. "Upon my word, I was getting rusty. And what a pleasure to pursue those scoundrels! So you want me to tell you?"

He passed his arm through the sergeant's.

"Listen, Alexandre, and profit by my words. Remember this: when a person is choosing initials for his address at a poste restante he doesn't pick them at random, but always in such a way that the letters convey a meaning to the person corresponding with him, a meaning which will enable that other person easily to remember the address."

More Profiteering Here.

From Capper's Weekly.

Fifteen years ago a farmer could buy a header or self binder for $180. The price now is $325. Two years ago 14-inch gang plows could be bought for $55. Now they cost $120. The wagon that formerly sold for $85 now costs $125. And all farm machinery is sold at proportionately increased prices. A little swift price regulating here would produce wonderfully beneficial results. All these tools are necessary to the important work of food production.

Bolshevism Based Only On Hatred of Bourgeo

From the Dallas, Tex., News.

The dominating idea of the bolsheviks has been that they convert the war of nationalities into one of classes. It has be guide of their diplomacy from the beginning. They imagined they could unite the proletariat of all nations against the "capit classes" of all nations. They consigned to the "capitalistic cl every one against whom the charge of solvency could be proved, was one of their worst blunders. For undoubtedly the world's upts are in a minority, so that the bolsheviks committed the political error of inscribing their manner in a way which was so recruit the enemy more than it could themselves. Trotzky Lenine believed that the world was easily to be set on fire with incendiary ideas and inflammatory rhetoric. Now they find that world was less combustible than they had imagined. There is e contrariety in the reports to leave one in doubt whether the bolshe have notified the Germans of their readiness to accept the re peace terms or not. But the question is probably of no conseq Having failed to cause a social conflagration in Germany and A they are helpless before the governments which they intended be devoured.

For Trotzky and Lenine the world wide project has sud contracted to the area of Russia, and only so much of that a pretend to have under authority. Instead of being concerned to bolshevism throughout the earth, they find themselves confronte the danger of its collapse in Russia. If now they are ready to peace with Germany on almost any terms that Germany may offe is because they have come to think that only peace, if anything save bolshevism at home. One may doubt whether even that possible. Having swung from Nicholas to Trotzky, the pend seems to have reached the end of the arc that is the starting po reaction; a reaction which need not, and pretty certainly will swing back to absolutism, but which is likely to outlaw bolshe

TEACHERS' SALARIES AND SHORTAGE OF TEACHE

By William F. Barr, Dean College of Education, Drake University.

During the past few months there have been many complaints from different parts of the country because of the impossibility to secure teachers to satisfy the demand. There is no doubt whatever that there are many people prepared to teach who are not teaching simply because the teaching profession is not sufficiently attractive from a financial standpoint.

The war is being blamed for the shortage of teachers. The war has been the cause of industrial re-adjustments opening many new fields of occupations to young women who planned to teach. No one can blame these young women for taking the places that are more remunerative. The question is simply whether the people of the state of Iowa and the United States consider their schools of sufficient importance to offer salaries attractive enough to compete with other occupations.

A class of junior and senior students in Drake university made an estimate of the cost of school attendance and found that the actual cost plus the loss of wages while attending will average for girls about $700 per year and for men about $900. For four years it costs a girl $2,800 and a boy about $3,600 to attend school. The same group of students using the high school directory issued by the Midland schools giving the salaries for the year 1917-18, reported by superintendents of city and town schools since the opening of the school year, found by going through one-fifth of the directory taking the towns in order, that the average salary of 498 women is $690.25. Of this number, 303 are receiving less than the average while 85 are receiving $540, or less, per year. If this ratio holds for all of the schools reported, there are 2,490 women in the high schools of Iowa teaching for the average, 1,515 of these receiving less than the average, and 175 of the entire number receiving $540, or less, per year.

We have made some inquiry as to the cost of living in the towns and smaller cities of Iowa and find that the average for room and board is at least $30 per month. Eight dollars additional per month is not too much for laundry and incidentals. The teacher's actual necessary expense then, aside from clothing and traveling expenses is $270 for board and room, $72 for incidentals, and $168 interest on the investment making a total of $510, which subtracted from the average salary leaves $176.25 year to pay for clothing, traveling penses, additional schooling, livi penses for three months, and pay on the original capital invested.

For those teaching below the school, a minimum of two years' or college training is required. average salary for these teache probably not to exceed $585 per Allowing the same living expens $84 for interest, the total annual pense is $426, which being subtr from $585 leaves the teacher $159 used as indicated for the high s teacher.

With men, the situation is even serious. The average salary for in the schools examined is less $900 per year. Any one knows t real man cannot take a four course in college and justify h for entering the teaching profess $900 per year. On the morning Washington's birthday, a teacher met on the streets of Des Moines offered $5 per day for unskilled He was told that he could go to at once, that he needed no pre experience, that the work required mental activity. This offer $1,080 for the school year with no paration. At the same time we h our desk three calls for men teache $720, $765 and $810, respectively, only good men were wanted.

The people of Iowa are proud of increasing excellence in school b ing and equipment. People are mor terested in their children than in their other possessions and when stop to think seriously of the m they will appreciate the fact th the entire educational work the important factor is the teacher, that excellence of schools cannot b unless teachers are paid enough t tract the best men and best wom the state. Teacher's salaries shou increased to the point where no te doing her first terms work, below high school, should be expected to for less than $75 per month, wh teachers in the high school shou paid less than $85 for first work both of these cases, it should be stood that excellence of work lead to increase of salary from y year. Many of the towns are al awakening to the situation and are creasing teachers' salaries mat for next year.

TWO GIRLS OPERATING ALASKAN STAMP MILL

Juneau, Alaska, (by mail)—At Pearl Harbor, 40 miles from here, two young women, just out of their 'teens, have for the past four years operated a paying mine. Their sole assistant has been their mother. They operate a two-stamp mill and, their present ambition is to install a five-stamp equipment.

These girls are the daughters of the late John G. Peterson, a pioneer who, with Mrs. Peterson, acquired an interest in some mining properties 26 years ago in the Pearl Harbor district. The girls' names are Irene and Margaret. Both were born in Juneau.

There is nothing in a mining line that the two young women are not capable of doing, from sharpening a steel to shoeing a mule. These things are every day affairs with them—a part of the day's work. They built the neat four room cottage in which they live, getting the timber out of the forest themselves.

An inspection of their library shows works on geology, mineralogy, petrology, mining and milling, and mine management by the best authorities. A number of standard magazines come to them. The girls occasionally take trips. One of these excursions took on the proportions of a tour to Europe.

Juneau, the town of their nativity frankly is proud of them. So is Alaska.

Sugar Foe of Alcohol.

From the New York Independent.

A 5 o'clock candy is a better re tive than a 5 o'clock highball or eve o'clock tea, for it is a true nutrien stead of a mere stimulant. It is a ter of common observation that who like sweets usually do not alcohol. Women, for instance, are eat candy but do not commonly alcoholic beverages.

Look around you at a banquet and you will generally find that who turn down their wine glasses erally take two lumps in their tasses. We often hear it said that ever a candy store opens up a salo the same block closes up.

Our grandmothers used to warn daughters: "Don't marry a man who not want sugar in his tea. He is to take to drink." So, young men, next you give a box of candy to your girl and she offers you some, don't cline it. Eat it and pretend to like least, for it is quite possible that looked into a physiology and is you out. You never can tell what girls up to.

OUGHING ISO'S

SALT FARMING

HOG GREATEST MEAT PRODUCER

By P. G. HOLDEN.

RAISE more hogs is the quickest and best solution to the problem of satisfying an ever-increasing demand for meat.

Philip H. Hale, editor of the National Farmer and Stock Grower, has given much thought and study to the meat problem from the standpoint of the farmer, and at my request, has prepared the following article:

In this emergency we should not underestimate the importance of the hog. On two million farms there are no hogs. On every such farm the farmer should buy a bred sow immediately. He should feed the male pigs when he gets them and grow the females to be bred. He does not have to buy many cows to start hog raising.

We do not speak in favor of the hog to the exclusion of other classes of stock. The hog is not our favorite, but he is in first position and cannot be driven out. In the grains, wheat and corn will win the war; in meat animals the conqueror is the hog.

Cows and Hogs Compared.

We recently had a great live stock show at Chicago and the champion steer weighed 1,610 pounds at 29 months or 870 days of age. The cow that had the champion steer for a calf could have had another calf and be coming on with another since the champion calf was dropped. One steer weighing 1,600 pounds and another weighing 1,000 pounds would represent about all the meat the cow would show in market in two clear years and five months. But a sow that gave a litter of pigs when that champion steer was dropped could have given another litter that year and two more the following year. The four litters of pigs, say eight to a litter, could all have grown and at 10 months old each weigh 250 pounds. It is not impossible for one sow to market 7,500 pounds of meat on the hoof in 29 months, as against 2,600 pounds produced by the best cow in the world. Especially is this true in the South, where the climate is mild and the growing season long.

This Single Litter of Nine Little Pigs Should Weigh 250 Pounds Each at 16 Months of Age, or a Total of 2,250 Pounds.

In the Northern states farmers usually depend upon one litter of pigs a year, with about seven or eight pigs to the litter

Hogs King of Meat Animals.

All domestic animals are important, but the hog is the most important animal in the present emergency. The cow generally gives us one calf; the sheep generally gives us one ewe; but the sow gives us a litter.

Jordan, in "The Feeding of Animals," proves that the hog will make more than five times the real food value that a steer or a sheep can make from the same amount of grain feed.

For the transportation of fresh meats special cars are necessary. For the transportation of hams and bacon and lard ordinary cars and ships are satisfactory. Hog meat can be shipped economically to the uttermost ends of the world. You do not have to can bacon and hams to get them to the soldiers in the trenches.

The emergency is right how. We have to do what we can the quickest and the best way. It is not a question of profit; there is profit in all food and feedstuff. A farmer can raise 1,000 pounds of pork while he is raising 400 pounds of beef or mutton.

The hog is raised universally, and the number of hogs we can raise and fatten depends entirely upon the amount of feed we can produce. Farmers have taken a contract to produce the largest amount of meat in the shortest possible time and that points directly to the hog. If you raise more pork than you did before, you deserve well of your country, even if you cure it and eat it on your own farm, thus making it unnecessary for you to buy on the market meat that other farmers have raised.

PATIENTS KILLED BY CARBON MONOXIDE GAS

With the American Army in France, (by mail).—Carbon monoxide gas has caused deaths among patients being transported within the closed bodies of some American-made ambulances equipped with exhaust gas heaters, it is announced. All precautions now have been taken to insure these vehicles being safer in the future.

Investigation disclosed the presence of gas in lethal quantities within ambulances, it having passed through highly heated iron parts and leaks in exhaust pipes. Poor ventilation was responsible for the gas remaining in the closed bodies.

Orders have now been issued for the boring of one inch holes at three inch intervals in a double row through the wooden front of all vehicles being used by the American Expeditionary forces Similar holes will be made in the tailboards. All exhaust gas heaters in the future will be carefully inspected under operating conditions and repairs immediately made upon those found even slightly defective.

All ambulance drivers and orderlies have been ordered to investigate the condition of all passengers within their cars at five-minute intervals. This will be done by requiring an answer to an interrogation. Particular attention will be paid to the condition of patients when ambulances are at a standstill with the engine running

How Air Affects Health.

From the Cleveland Plain Dealer

Cold air with high moisture content has a depressing effect on the human organism, but the factors concerned are not well understood. Some writers have maintained the existence of a direct connection between house dampness and tuberculosis. Other diseases, such as rheumatism, are commonly supposed to be fostered by a cold, damp climate.

Cellar dwelling is proverbially unhealthy In individual instances vitality seems to be lowered and predisposition to infection increased by exposure to humid cold. There is no doubt that the human mechanism works at disadvantage when placed in cold, moisture laden air, even though the precise nature of the derangement is not known.

Cold, dry air is generously considered healthful and stimulating by medical authorities. Metabolic processes against excessive heat loss, sensations of wellbeing are dominant. There is little exact physiological evidence bearing on this condition. Drs. Miller and Noble have shown that respiratory infection of rabbits with bacillus bronchisepticus (snuffles) is favored by chilling the animals after they have been accustomed to heat.

Dryness combined with high temperature is commonly deemed injurious. This is the combination found in desert climates and in many artificially heated dwellings in northern climates in winter The dry, hot atmosphere induces restlessness and "nervous" feelings, as well as drying and irritation of the skin and mucous membranes. Susceptibility to colds is said to be increased in indoor dwellers in a hot, dry atmosphere.

Turn to American Music.

From the Milwaukee Leader.

"The present time offers great opportunities for American music and musicians," said Victor Herbert, American composer and conductor, who was in Milwaukee recently as guest director of the Cincinnati Symphony orchestra, which played at the auditorium concert.

"The fact that communication with Europe is so uncertain and in many cases impossible," he continued, "makes it very difficult and impracticable to get those novelties for our musical season which the American public is accustomed to look for and the result has been that orchestra leaders have been compelled to turn their attention to American music This has in many cases brought startling and gratifying results. America is obviously beginning to realize that it has within itself possibilities for great and promising developments in creative music

"What can we hope for American folk song? Well, I have the best hopes, but not as long as our farmers ride about in their Fords What do you think they will be liable to sing? Nor do I expect that our maidens dancing the tango and the fox trot will produce anything like the beautiful, expressive songs of the good old days, and now that they are going to put prohibition over on us, how the hell do they expect us to sing at all?"

Want Better Milling Wheat.

From the American Miller.

Moving pictures are being used throughout Minnesota and the Dakotas to show the heads and kernels of the principal varieties of wheat grown in that section and encourage greater planting of the Marquis variety, which is considered more desirable than other varieties by the Minnesota flour millers. These pictures also show cleaning operations, the common weed seed enemies of wheat, like wild pea, kinghead, corn cockle, etc., and the preventable grain diseases, like smut, with methods of treating seed with formaldehyde. Testing and germination of seed are shown, and then the sampling and grading of wheat after harvest, with views of baking tests, showing the effect of weed seed on loaves of bread, and the difference between loaves made from Marquis wheat and other varieties. These pictures are part of a general campaign started several years ago by a Minnesota flour milling concern, and are reinforced with advertising in the newspapers in that territory and organized work among county agents, farmers, clubs, agricultural schools, and school children to increase the acreage of Marquis wheat and encourage formaldehyde treatment of seed wheat. Germination test of seed wheat is taught in the public schools and seed wheat cleaning and grading is organized on a community basis.

Lemons Whiten and Beautify the Skin! Make Cheap Lotion

The juice of two fresh lemons strained into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white makes a whole quarter pint of the most remarkable lemon skin beautifier at about the cost one must pay for a small jar of the ordinary cold creams. Care should be taken to strain the lemon juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as freckles, sallowness and tan and is the ideal skin softener, smoothener and beautifier.

Just try it! Make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands. It should naturally help to whiten, soften, freshen and bring out the hidden roses and beauty of any skin. It is wonderful for rough, red hands.

Your druggist will sell three ounces of orchard white at little cost, and any grocer will supply the lemons. Adv.

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than May 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

Are Here Told the Best Remedy for Their Troubles.

Freemont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being forty-six years of age and had all the symptoms incident to that change—heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me as the best remedy for my troubles, which it surely proved to be. I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared."—Mrs. M. GODDEN, 925 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

Birds' Nests for Soup.

The birds' nests from which the famed Chinese soup is made are built by a species of swallow that abounds on the coasts of Java, Ceylon and Borneo, and consists of a gelatinous substance obtained from marine plants. The nests are boiled either in chicken broth or in milk of almonds, and the result very much resembles vermicelli soup, except that it is far more costly.

Relax If You Would Sleep.

The philosopher Hegel finished his principal work on the eve of the battle of Jena, amidst the thunder of cannon. Noise, instead of interfering with conscious thinking, produces an incentive to thought. If you keep too vigorous an attention on your ideas, after you compose yourself for sleep; if you maintain an emotional element or any feelings with them, you will lie awake or have only fitful sleep.

Millions Saved— Get Your Share

Improved methods of building cars, that build them better and save millions of dollars to the public, is one of the substantial advantages you get in this Overland Model 90.

The time to save money is when you select your car, because afterwards you cannot make it any more economical than it is built to be.

Select this Model 90 and you save money in the first cost and in the maintenance cost. You cannot get complete satisfaction from less advantages than it gives—

And you cannot get as much value in any other car for the low price of this Model 90.

It has a powerful, fuel-saving motor; narrow turning radius; rear cantilever springs; 106-inch wheelbase; 31 x 4 tires, non-skid rear. Auto-Lite starting and lighting and vacuum fuel system.

It is as desirable as it is adequate, comfortable and easy-to-handle.

With it a salesman can double his value; a housewife gains time for Red Cross work, and business and professional men save time and multiply their activities.

It coins time and money for more than 80,000 others. Why not for you?

KLEMME TO HAVE NEW CHURCH

After laying the foundation for a 16x28 foot addition to the English M. E. church, the board has decided with the present rapid growth of the congregation that the church with this addition will be inadequate to take care of our people. So we are going to try to squeeze through the summer and winter and with the breaking up of the winter of 1919 we expect to break the ground for an entirely new church. We have not fully estimated the cost, but expect to put up a building that will be a credit to the already beautiful town of Klemme and shall stand to bless the rising generation. When the war is over the church of God is going forward rapidly and we must be ready for the emergency. The site has not been located but doubtless it will be where the old church now stands as there is no prettier spot in Klemme for a church. Let everybody boost for the new church.

A. C. LAU ANNOUNCES FOR SUPERVISOR

A. C. Lau was elected for Supervisor in 1916, November, for a three year term, but on account of the change in the law of three supervisors instead of five, he has only had the office one year. Mr. Lau ought to have the full term of three years and so he calls on all voters to help him. Mr. Lau has lived in this county for forty-three years and has helped it's improvements. He is a large land owner and tax payer and will make a good supervisor for the county and will appreciate the office.

KLEMME CREAM HAULERS UP TO DATE

Rudy Baack and Lewis Knoke are up with the times and each have purchased Ford trucks to haul cream with. This enables them to make their routes in a much shorter length of time and they have also taken in a larger territory. It makes a big improvement and will also give the patrons of the creamery better service.

PARTY FOR NAVY BOYS

Last Sunday evening Mrs. Henry Church gave a party and dinner in honor of Ernest Lewis and George Hoppe, who have enlisted in the U. S. Navy and are now awaiting their call. Mrs. Church invited six young people to be present at the farewell party. After the dinner the party enjoyed an automobile ride. All announce a good time and that Mrs. Church is a fine entertainer.

Chip on the Shoulder.

"We love and we value peace," said Jefferson "We know its blessings and experience, we abhor the follies of war, and are not untried in its distresses and calamities" A God-fearing nation confides in its strength without boasting of it and respects that of others without fearing it. The weak nation, like the weak man, carries a chip on the shoulder.

PEACE

The United States did not enter into this war unadvisedly, hastily, under stress of heat or passion. We took the step calmly, soberly, reluctantly, with a full sense of the awful responsibilities involved, the sacrifices demanded, the magnitude of the task.

President Wilson did not advise in his war message, nor did Congress act in declaring a state of war between the United States and Germany without giving the most solemn consideration to what the action meant. They knew it meant the death of thousands of brave Americans; they knew it meant suffering and wounds and the disabling for life of hundreds of thousands of our young men. They counted to the full the human cost and the material cost.

Every development since has justified and proved the wisdom and the imperative necessity of America's participation. Every German success and every German failure have shown how necessary to our own welfare and peace, how necessary to the safety and peace of the world the defeat of Germany is. Every foot of ground Germany has been forced to give up, every foot of land she has seized, have demonstrated the imperative necessity of defeating that sinister, intolerable thing called Germanism.

Germanism is 3,000 miles away. It must never come any nearer. Let this war result in anything but defeat of Germany, let her emerge with her power unbroken and her kultur still dominant, and it is but a question of time until we alone will be fighting Germany instead of warring against her with our Allies on our side.

Lincoln said that this country could not exist half slave and half free. All Americans now recognize that truth. The events of the last few years have shown equally clearly that this world can not exist half free and half autocratic—half free people loving liberty and justice and peace and half an autocracy seeking to dominate the world, caring nothing for liberty or justice and nothing for humanity and civilization, if only they interfere with its ambition.

There is no peace for America except a just peace, a peace that means a world fit for free people to live in. German ideals, German purposes, and German practices are the antitheses of American. The beliefs we love and honor and uphold are contemptible to them; the objects for which they will send to death millions of their own men and millions of their enemy are abhorrent to our ideas of right and justice; their methods and practices in warfare are an abomination and horror to us.

The American who now advocates or wishes for peace, except a just peace, is either woefully misguided or a traitor to America's future and America's past, to all things American—the things which have made our country great and free, which hundreds of thousands of Americans have died to maintain, and for which Americans now are dying in France.

There can be no peace with honor or safety to ourselves or to posterity, except a just peace, and there can and will be no other peace. Work for peace accomplishes nothing but the hampering of our effort, the delay of the real peace, and a greater toll of death of America's fighting men. Our duty is to war for a just and righteous peace; to work or speak for any other peace is treason.

Domesticated Canaries.

There are 12 distinct breeds of canaries. About 500 years ago a Spanish sea captain brought from the Canary islands some insignificant little greenish birds which were called canary birds, and from these have been evolved the 12 species or varieties of canaries known to the breeder of today.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

According to the discipline under which all Methodist people are living, the Methodist Episcopal church was launched in America for the purpose of aiding in evangelizing the continent, and the spreading of Scriptural Holiness over these lands. Are we true to the task assigned us. If not we can not expect the blessing of God to accompany our efforts in advancing His kingdom on earth. His blessing and power fell upon Methodism in days of old until souls prayed through at an altar, and when they left the altar they knew that they were saved or sanctified as the case might have been. God has not changed, sin is the same, the remedy is the same, why not have the old time power in our churches today?

The doctrine of entire sanctification is scriptural and reasonable. It appeals at once to all who have been truly born of the Spirit, and who really hunger and thirst after righteousness. The commands of God on this subject are so clear, the provisions so great, the promises are so full, why not have the blessing today? God is infinitely great. God in His great wisdom would never have sent the world a Redeemer who could not make humanity holy.

What Does "War Time" Mean To You

Are you complaining because "war time" means coal shortage; less sugar in your coffee; bad business; less money than you think you ought to make?

What about the boys who are fighting for you in France?

For you—a little economy and deprivation. For them the trenches; the pitiless storms of rain and sleet; the ceaseless deafening bombardment of the guns; hunger, cold and fever; wounds and death.

That you may dwell in peace, plenty, and security, they sacrifice everything, give everything, brave everything, and face a nameless grave with a smile and a song.

What are you doing, or giving, or sacrificing for them?

The Third Liberty Loan

is your opportunity to prove the patriotism that is in your heart and on your lips.

Your opportunity to show yourself worthy of the heroism, the devotion, the self-renunciation of your soldiers and sailors.

Your opportunity to share, in some small degree, the sufferings of those who stand ready to make the supreme sacrifice for you.

All you can do is little enough. You simply lend your money. Do it, and be glad that you can do so much and sorry you can do no more.

THE KLEMME TIMES

KLEMME, IOWA

The twinkling of the stars is more apparent than real, and is being an effect produced in our atmosphere on the waves of light. It is due to currents and strata of air of different densities intermingling and floating past each other through which the light passes to the eye. It is seen more in warm weather than in cold, and near the horizon more than overhead. The same thing may be seen by looking out of a window over a hot radiator or at a candle held on the other side of a hot stove one must look through a body of highly heated air at the candle flame. The flame will be seen to waver and quiver. The various layers of air are at different densities and in motion. Rapid twinkling of the stars is a sign of a change of weather.

After Paul Huntly, inspector, of the public service commission of New York, had visited the new subway tunnel under the East river where the air pressure is 34 pounds to the square inch, he left the subway too quickly and on his way home collapsed at One Hundred and Eighty-first street. Dr. Hoffberg, who was called, put the sufferer into an ambulance and drove him 10 miles back to the tunnel, where he was put back into the compartment in which the air pressure was highest and then gradually brought out to the surface. After this Mr Huntly went home completely cured of his attack of "the bends."

Wisconsin from time to time has been an annex of various other states. After Ohio was admitted to the union, Wisconsin from 1805 to 1809 formed a part of Indiana territory. From 1809 to 1818 Wisconsin was embraced in the territory of Illinois. When Illinois became a state all the country north of it, including Wisconsin, was joined to Michigan After more than 40 years of shifting Wisconsin was admitted to the union with her present boundaries in 1848

A bank in Syracuse, N. Y., has instituted a series of exhibits and demonstrations of the manufacturing products of that city. In the commodious lobby of the bank have been displayed chemical products, with photographs and charts, china and pottery, nearly every process of manufacture being shown typewriters, mens clothing, incubators, and various food products. As a finale, it is planned to exhibit even automobiles and motor trucks in this bank's office.

E. S. Kuhn, of the Stanton Heights Golf club, near Bedford Springs, Pa., asserts that when he was playing the third hole, which is across a water hazard, his tee shot landed in the water and killed a big fish which was coming up to feed He said his caddy waded into the water and returned with the fish which he took home for dinner

Employes of the street railway company in Old Orchard Me., rigged up a dummy and placed it as if it were some one waiting for the car They then informed the crew of the outgoing cars that an old lady was waiting at Wartens and that they would have to stop and help her aboard. Whether Stanford (California) college dances may continue until 1 a m, or must cease at 12, midnight, sharp, depends on the vote of the coeds. The men's conference decided that at one dance each semester the added hour might obtain, with the university women's consent. The latter voted "no" last year.

Burglar proof vaults that cost thousands of dollars cannot keep out some intruders, as was proved when a big green eyed toad startled bank cashier A. FIND BONES OF MAN UNDER OLD BUILDING

Workmen at Ida Grove Unearth What Is Believed Evidence of Crime Many Years Ago.

Ida Grove, Ia., Aphil 13.—Workmen excavating for the new Schorrette grain elevator unearthed a crudely built rough box yesterday, at a depth of about four feet below the basement of the recently wrecked building on the site where the new building will be built. Upon opening the box, two or three bones were discovered but as soon as the air reached them they dissolved. Thirty-four years ago fire destroyed an elevator on this same site, and the discovery of this box recalls the mysterious circumstances surrounding the burning of the building, many persons at the time thinking it was of an incendiary order. The question in the minds of the old timers is, was there a murder committed in the elevator and the body placed in this box and buried where it was found? No one can remember of the disappearance of one of a local character at that time, but as the country was infested with tramps many think that one or more persons of that stripe may have killed one of their companions and buried him there.

IDA COUNTY DOUBLES AMOUNT REQUIRED OF IT.

Ida Grove, Ia., April 13 -Reports made Tuesday night by the chairmen of the teams soliciting the third Liberty loan in the 12 townships of the county to Chairman Raymond Smith, shows that the quota for the county has been almost doubled, the report showing $521,500 The amount for each township is as follows: Douglas, $87,150; Galva, $58,000 Logan, $32,000 Silver Creek, $60,000, Maple, $68,000. Blaine, $34,050; Garfield, $27,000, Griggs, $50,000, Corwin, $75,000 Hayes, $30,000; Grant, $25,000; Battle, $25,000. Only a few instances have been reported where men who were in a position to buy have refused to take bonds, and the laboring class is strongly represented in the smaller amounts.

GERMAN FARMER IS INDUCED TO GIVE.

Sheldon, Ia., April 13.--Herman Meyners, a wealthy retired German farmer living near this city, was ordered to appear before the O'Brien county war council at the court house in Primghar yesterday and explain why he had refused to sign loyalty cards and subscribe to the Liberty loan. Before he left the council he had taken out Liberty bonds to the amount of $2,000 and donated $100 to the Sheldon Red Cross. Meyners has 240 acres of farm land worth from $250 to $300 per acre, besides $20,000 in monies and credits. He made his money in America

TWO DEATHS TAKE PROMINENT PEOPLE

Storm Lake, Ia , April 13 —Nathaniel M Brader, aged 26 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. I. G Brader, died at the family residence after several months' illness of pyorrhea He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Lydia Beach, of Wadena, Minn., before her marriage. The burial took place at Eadena.

C. L. Ledoux, aged 62 years, died at a local hospital after an operation. He was born in Liege, Belgium, and was educated at the Brussels academy. He came to this section of the country when a young man and for a number of years operated a farm near here. He is survived by a wife and four children. Mr. Ledoux was active in the French and Belgian relief work.

AGED IOWA BANKER MUST GO TO PRISON

Cedar Rapids, Ia., April 13.—Adam Keefer, more than 70 years old, and for a half century one of the most respected business men in this section of Iowa, soon will begin an indeterminate sentence in the Anamosa reformatory for fraudulent banking, the mandate of the supreme court denying him a new trial having been returned at Independence, Ia., today.

Keefer was president of the Keefer Bros.' bank at Hazelton, and the Hazelton Savings bank. In March, 1913, the state bank examiner ordered both institutions closed after discrepancies had been discovered. It was charged that Keefer continued to receive deposits long after his banks were insolvent, and on which he paid 6 per cent interest.

ROCK RAPIDS BOY IS SIOUX FALLS SUICIDE

Sioux Falls, S. D., April 13.—Alfred Larson, aged 20, committed suicide with a .32 calbier rifle at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Larson, 919 South Second avenue, last night about 9 o'clock. The bullet entered the heart, causing instantaneous death. No cause for the act is known. Because of the circumstances Coroner J. V. Trepanier did not hold an inquest. All evidence pointed to death at his own hands.

According to members of the family young Larson had been in the best of spirits during the afternoon and early evening and they are at a loss for a reason for the act. The other members of the family had retired when Alfred came from his room, and, when questioned by his father for a reason for not retiring stated that he had to go down into the basement for something. Shortly afterwards his brother, James, heard groans apparently issuing from the basement. Rushing down into the basement James found his brother in a dying condition. He died a few seconds later.

The unfortunate youth had carefully arranged for the muffling of the report of the shot, for, as the powder burns proved, he had held the muzzle of the rifle tight against the breast. This accounts for the family upstairs not hearing the sound from the shot.

Alfred Larson came to this city with his parents about six weeks ago, having moved here from Rock Rapids, Ia. Since coming to the city he had not been employed, as he held a share in a large farm which his father owns near Rock Rapids. He was a bright young man and had made many friends in this city.

MURDER AND SUICIDE AT LONG PINE, NEB.

Shenandoah, Ia., April 13.—Harry Foster, formerly of Shenandoah, killed his wife and then shot himself, at Long Pine, Neb.

Mrs. Foster had just returned from Shenandoah where she had accompanied the body of her father, Alvin Booth, who accidentally killed himself with a shotgun April 2.

Motives for the murder and suicide are unknown.

Mrs. Foster was 25 years old and her husband 29.

IOWA GENERALLY IS BADLY NEEDING RAIN

Des Moines, Ia., April 13.—The first of the weekly reports on crop conditions for the 1918 crop season was issued today by the Iowa weather and crop bureau. The conditions are summarized as follows:

The first half of the past winter was severely and continuously cold, with a good snow covering. March and the latter part of February were mild Frost was out of the ground early in March, not having penetrated as deeply as usual during the winter. At the close of March the season was about two weeks earlier than normal; farm work was well advanced; soil in fine condition; seeding of spring wheat and oats completed in the south and progressing rapidly in the north. Most of the 1917 corn crop remaining unhusked in the fields was husked during March though a little was left to be done in the early days of April. Wheat wintered well, especially in the southeast, where moisture was abundant. Some wheat that failed to germinate last fall, germinated in March. During the past two weeks winter wheat has suffered from drought in all but the southeast section, where the rainfall has generally exceeded one inch. In considerable areas over the southwestern and west central portions the rainfall has been very deficient and winter wheat has been plowed up or cross drilled with early spring wheat. In Adams and Jasper counties the water supply is failing

A remarkably large acreage of spring wheat has been seed. In many counties nearly every farm has a small piece of wheat seeded through patriotic motives and regarded as experimental in those sections where it has not been hitherto raised. A much larger acreage would have been devoted to wheat if cars had been available to ship in the seed. Oats seeding is nearly completion in the north, about the usual area having been seeded. Barley seeding is well under way.

Meadows and pastures generally wintered well, but are badly needing rain.

Dry soil has retarded or prevented germination of small grain in all but the southeast portion. Good rains occurred in nearly all sections Friday night and Saturday. More than the usual amount of gardening and potato planting has been done.

Plowing for corn is well advanced. Seed corn testing and seed distribution have been proceeding rapidly during the last few weeks.

Live stock is in good condition, except in some sections, where roughage has been short. The mild, dry weather has been especially favorable for the pig and lamb crop.

DES MOINES CHILDREN MADE TO SELL BOOZE

Des Moines, Ia., April 13.—Sheriff John Griffin, in charge of the vice crusade here, reports that many children under direction of their parents are assisting in bootlegging in Des Moines. He declares that hereafter when children are found where bootlegging is going on they will be taken from their parents and placed in juvenile homes. "My men have found children actually selling liquor in many Des Moines joints," said Griffin today. "In some instances children of tender years have been called in by their parents to entertain liquor customers.

RED CROSS AUCTION BRINGS IN $8,000.

Calumet, Ia., April 13.—At the Red Cross auction sale held here a total of $8,000 was realized from the sale of donated articles. A month-old calf sold for $240 and a cake brought $125 Calumet territory had already been solicited for donations for similar sales by neighboring towns so it is felt that the community did exceptionaly well.

LYON COUNTY PROPERTY OWNERS PAY THEIR TAXES.

George, Ia., April 13.—Taxes paid during the month of March in Lyon county totalled $250,318,84, or three-fifths of the total collections due for the year 1917. Collections this year are beter than usual. As a result of this heavy collection county finances are in splendid shape, more than $130,000 cash being on hand in all funds.

FARMERS' ELEVATOR CO., BUYS LIBERTY BONDS.

George, Ia., April 13.—The Farmers' Elevator company of Alvord at its April business meeting held this week voted to purchase $1,000 in the third issue of Liberty loan bonds, in addition to $1,000 worth purchased of the second issue. The company also voted $200 to the Alvord Red Cross chapter, $100 to the Y. M. C. A. war fund, $100 to the K. C. war fund, and $100 to the Lutheran church war fund.

LYON COUNTY FARMERS PLAN TO GROW CANE.

George, Ia., April 13.—Lyon county farmers are being urged by the county agent to sow a small patch of cane, to be made into sorghum, and so far as can be learned there isn't a single sorghum mill in the county, but Chas. Woods, of near George, says he will buy a mill if the farmers will grow the cane, and he'll make enough sorghum this fall to supply all of northwestern Iowa.

IOWA BRIEFS.

LEMARS—Rev. P. O. Ludy, of Enid, Okla., has been appointed pastor of the United Evangelical church at Hinton to succeed Rev. Belden Weikel, who has been transferred to the church at Charles City.

GEORGE—Henry Schumacher, sr., of southwest of George, near Boyden, has sold an 80-acre farm to Herman Hundt, of Wheeler township, at $296 per acre. Mr. Schumacher will retire from the farm next spring and move to George.

GEORGE—E. T. Gilman, for the past several years superintendent of Lyon county public schools, has been re-elected for another term. He was unopposed and received a unanimous vote.

MAY SPLIT PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT TAX

Washington, D. C., April 13.—The treasury is considering indorsing legislation to authorize installment payments of income and excess profits taxes due under the present law next June 15, Internal Revenue Commissioner Roper today told a delegation of the national conference of state manufacturers' associations.

MILWAUKEE ALIENS TO BE ORDERED INTERNED

Milwaukee, Wis., April 13.—Of 200 and more alien enemies arrested here in raids by federal authorities Wednesday, nearly all have been warned and released. About 30 are held for further questioning and it is believed the most "dangerous" of these will be sent to Chicago to join a special train of aliens leaving shortly for interment at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga.

RIGID RULES TO CURB SOCIAL DISEASE

Des Moines, Ia., April 13.—Responsibility for reporting to city and town boards of health, cases of social diseases is placed upon druggists and physicians in new regulations combatting social diseases issued by the state board of health Wednesday.

The regulations are drawn to make confinement of patients suffering from social diseases in special hospitals for their care, by municipalities, entirely legal.

Responsibility for arrest and examination by health officers is placed upon the chiefs of police and peace officers of the state.

Druggists are required to make a weekly report to local health boards of all persons to whom they sell remedies, giving the name, address and sex of the persons making purchases. Physicians are required to make similar reports of persons treated by them.

Persons found as victims of the diseases are to be restrained by order of the mayor of city clerk until they have been declared free from contagion.

The regulations are drawn similar to those adopted by the Des Moines board of health two months ago.

IOWA BOY HAS LETTER FROM GENERAL PERSHING

Waverly, Ia., April 13.—It is doubtful if there is a prouder, happier boy in Iowa, or anywhere in the United States, for that matter, than 10-year-old Raymond Downing, of this city.

In January the youngster's teacher asked the pupils in her room to write to someone "whom they knew" in France.

Master Downing decided to write to Gen. John J. Pershing. He didn't really know him, of course, but he would like to be a friend to the famous general.

General Pershing not only received the letter, but answered it.

He wrote.

"Master Raymond Downing 516 South State street, Waverly, Ia.—Dear Master Raymond: I have your letter of January 3 and am pleased to note your interest in the war.

"It is very pleasing to know that the people at home are standing so loyally behind their army, and as little American boys of today will be called upon to assume the responsibilities of the future, it is splendid to know that they are imbued with the patriotic spirit of their parents. Sincerely yours,

"John J. Pershing

IOWANS AND MINNESOTANS LIKE CAMP DODGE BEST

Washington, D. C., April 13.—Iowa and Minnesota men have been sent here in considerable numbers lately from Camp Dodge and are in camp at American University A force of several hundred lately arrived in command of Captain Helmer, of Carroll Most of them were from Iowa and Minnesota and had been trained at Camp Dodge for only a short time. Representative Woods visited a number of the men in camp here and was informed they much preferred Camp Dodge, both with respect to comfort of buildings and rations. A number of the arrivals are engineers, automobile experts or men of special technical skill or training

GOVERNMENT ACQUIRING GUN TESTING GROUND

Bellevue Ia., April 13. -The land which the government has purchased from the owners on the Illinois side opposite Bellevue, for gun testing and military grounds, is rapidly being transferred.

Hugh E. Curtis, an attorney from Rock Island, and his wife, Mary Curtis, have deeded 3,088 acres of land opposite this city in Hanover township to the United States of America for the consideration of $207,099.44. H. E. Curtis has transferred deeds to the United States of America for 2.460 acres of land for $172,979.46. So far the land transferred has been sold for an average price of $70 per acre.

There is a persistent rumor to the effect that government agents are now negotiating for the purchase of land between the Burlington right of way and the bluffs along the eastern edge of Sand Prairie, and that the Burlington railroad would in that case run their trains from Savannah to Dubuque over the Milwaukee tracks which pass through Bellevue.

TAMA COUNTY GERMAN IS UNDER ARREST

Des Moines, Ia., April 13.—Fritz Uphoff, born in Germany, but for many years a farmer near Gladbrook, Tama county, has been arrested by Roscoe Saunders, of the state secret service force and will probably be interned for the remainder of the war as an alien enemy Uphoff is charged with tearing down an American flag and tramping on it after it had been nailed to his house. He is also reported to have brought out a gun and threatened to shoot any one who opposed him.

MOTHER OF FIRST CHILD BORN IN LYON COUNTY

Marshalltown, Ia., April 13.—The mother of the first white child born in Lyon county, Iowa, died yesterday at Portland, Ore., according to a telegram received by Mrs. H. A. Kinnan, telling her of the death of her mother, Mrs. Nancy A. Hatch, widow of J. H. Hatch, of Little Rock, Ia. Mrs. Hatch had been in Portland for the winter visiting another daughter. She went to Little Rock a bride at the age of 16, and with her husband homesteaded a claim. Her oldest child, Mrs. Kinnan, claims the distinction of being the first white babe born in the northwestern Iowa county. Mrs. Hatch's body will be brought to Little Rock for burial.

DES MOINES TO OUST GERMAN LANGUAGE

Des Moines, Ia., April 13.—German is sure to be ousted from Des Moines public schools at the next meeting of the school board, according to Dr. Granville Ryan.

Dr. Ryan was the absent member of the board when a tie vote defeated efforts to oust German.

A special meeting of the school board will be called to reconsider ousting German.

The meeting will be some time this week, but the exact date has not been announced.

Dr. Ryan has a plan that he will suggest to the board.

SEARCH 36 HOURS FOR DEMENTED FARMER

Waterloo, Ia., April 13.—After a 36-hour search for James Raymond, a farmer living four and a half miles northeast of Toledo, who left home mysteriously early Tuesday morning he was found in a haymow by a searching party at 8:30 o'clock last night.

Mr. Raymond it appears became demented over the war situation and left his home. When he failed to put in his appearance at noon Tuesday his family became alarmed and a searching party was organized. His condition is serious.

LOSS OF YPRES NOW MIGHT REACT ON BRITISH MOVE

BY J. W. T. MASON,
Written for the United Press.

New York, April 13.—Creation of a new salient before Ypres, such as caused the evacuation of Armentieres, is the immediate purpose of Von Hindenburg's present operations in the sector north of the Armentieres positions.

Already an angle has begun to be formed in the Ypres area that threatens to develop difficulties for Marshal Haig unless the German's advance is checked. This is the reason why there is such persistent and desperate fighting at Holleboke, Wytschaete and Messines, and to the southwest. These positions dominate any operations from the south against Ypres. Their permanent occupation by the Germans would give Hindenburg an opportunity to swing his attack farther north, where progress of about five miles would compel the evacuation of Ypres.

The British positions in this sector are admirably taxed for defensive fighting. They can be made into death traps for the Germans, whose system of massed attacks is particularly liable to slaughter before the ridge on which the British defenses are based. If the ridge positions should fall Hindenburg, however, the distance beyond would present less difficulties because it is down hill from Ypres.

The capture of Ypres is desired by the Germans, not much because of any specific military value, but because of the moral effect the kaiser thinks can be produced in Great Britain. Much glory of British arms has been gained in the Ypres area and the recapture of the sector by the Germans would doubtless cause a shock.

But the selection of Ypres as objective by Hindenburg gives Marshal Haig a splendid opportunity to administer the second defeat to the Germans in the course of their recent drive. The first defeat came with the abandonment of further operations against Amiens. If Hindenburg is compelled to cease his slaughter of German troops in the Ypres area the result cannot fail to be disheartening to the German people at home, counting up their dead.

TROOPS LANDED AT VLADIVOSTOK

U. S. Marines Join Japanese and British in Occupation of Great Siberian Port to Curb Anarchy.

Washington, D. C., April 13.—Both the state and navy departments anticipated early today that they would be advised before night as to the reported landing of American marines at Vladivostok.

It has been known for some time—though confidentially—that the United States was represented in the squadron lying off the Siberian port, but officials suggested Americans would not land there unless American lives as well as property, were endangered.

It is anticipated that the reported American action will be seized upon by Lenine and his pro-German agents to inflame the Russian people. This will be offset, however, by an American statement as to the necessity for the action. Anarchy has been rife at Vladivostok and it is assumed that Americans would join the Japanese and British only in case of extreme necessity.

The reported landing does not mean that this country has changed her policy towards the recent proposed Japanese intervention in Siberia, it was stated officially.

It was said that if the marines were landed they were put ashore merely to protect American lives and property and not to interfere with the political situation.

SNOW IN NEW YORK; WIRE SERVICE HIT

New York, April 12.—Ninety-six hours of wintry weather in April came to a climax today with a storm of alternating snow, sleet and rain.

The snow did not fall heavily enough to accumulate, as it turned to slush immediately and traffic within the city was not subject to much interference, but reports from suburban districts indicated serious effects on telephone and telegraph service.

Sandy Hook and other towns where government work is under way, operations were suspended because employes were unable to travel.

SWIFT COMPANY RAISES CAPITAL TO $150,000,000

Chicago, April 12.—President Louis F. Swift announced today that Swift & Co.'s capitalization will be increased from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000. Half that increase is represented by stock to be sold shareholders at par. The other $25,000,000 will be issued as a dividend after a meeting of the stockholders on May 13.

Famous Educator and Wife of Soldier Held Under Mann Ac

Prof. William Isaac Thomas, of Chicago University, and M R. M. Granger Taken in Custody in Chicago Hotel Clerk's Suspicions Led to Exposure.

Chicago, April 13.—Hinton C. Clabaugh, chief of the local bureau of the department of justice, today announced that his agents last night took into custody Dr. William Isaac Thomas, of the faculty of the University of Chicago, widely known as an authority on sociology, and a woman said to be the wife of a Texas man now in France with General Pershing.

Mr. Clabaugh said he had turned over to United States District Attorney Clyne evidence completely rounded out for the institution of charges of violating the Mann act, and the act forbidding false registrations at hotels.

Dr. Thomas and the woman, who said she was a Mrs. R. M. Granger, of Washington, D. C., are said in the data given Mr. Clyne to have registered at a downtown hotel last night as man and wife from Gary, Ind. The alleged expose was due to the fact that the hotel clerk's suspicions were aroused. He notified Mr. Clabaugh and the latter sent agents who looked through their luggage.

Both were taken before Mr. Clyne last night and are quoted as having attempted little if any concealment.

According to Mr. Clabaugh, Dr. Thomas said:

"I love her and I don't care if the whole world knows it. My arrest is a tremendous injustice."

Mr. Clabaugh further quoted the woman as saying:

"Dr. Thomas was kind to me. After my husband left for France, Dr. Thomas was most solicitous for my comfort. I just liked him at first; later it grew into love."

Dr. Thomas, a man of distinguished appearance, is 55 years of age, marr and has grown children. Mrs. Thom was one of the founders of the wom peace party. Mrs. Granger is 24 y old and has a 2-year-old child liv with her mother at Fort Worth, Te

She said, according to Mr. Clabau that she accompanied her husband fr the training camp at Fort Worth New York to say goodbye when sailed. Dr. Thomas was in the city gather material for a book on Pol They were introduced by Mrs. Gr ger's sister. The latter and Mrs. Gr ger have been living at a south family hotel for about two weeks.

This morning it was said that Mr Granger left suddenly last night in taxicab to go down town. The sist name, according to G. W. Wayson, ma ager of the hotel, is Mrs. Rains.

Dr. Thomas for some time was mu in demand for his lectures on sociolo and the relation of sex thereun Among his teachings were:

"Women are better off for havi had their fling as men do. Dissipat women often make excellent wives.

"Chivalry is the persistence of the race habit of contempt for women.

"Any girl mentally mature has th right to have children and the right t limit their number.

"The morality of women is an exp diency rather than an innate virtue.

"Marriage as it exists today is rapidly approaching a form of immorality.

"Matrimony is often an arrangement by which the woman trades her irreproachable conduct for irreproachable gowns.

"Children are not the result of mar riage, but marriages is the result of children."

LOSS OF YPRES IS THREATENED

British Hold on Famous Messines Ridge Still Unshaken But Germans Have Driven a Deep Wedge in Front.

FURIOUS BATTLE RAGES

Heavy Losses Piled Up in Latest Fighting—Danger to Ypres Grows as Teuton Salient Is Extended.

Latest dispatches from the fighting front in Flanders indicates that General Haig's center has been forced back more than 10 miles from before Armentieres Haig's last communication conceded a retirement of more than seven miles. The British flanks apparently are holding

Ypres is being pocketed in a dangerous salient. The Germans are within striking distance of the Bethune-Hazebrouck railway which parallels the fighting line

BY WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the British Armies in France, April 12.—The battle around Armentieres has been resumed with redoubled fury.

The enemy has passed the Loisne and Lawe streams, in the direction of St. Venant (seven and a half miles west of Estaires, on the Lys canal, and are advancing beyond Steenwerck, toward Bailleul (seven miles northwest of Armentieres and three miles beyond Steenwerck.)

Some ground has been lost in order to conform to the movement to the south.

This morning, east of Ploegsteert, there was a terrific German bombardment.

A German officer, taken prisoner, declared the Germans were ordered to capture Amiens today at all costs

London, April 13.—German troops made a determined attack along the Messines ridge and succeeded in gaining some ground, says a Reuter dispatch from British army headquarters in France and Belgium, but the British once again drove them out by a counter attack early this morning

Three attacks which the enemy launched yesterday in great waves near Ville Chapelle were repulsed with immense losses to the Germans. The ground was strewn with their corpses

The Germans are developing great artillery activity in the southern area, the dispatch says. The Bray-Corbie road is being fiercely shelled, heralding it is believed, further infantry attacks

In brilliant sunshine the battle is continuing with fierceness which has scarcely fagged since the beginning The Germans are throwing in their reserves in the same prodigal manner as in the opening days of the offensive

MESSINES RIDGE BULWARK.
By Associated Press.

With the British hanging grimly on to the great bulk of Messines ridge, their bulwark in Flanders, the Germans to the south are pushing their wedge deeper into the British lines northeast and north of Bethune, one of the British advanced bases

The Germans today were continuing what appeared to be their heaviest pressure in this region, and had made some progress, when the noon official report was issued in London.

The southern side of the salient as it runs southeast toward Givenchy, is being strongly held by the British.

The British task here patently is to prevent the sides of the salient from being materially widened out as the tip cannot be pushed in much further without great danger to the attacking forces from flank attack, unless they succeed in broadening their advance front.

Northwest of Armentieres, abandoned yesterday by the British the line was straightened out by their withdrawal from Ploegstreet, whence they fell back, fighting, to the vicinity of Neuve Eglise, close to the southerly end of Messines ridge, which protects their new positions.

The British lines apparently are being firmly maintained along the high ground in the Messines and Wytschaete regions and to the north toward Ypres. No material change in the situation is reported here. The battle, however, is continuing along the whole front from La Bassee canal north to Hollebeke, the Germans hammering hard in their desperate attempts to win something substantial out of this new ambitious effort of theirs. So far its only definite result has been the piling up of casualties on both sides, notably their own.

The mists yesterday continued to favor the enemy and to hamper the defending gunners. It was partly on account of these fogs that the Germans progressed as far as they did above Armentieres. The enemy yesterday did not attack with the huge forces employed on other sectors since the opening of the offensive, although he undoubtedly used many more men than were holding the line attacked.

A small force of the British bicycle corps did brilliant work for a short time on Tuesday when the Portuguese were forced back and it was necessary to reinforce the center of the allies' battle line below Armentieres. This little body of troops were thrown in and held on gallantly until the regular infantry could be brought up.

There was especially bitter fighting along the Lys near Croix Du Bac, where the Germans crossed by wading. As they worked in towards the river from both flanks the British held their fire and allowed the enemy to assemble. Once the Germans were in the river the defenders opened a terrific fire and there was a huge pile of bodies in the waterway before some of the enemy succeeded in getting across.

BRITISH ADMIT LOSS.

London, April 13.—Attacking yesterday in the neighborhood of Ploegstreet the Germans pressed back the British to the vicinity of Neuve Eglise, it is announced officially.

North of Festubert the British regained ground by a counter attack. On the front between Loisne and the Lawe river German attacks were repulsed Last night the Germans captured Merville Heavy fighting is continuing in the neighborhood of Merville and Neuf Berquis.

On the remainder of the northern battle front there is little change.

The announcement follows

"Severe and continuous fighting took place last night in the neighborhood of Merville and Neuf Berquin, in both of which localities the enemy is continuing his pressure and has made progress Merville was captured by the enemy during the night.

"Attacks made by the enemy yesterday in the neighborhood of Ploegsteert succeeded after heavy fighting in pressing our troops back to the neighborhood of Neuve Eglise to new positions.

"On the remainder of the northern battle front the situation is substantially unchanged. A part of our positions, into which the enemy formed his way north of Festubert was regained by a counter attack. On the front between Loisne and the Lawe river and to the north hostile attacks have been repulsed Fighting is continuing on the whole front north of La Bassee canal as far as Houlebeke."

"South of Arras strong local attacks were made by the enemy yesterday against our positions in the neighborhood of Neuville Vitasse and were repulsed in each case.

"Further north the enemy succeeded after prolonged fighting, in entering one of our posts near Tilloy-Le-Moffalaines, but he at once was driven out and the post reestablished

"The hostile artillery has shown increased activity astride the River Somme."

PORTUGUESE GENERAL LOST.

London, April 12.—Fighting is continuing between the La Basse and the Ypres-Comines canals, Field Marshal Haig reported in his night communique

Between Steenwerck and a point north of Estaires, a German attack pushed the British back The enemy also progressed in the neighborhood of Ploegsteert wood Fresh German divisions were beaten off between Estrem and the Loisne and a British counter attack resulted in the recapture of lost positions.

The German war office in its statement late yesterday claimed more than 10,000 prisoners in the fighting around Armentieres, including a Portuguese general

British positions on the south bank of the Lys and the east bank of the Lawe were captured, together with Hollebeke and the British first line south of that place, Berlin announced.

Messines height was said to have been stormed and to be held by the Germans as far as Ploegsteert wood.

South of Estaires, the Germans claimed to have reached the Lawe

HEAVY ARTILLERY FIRE.

Paris, April 12.—Heavy artillery fighting occurred last night in the vicinity of Hangard-En-Santerre, on the front north of Montdidier, the war office announces.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

Washington, D. C., April 13.—Peace efforts—by mail, secret messenger, or "star chamber" session—only emphasize the value of "open air diplomacy," officials declared today.

It was their answer to the latest developments in the international peace bickering, launched recently by the Teutons and now involving Austria, France and the United States.

The futility of alleged peace negotiations such as the Austrian Count Czernin declared France had sought with Austria in Switzerland, or such as the French government asserted Austria had taken up by autographed letter from Emperor Charles with France, is shown plainly, officials declare, in the fact that today Premier Clemenceau says "Count Czernin lied" and Emperor Charles says "Clemenceau lied."

Meantime the United States got into the peace parley situation with the Austrian story that a Professor Anderson had been bickering for peace with Austria—with the prompt disavowal here of anything Anderson may have done officially.

On the heels of this, it was learned today that the state department files record a score or more of unofficial and informal peace feelers launched from time to time at different places—which have come to naught.

This government is ready today—as President Wilson indicated at Baltimore—to receive bona fide and sincere peace offers and it will negotiate on a sincere basis with such offers. But it is emphasized that nothing can be gained by the deceitful, backdoor methods thus far pursued by the Teutons. Such tactics only meet with passing of the lie, disavowal and no progress toward a just peace.

THIRD LIBERTY LOAN WILL BREAK RECORDS

Grain Belt Farmers Respond to Call of "Come Across or the Kaiser Will."

Washington, D. C., April 13.—America's third Liberty loan drive promises to be its greatest.

Returns to the treasury department today indicated that not only great cities, but counties and in two cases reported already, whole states have oversubscribed their quotas.

The most significant part of the great response, it is stated, is the great answer of the country's farmers. In the grain belt—where politicians here have cried that the farmer with his wheat price fixed can't make an honest living—the dollars are rolling into the government coffers by millions. One of the states unofficially reported to have oversubscribed its quota already is a midwestern grain state.

The same enthusiastic reply to America's appeal for dollars—"come across or the kaiser will"—is found everywhere The Liberty loan officials here are demanding official check ups on all reports that there may be no false optimism but indication of the nation's rally is found here, where in a single theater the subscriptions thus far have been four times what they totaled in the entire last campaign.

IOWA IS CONCEDED LOAN HONOR FLAG

Chicago, April 13.—Iowa was conceded the honor flag at the Seventh federal reserve district headquarters here today for being first to exceed her Liberty bond quota. After four days of campaigning the Hawkeye state passed her minimum of $71,050,000, it is reported. The drive today was centered on getting all cities and counties to reach the full quota

HUN MARSHAL IS WOUNDED

Hindenburg in Strassburg Hospital For Slight Wound Inflicted by Bomb From Allied 'Plane.

London, April 13.—Field Marshal Hindenburg is reported under treatment in a private hospital at Strassburg for a slight wound, said to have been caused by a bomb dropped from an allied airplane on the west front, a Turkish dispatch in the Daily Express declares.

BRITISH PRISONERS TREATED BRUTALLY

Forced to Work Under Fire of Haig's Guns, Beaten, Starved and Denied Shelter.

London, April 13.—How British prisoners of war in Germany are enslaved, starved and subjected to untold cruelties is related in an official report of the government committee made public today. The detention and employment of non-commissioned officers and men captured on the western front says the report, "have brought on these prisoners an amount of unjustifiable suffering for which it would be hard to find a parallel in history."

The report is based on an accumulation of evidence and shows that prisoners have been employed constantly under shell fire and that many have been killed by British guns; that they have been kicked and beaten, denied clothing and adequate shelter; have often been shot and that deaths from starvation and overwork have been constant.

French prisoners have been subjected to the same treatment. Some of the prisoners receive neither letters nor parcels for eight or nine months after their capture. Last November there was in the Limburg station between 18,000 and 20,000 undelivered parcels for British prisoners.

JAPANESE SAY NAME OF FORD IS HOUSEHOLD WORD

Detroit, Mich., April 13.—The Imperial Japanese war mission, headed by Lieut. General K. Chikushi, hero of Port Arthur, inspected Detroit's industrial plants today.

The visitors were particularly interested in the Ford plant.

"Henry Ford's name is a household word in Japan," General Chikushi remarked through an interpreter. "American automobiles are quite common in our empire."

He declined to discuss military matters.

The party will leave late today for Cleveland.

KU KLUX KLAN WARNS OKLAHOMA SLACKERS

Tulsa, Okla., April 13.—While Liberty loan parade was in progress at Skiatook, a small town near here, yesterday, 16 men garbed after the manner of the Ku Klux Klan, rode into the town and silently joined in the procession.

On banners carried by the riders were the words:

"Warning to _____, and _____, naming three men, who are alleged to have refused to buy Liberty bonds.

Each horseman had fastened to his saddle a coil of rope.

PREPARING FOR FIGHT IN IRELAND, REPORT

Machine Guns and Tanks on Way John Dillon Informs Commons.

London, April 12.—John Dillon, Irish nationalist leader in the house of commons yesterday said he understood that motor cars, machine guns and tanks already had been shipped and were sailing away from the battle front toward Ireland. Mr. Dillon pleaded strongly against what he termed the governments's "guillotine methods."

The debate on the man power bill centered largely around a discussion of requests by Mr. Dillon and others for more time in which to consider the measure. The government eventually conceded to permit the house, contrary to custom to sit on both Friday and Saturday so as to add two days to the time for the discussion. The bill then entered committee and an amendment substituting 48 years for 51 as the age limit was defeated by a vote of 262 to 152.

NOT READY FOR COUNTER DRIVE

Allies May Fight Defensively For Many Months—Holding Off Huns Main Object Now.

Washington, D. C., April 12.—Germany will not push her way through to Calais.

That was the view of military strategists today, based on the brief developments of the Flanders drive, coupled with experience of the past.

While still making progress and in a tactical position to continue it for a time the German is meeting more stubborn resistance than in his pounding for Amiens. There are some evidences, too that his punch is weaker.

The thought here is that he may run a line out farther across the map pointing at Calais, just as he did at the outset of the war, but it is regarded certain now that he cannot reach the channel port if that is his objective. In the 1914 smash he ran two dagger points across France, one aimed at Paris and the other toward the channel.

In this battle the daggers point at Amiens and Calais. The overnight news on the battle line gave a tone of some encouragement from the gallant defense of the important points along the Flanders sector.

The frequent question, "why have the allies failed to counter attack?" is best answered by Lloyd George's recent speech, military men say. They pointed out today that though the Versailles council saw to a mathematical nicety what would occur in the German push, the allies then lacked unified control and dared not do too much massing of reserves at any one point. This has been true ever since the struggle started. The uncertainty as to the German striking points made the shifting of reserves a risky venture. And the violence of his prodigal human onslaught made it necessary to use a vast force merely to check him.

However, some strategists say that with Americans, British and Irish strengthening the reserve, it will still be possible to make trouble for the Boche. He has been drawn on and on, and if the reserve is strengthened fast enough the time will come when a blow can be dealt against him at a vulnerable point, it is believed. This may be some months off, but in the meantime the allies and America will be able to check him before he reaches vital spots.

FIVE MEN ARE BEING HELD FOR LYNCHING

Honorably Discharged Soldier Is Among Those to Answer For German's Death.

Collinsville, Ill., April 12.—Five men were under arrest today alleged to be leaders of the mob which a week ago lynched Robert Praeger, alien enemy Following recommendations of a coroner's jury, the accused were immediately rounded up and taken to the jail at Edwardsville. The grand jury is expected to return indictments next week.

Joseph Riegel, honorably discharged soldier, Wesley Beaver, Richard Dukes jr., William Brockmeier and Enid Elmore are the men being held.

ROMANOFF FAMILY IN TIGHT CIRCUMSTANCES

Moscow, April 12.—The Romanoff family, most of whom are residing in the Crimea, are suffering from want, according to the Moscow papers. The dowager empress, Maria Feodorovna with Grand Duke Nicholas, the Great Duchess Xenia and children and other members of the family is allowed to spend only 400 rubles a month, while the expenses of all of them cannot exceed 10,000 rubles. They have five servants, but many of the former court noblemen and noble women who are staying with the Romanoffs, do their own washing or work in the vineyards, earning occasionally four rubles a day.

RACE HORSES BURNED.

Baltimore, Md., April 12.—Nearly a score of race horses were reported to have perished in a fire which destroyed several stable at Bowie racetrack last night. The fire is said to have been confined to the stables.

ACCEPT RESIGNATION OF BISHOP PAUL JONES

New York, April 12.—The resignation of Bishop Paul Jones as head of the missionary province of Utah, was accepted today by the house of bishops of the Protestant Episcopal church in America. Bishop Jones denied the charge that he held pacifist views. Rev. James Wilmer Gresham, dean of Grace cathedral, San Francisco, was elected bishop to the Philippines.

WHERE FARMING IS PROFITABLE

The Future of Great Possibilities.

Some ides of the great wealth that the Western Canada farmer had in view a few years ago is now being realized. The amount received from the sale of wheat, oats, barley, flax and rye in 1917 was $270,000,000, while the sales of live stock at Winnipeg alone netted $40,000,000 additional. Of this sum hogs alone gave over eleven million dollars. The increases at Calgary and Edmonton were over 6¼ million dollars.

This money, so easily earned, is being spent in improvements in farm property, purchasing additional land, buying tractors, automobiles, and improving home conditions, providing electric light, steam heat, new furniture, pianos, buying Victory bonds, paying up old debts, etc.

Over five hundred tractors were sold in Southern Alberta in 1917. One implement agent reports that the increase in his business in 1917, over that of 1916, was equal to the total business in 1915. It is the same story all over the country. And it is not this evidence alone which proves the advancement and growth of the three prairie provinces, but the large increase in the number of settlers; the improvement in the extent of the cultivated areas and agricultural production; the increase in value of which over 1916 was $77,000,000.

This wonderful progress that has been made in agriculture in Western Canada is but the beginning which marks the future of the greatest agricultural country on the continent, showing a future of great possibilities. There are millions of acres yet untilled, and of land as good as any of that which is now giving its owners a return of from twenty to thirty dollars an acre, figures that in many cases represent the cost of the land, with all cultivation costs included. It is true that the cost of production has increased during the past few years, but the price of the product has also increased to a figure which leaves a large balance to the credit of the producer.

	1913 Price in bus. wheat	1917 Price in bus. wheat

Percentage increases are shown too in another way, leading to the same conclusion, from consultation of the Department of Labor's review of prices. Taking 100 as the index number of normal production in the decade from 1890 to 1900, the increases in prices of farm products have slightly outdistanced the increases in his needs.

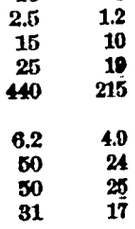
NERVES GAVE OUT
Serious Kidney Trouble Had Made Life Miserable, But Doan's Removed All the Trouble. Hasn't Suffered Since.

"I had such severe pains in my back," says Mrs. Albert Akroyd, 304 W. Indiana Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa., "that they almost doubled me up. Many a day I could not do my housework and at every move it seemed as if my back would break in two. My feet and ankles swelled until I had to wear large-sized slippers and sometimes I couldn't stand up.



Mrs. Akroyd

"I had dizzy spells and dreadful headaches and fiery flashes passed before my eyes. Had a heavy weight been resting on my head, the pain could not have been more distressing. The least noise startled me, I was so nervous. I couldn't control the kidney secretions and the pain in passage was awful.

"It began to look as though my case was beyond the reach of medicine until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. The first box benefited me and four boxes cured all the troubles. I have had no further cause for complaint."

Don't be fooled into buying the name of a manufacturer—buy quality.

"Advertising" nor "strong statements" do not make quality.

We handle "some" of the nationally advertised clothing but "only" when we find superior quality in it. Very often we find by comparison superior clothing in non advertised brands. Clothing better for the price, in fabric, in workmanship, in build, in shape retaining quality.

When we find better quality for the price we buy it. Thirty-six years of "knowing how" should "equip us to help us" secure the best clothing to be had for the money.

You'll find this an easy place to find what you want and you'll learn to know that your money brings you the greatest returns when you buy here.

TEN IMPORTANT POINTS SHOULD GOVERN YOUR MOTOR CAR SELECTION

"A motor car is an important investment" say Meyer & Johnson, local Chevrolet, Oakland and Franklin dealers. "And it is only fair," they continue, "that the prospective purchaser be taught the essentials of motor car knowledge before investing his money.

"Before selecting a motor car, the buyer should carefully consider each of these ten important points: (1) Economy; (2) Power and flexibility; (3) Durability; (4) Comfort; (5) Safety; (6) Convenience; (7) Ease and care; (8) Easy riding; (9) Beauty; (10) Style.

"It is not necessary to consider these points in order as stated, although it would be a safe plan to follow.

"Economy has been given preference, for the reason that it is the important point of the hour. Buy a car having an economical record, one that will give you a maximum amount of mileage for each gallon of gasoline. This is governed by type of motor, bearings, lubrication and weight.

"The next important essential to watch for is power. You want power in an automobile. You want to be able to go anywhere. You do not want to feel any limitations in this respect.

"Durability is something we all seek in making a purchase. It is especially important when one considers the amount involved. This item depends on the integrity of the maker his honesty, his ideals, his standards.

"Conveniences and comforts are important, too. Buy a car that gives you the little things that make motoring enjoyable and free from care. Select your motor car with this knowledge and without mistakes."

No, He Wasn't Nervous.

A young pitcher making his first appearance in big league company hit the first batter, passed the next two, and made a wild throw in the first inning. As he went to the bench the manager of the team asked, "What's the matter? Are you nervous?" "Naw," he said angrily, "but my darn limbs shake."

Stretched Cane Seats.

When the cane seats of chairs have become stretched, take a teaspoonful of washing soda and dissolve in a quart of boiling water. Dip a cloth in this solution and wipe the underside of the seats, leaving the chair turned upside down to dry. This treatment will shrink the cane to its original size.

Their Menu

"Most unusual—even unprecedented," said Hayes. "There must be something wrong with this grocery bill for last week! With prices as high as they are now we never could have lived on such a small amount as that, especially on the kind of meals you've been serving."

"Do you think the meals have been good?" meekly inquired Mrs. Hayes.

"Good! I think they have been entirely too good. In fact, I think you have been a little extravagant, especially for the last ten days. We ought to do our part by cutting down on elaborate meals. What's so funny about that?"

Mrs. Hayes was struggling with laughter while she wiped the tears from her face. "Oh, Jack, you are the biggest goose I ever saw," she said. "Why, I've been practicing conservation for the last ten days. I—"

"You can't tell me there was anything conserving about that dinner we had tonight."

"Well, I just can! Our dinner tonight was a regular war dinner.

"You remember that the only thing I had been doing for our boys and our country was knitting and, of course, I wanted to do something more than that," explained Mrs. Hayes. "So I signed the Hoover pledge card and I've been going to conservation meetings every day and I've learned a lot."

"That's fine—glad to hear it, but how about that dinner tonight?"

"I'm coming to that. To begin with, the soup was made from the chicken gravy I had left from Sunday dinner."

"Yes, but today is Tuesday," protested her husband.

"Of course, but what of it? Yesterday we had creamed chicken on toast made from the chicken left from Sunday and also a rice curry, flavored with the chicken soup. Then today I combined the water I had boiled the rice in yesterday with the chicken gravy I had left and with a little seasoning it made our soup tonight.

"Potatoes are cheap. I bought some from the huckster Saturday for 25 cents a peck. So you see our potatoes tonight cost about a penny and the turnips cost 5 cents.

"How about the croquette? Of course you had to buy meat for them?"

"Nothing of the kind. You know we only have steak once a week now? The croquettes were made from a piece of steak left from Saturday night's dinner combined with an onion, some bread crumbs and seasoning."

"Good, so far, but you can't get away from the fact that it takes eggs, butter and milk to make cake."

"Wrong again! Our cake tonight was an eggless, milkless, butterless cake and the sauce was some plum juice thickened that I had left after canning plums. There wasn't enough of the thickened juice to make a glass of jelly or I should have used it for that and we'd have eaten the cake plain.

"Of course we must save our wheat for our own soldiers and the French and British. The only wheat flour I have used all day was one cup that went in the cake. You know we had corn cakes for breakfast and rye bread for lunch and dinner."

"Help! Help!" implored Hayes. "I kneel to your ladyship and crave your pardon for daring to doubt one so efficient. There is only one thing troubling me and that is the delicious salad we had for dinner, last evening. Perhaps you'll tell me it was made out of a spoonful of air and a wisp of cloud, flavored with a dewdrop and garnished with a sunbeam?"

"Pretty near," laughed Mrs. Hayes. "I'd been making chowchow and after it was canned there were a couple of tablespoonfuls left, so I mixed that with a tomato, an onion, a couple of leftover potatoes, a bit of celery, dressed it with vinegar and garnished it with parsley from my parsley box."

"I am swathed in humbleness, my dear," said Hayes. "If you keep this up we can soon buy another Liberty bond and become vulgarly healthy, besides."

4. To work and to help others to work to appreciate the vital determining character of the industrial activity at home on modern warfare of this style.

The first rule we all know in theory, but find it very difficult to practice. Its observance requires a degree of civilian discipline which looks easy in the first enthusiasm of the campaign, but becomes more difficult to maintain in the long process of the war. People want to hear which regiments are engaged in this or that action; newspapers want news—the more vivid the better—and readers will tell you that it is difficult to maintain civilian support for the war unless such news is forthcoming.

There are degrees in the secrecy which must be maintained. It is perhaps more important in the beginning of operations than after they are well under way. The various commanding forces of the various armies have interpreted the rule with varying emphasis and severity. But, roughly speaking, the more perfect the secrecy is maintained the better is the chance of success. The enemy's intelligence department like one's own pieces together every scrap of information and most apparently insignificant detail may furnish a most important clew.

As an instance of the ranging rules, the French have gone as far as to suppress all casualty lists; the Germans began by detailed casualty lists which were first falsified and then abandoned, the British have continually maintained the policy of full and accurate casualty lists up to date. This is an example of difference in degree.

Another difference, one of policy, is that the allies rarely mention the names of units which have performed some particular achievement, contrasting somewhat strongly with the German policy of naming them frequently, both for the sake of emulation inside the army and to cultivate enthusiasm among the civilians at home. But the supreme thing to remember is that the degree of secrecy and the manner of it are things that can be judged by the military command alone, and that to grow weary of it or to grumble against it is to court defeat.

To appreciate the large proportion of men who cannot actually be used in the fighting is less urgent for the writer and talker, but has its importance. One of the most frequent (and to those who know their subject most exasperating) pieces of press criticism on the army in a certain phase of this war was the complaint that so many men were drawing rations and yet were not present in the fighting zone. It took all sorts of forms, complaints that the honor of fighting had been withheld, or that the danger of it was being shirked, or that an administration which needed so many men behind the lines must be inefficient.

All that sort of talk comes from sheer ignorance. The civilian should make up his mind that, especially in the present war, he is dealing with lines of communications and conditions of transport which will at least divide in half his total apparent effective force of a hundred men drawing rations for which the nation pays it is lucky if 50 are at any given time actually using their arms. The proportion of non-combatant to actual combatant numbers is often much larger than this.

Another thing the civilian will do well to remember is that the whole effort of the able, trained and patriotic men who have control of the job and understand it is to cut down the proportion of non-combatant troops as low as ever they can.

The third rule, although the most obvious, is the one most frequently broken. Napoleon said wisely that any fool could see a strategical advantage and draw up a strategical plan, but that the test of talent was to see what in practice was the best plan and to carry it out on the spot. Any one could see, for instance, in this campaign that the Dardanelles was one of the keypoints on the map; any one could see in the Dardanelles operations that the neck of the Gallipoli peninsula carried the communications on which the principal forts that defended the Dardanelles were absolutely dependent. Why was not the neck occupied? Because of hundreds of practical reasons which your amateur map strategist does not, perhaps cannot know.

These first three rules are dull because they are negative and their effect is not immediate. But the fourth rule is another matter. Let me repeat it: "To work and to help others to work to appreciate the vital determining character of the industrial activity at home on modern warfare of this style."

If this rule is not acted upon you may get disaster very promptly. It is the very core of civilians' duty during the struggle. If it is still imperfectly understood—and actually if it is imperfectly understood on the enemy's side as upon our own even after four years of war—the reason is that it is novel. In no past war has the industrial activity of the civilian population at home been the vital and overwhelming factor which it is today

Industrial Output Biggest Factor.

The present great campaign has turned the belligerents of nations not only into two warring camps, but, as it were, into two vast competing industrial firms, and by the output of these industrial firms the action in the fields are being more and more decided. On this will depend the victory in the air which will perhaps be the decisive factor in 1918—the subjugation of the submarine depends upon it and—the putting into use of the derelict or wasted land—famine conditions in Europe depend upon it.

Why has the Russian state gone to pieces? Because the Russian lines were broken in Galicia 34 months ago solely through the immense preponderance of metal upon the Austro-German side. For the whole fighting season that followed the Russian armies were sacrificed in masses to the increasing difference in munitionment. The Germans and Austrians captured droves of prisoners who did not have even rifles, and the Russian artillery could not deliver one shell to the enemy's 20. Even the caliber of all its weapons above field guns was not upon the average half that of its opponents. The aircraft, already hopelessly insufficient, fell from less to less until it was insignificant.

Victory or defeat in 1918 depends now upon the workshops. Every dispute should be forgotten until the event has been decided. There will be time enough to settle social questions after the decision of the war. That is a hard saying to men whose whole lives have been given up to the settlement of social theories and the modern economic struggle, but it is a true one. A family does not continue its quarrel when the house is on fire.

To the man who asks you whether social justice is not the same in time of war as in time of peace there is no answer. We must admit that it is, but if the war is lost the opportunities for obtaining social justice will never be what they were in the past. That again is a hard saying for the man who sees vividly wrong conditions at home. But for him, as for all others, the result of the fighting abroad will determine his own economic future far more than will the immediate local result of economic quarrels.

German Novel Opposes War.

From the New York Sun

Leonard Frank, in "Man Is Good" (Der Mensch Is Gut) has written a novel against war. The work, it is reported, appeared in Liepzig simultaneously with its publication in Zurich, and bears the date 1918.

The novelist, through the heroes of his imagination, revolts against the German order of things, against the "false sense of duty." The principal characters of the book protest at the risk of their lives and by their example try to incite the country to rise in revolt. Whether they will succeed is another story, since the author warns us that "all decent Germans are already dead or imprisoned."

One of the principal actors in this book is the humble cafe waiter, who, weeping for the death of his only son, is willing to recognize that he too had a part in the collective folly of Germany. He admits that he worked to develop in his child warlike and murderous sentiments. This German waiter turned pacifist after the failure of the world war. Of the "fresh and joyous war," he exclaimed "The enemy is not the Englishman, the Frenchman or the Russian. The enemy is ourselves. Want of love—that is the enemy, that is the cause of all wars. Europe is mad because she no longer knows how to love." And he insists anew on the errors of an entire people.

"We are all accomplices in this war," he says. "We aimed only for our success. All of you, as well as I, you have admired, you have recognized as your leaders the men of violence who succeed. We were proud when our children sang songs of war and of murder.

"We rejoiced at the first news of victory. Little did we care if, to take a stronghold, 50,000 men were slaughtered. It was all the same to us, because in our own hearts we had only the desire of success, of riches, of power. Our leaders were only able to make us march and transform all Europe into a shambles because our conception of life corresponded to theirs with a horrible similarity."

British Learning to Cook.

From the London Daily Express.

The ministry of food has discovered 34 different ways of cooking the potato, apart altogether from the common boiled and baked and fried. Even in the days of plenty, the British standard of comfort was lowered by what might be called the neglected cooking range. The English woman as cook has generally been more distinguished by good intentions than by notable achievement.

In these war times, when food materials are dear and sometimes scarce the resourceful and imaginative cook becomes a great national asset. The war must vitally affect domestic economy. It is teaching us to hate waste and to be entirely concerned with effectiveness. Architects now promise us better kitchens and sculleries and at the same time they threaten the abolition of the "parlor," that sacred institution made to be dusted and not to be used. "Better cooking and no parlors" is a capital recipe for domestic happiness.

The Corrective Must Come.

From Capper's Weekly

The wealth of the United States is about $240,000,000,000—more than the combined wealth of Britain, France and Germany. We are spending $1,000,000,000 a month financing the war, but these billions are being taxed for less than one-quarter of the cost of the war.

One of the agencies that are making profiteer prices possible is the extravagant spending of the wealthy, which war and war prices and the necessity of economy in luxuries has not curbed.

Sooner or later congress will be compelled to apply the corrective. The sooner the better. It will be a radically higher tax on incomes which should be made to rest heaviest on the profiteer class and the recipients of high war profits. This will stop extravagance, draft millions of dollars in support of the war which now are slacking, and will ease somewhat the heavy burdens of the war now resting on the backs of wage earners and producers.

Grass Grows on Sheep.

From the Washington, Ore., Bulletin.

A curiosity that most people won't believe unless they see it is a bunch of grass bearing sheep, the property of John Cartwright.

Several members of his flocks have a luxuriant growth of tame grass growing on the back and well down the sides of their bodies, giving them the appearance of having a pretty, green fleece.

It is accounted for from the fact that grass seed falling from the feed wagon and lodging in the wool sprouted when being continuously moistened by Oregon's copious showers.

PLAYING KNITTING? HUH! SHE IS NOT!

ELIZABETH DOUDICAN

Elizabeth Doudican.

"Look at the little dear, playing knitting for the soldiers,'" you cry.

Playing nuthin'! She's knitting—she is.

But it's not strange you'd make that error, because she is the youngest knitter in America. Miss Elizabeth Doudican is her name. She is four-going-on-five, and she lives at Fishers, Ind., where she attends every Red Cross knitting circle. Some of the men in service right now are wearing things she knitted.

AMERICA'S GREAT WAR MACHINE

Lord Northcliffe Pays Eloquent Tribute to This Nation's Enterprise—When Slumbering Giant Awakes Fully Germany Will Feel Mighty Blow—Characteristics of U. S. Analyzed.

BY LORD NORTHCLIFFE.

(The following article, reflecting the views of the famous British leader and newspaper owner, sums up his comment on the progress made by America since entering the war 11 months ago. It is taken from the book published by the George H. Doran company, entitled "Lord Northcliffe's War Book.")

Since I have been in the United States—I arrived early in the month of June—I have seen the beginning of the growth of a war machine unequaled in the world's history. The machine was built in the American way. As I watched the process I was reminded continually of the method of building the skyscrapers, whose roots are deep, deep down in the rock that forms the island on which New York stands.

In watching the building of a skyscraper, the uninformed observer feels that the thing will never begin. For some time there is a blasting of rock, crowds of men appear with strange machines, nothing much seems to happen. Then, gradually but surely, a great steel skeleton arises.

The progress does not seem to be as rapid as it might be, until suddenly the passer-by finds to his astonishment that the exterior walls of the seventeenth or thirtieth story are finished, the lower stories being yet in skeleton form. There is another delay, and lo! the skyscraper suddenly finished, and housing its 10,000 or 15,000 busy workers.

The American war machine was and, as I write, is still being built in the same way.

Bewildering to British.

From the staid British point of view the process was sometimes bewildering. There were delays, tolerances, repetitions of European war blunders, criticisms, arguments, extravagant optimism and grave underestimations. Sometimes at the end of a long day one looked back on the morning and could see no progress. But at the conclusion of every six days there was not only an advance, but sometimes a leap.

The great giant of the west slumbered more or less uneasily for the first two and a half years of the war, he eventually woke with some unwillingness. Once awake with amazing celerity he was out and about, up and doing. He swiftly girded his armor and fashioned the club that should end the rule of despotism in Europe.

Lookers-on and critics here in the United States were astonished to find that almost without public notice conscription came into being. When it arrived, it worked as smoothly as though it had been in use since the Declaration of Independence. Again the giant paused awhile and people began to wonder what he was doing, but meanwhile the streets became filled with khaki. The stern looking business men and professional beauties of photographers' shops were replaced by clean-visaged officers and nurses. The parks were busy from dawn to dark with men in shirt sleeves at drill. Those trying to make business appointments by telephone found that So-and-so had gone to France or to an officers' training camp at Plattsburg or elsewhere. The war hourly became more and more a part of the visible public life.

My American home is some miles out of New York city. When I took up my residence there in June last there were no signs of war about me. I went to Washington and returned after the space of a few days. A vast camp, as big as ours at Witley in Surrey appeared at my doors as though it had grown by magic.

Cantonments Great Affairs.

This camp was not on the map, so to speak; it was not one of the great cantonments that were built with lightning speed. Of these soldier cities there are now 16 finished or nearly so. They are no mere camps. There is a permanence about them that makes it difficult to realize that they are built in two score of days. A number of them are being erected wisely in the sunny and comparatively stormless south, where the soldiers and more especially the flying men will be in full training during the whole winter.

Let me describe one of these cities in the words of an English eyewitness, one of the 16 cities which will accommodate the first installment (650,000 men) gathered by conscription. These cities are tangible proof of the efficiency of American methods of organization applied to war making. We asked and obtained permission to see one of the most rapidly finished. It happened to be 2,000 miles from New York. It did not seem to concern those who extended the very cordial invitation that the journey was a long one; it is regarded here as we look upon the journey from London to Newcastle (about 200 miles) or London to Glasgow (less than 300 miles).

Early in July there lay three miles outside San Antonio, Tex., a stretch of ground covered with a difficult kind of scrub or bush. On July 6 there appeared an army of between 9,000 and 10,000 workmen of every known nationality, directed by young Americans of the Harvard and Yale type.

The 10,000 arrived in every kind of conveyance, in mule carts, farm wagons, horse cabs, motors and huge motor vans. At the end of the day's work, when the whistle had blown, the scene resembled that of some eccentric elaborately staged cinematograph film.

Together with the army of 10,000 men came many kinds of semi-automatic machinery. The hard concrete roads in the United States are now made by machinery with a thoroughness and permanence which should attract attention in Europe. In this new town outside of San Antonio 12 miles of rail, 25 miles of road, 31 miles of water pipe, 30 miles of sewer were accomplished in 45 days.

The strongly and comfortably built huts are all provided with heating arrangements for the winter, and baths, hot and cold, are attached to each building; there are vast stores and office blocks, several postoffices, a huge bakery, laundry, stables for 1,200 horses and mules, hospitals, schools; in all, between 1,200 and 1,300 buildings.

And what has been done in Texas was being done simultaneously in 15 other parts of the country.

Stamp Out Sedition.

These are a good natured but drastic people. One of their great war accomplishments is the stamping out of sedition. When I first arrived here it was common to see knots of rather bored looking people around a wildly gesticulating man, standing on what I believe is known as a soap box. I noticed the number of these orators grew. I stopped one evening to listen to one of them in the negro quarter. He was talking a lot of excitable rubbish. In one part of his discourse he evinced unexpected sympathy for the downtrodden Irish farmer, who is notably, by the way, among the most prosperous of farmers.

The American giant paused one day in his war preparations, issued some kind of police order, and there was an end to pacifism.

A shrewd British friend of mine who has lived here many years remarked the other day that it took a long time to get Uncle Sam into the war, but that it may take a much longer time to get him out.

Already, after barely five months of preparation, the United States have close upon a 1,500,000 soldiers undergoing intensive training for their task. The regular army was brought up to its full strength by voluntary enlistment. The national guard, a state militia, was filled up by the same means until it numbered 500,000. Then came the ballot for conscripts under the conscription act; this gave between 600,000 and 700,000 more.

For the training and upkeep of this force and the provision of all that it will require in the field, sums of money have been voted which make one's brain reel. For airplane construction $640,000,000 have been appropriated. Upon merchant shipbuilding $1,134,500,000 is to be spent. A naval appropriation of $350,000,000 for the building of destroyers has been commenced. One armor plate and projectile plant at South Charleston will soak up $22,000,000. In all, the war expenditure of the United States already amounts to well over $8,000,000 a day, and loans to the allies account for another $12,000,000 every 24 hours. The war machine gathers momentum as it travels. Its ramifications are bewildering. Scarcely a day passes without some fresh and startling proof of its force.

The American characteristics in war seem to be two, firstly, what looks like undue deliberation, and then, before you are ready for it, as a bolt from the blue, a smashing blow.

Know Little of U. S. Politics.

We know little of United States politics in Europe. Probably not one English or French reader in a score understands that the democrats (radicals) are in power and the republicans (conservatives) in opposition. The system so far is rather like our own, but the head of the nation is a president whose character appears to me to be a mixture of Scottish caution and tenacity with American unexpectedness.

Witness the reply to the pope. When cables from Europe contained mealy-mouthed meanderings from continental newspapers outlining all kinds of suggested temporizing replies to his holiness, suddenly came an altogether unexpected bang from the White House at Washington; the whole miasma of pacifism and all the rantings from soap boxes were at an end. My republican friends, naturally critical of persons and things democratic, shared the nation-wide joy in the president's reply. As with the well-meant papal peace offerings, so with the embargo.

Well-meaning European statesmen have too long provided the German armies with materials for making shot and powder and with food through greedy and gain-loving neutrals. The American mind wondered why. I went one day to have a look at an American transport sailing for Europe, in which the soldier boys clustered like bees in swarming time. Incidentally my guide showed me a great number of neutral ships loading up with grain for Germany. There came another bang from the big gun at Washington. The ships are still here.

I should not be surprised if they eventually helped to carry food to the American armies in France and to Belgium. I am very certain they will not carry one grain of wheat to Germany. The right of neutrals to prolong the war is not conceded by the United States. The American mothers who are sending their boys to face submarines in the Atlantic and high explosives in the trenches have no sloppy sentiment for Sweden or Spain. They are sorry for Holland, but the motto, "America first," though not perhaps always suited to an alliance, is undoubtedly a formidable war weapon when put into operation with the drastic suddenness characteristic of American mentality in war time.

Are Proud of Sammies.

American troops, whose physique is at present much the best in the war, are regarded by their onlookers with interest, affection and pride. Their mission is far too serious a one for wild hurrahing such as we heard during the South African and the Spanish wars. Summed up in one word, the attitude of the American people and their soldiers seems to me to be—Earnestness. If any other word be necessary thoroughness might be added.

The world has heard something of the evolution of what is known as the U. S. A. or Liberty air-engine. The full story of the development of this practical and now tested motor sums up many of the most marked traits in the American war character. It is the product of enthusiasm put to the right purpose.

There is probably no more highly organized industry in the world than the manufacture of American motor cars. Despite the keen competition that has enabled Americans, rich and poor alike, to have automobiles, cooperation and standardization among the rival producers have intensified simplicity and eliminated waste.

The methods of the motor car industry, which have given such marvelous results, are being adapted in regard to the air engine. Early in July I was invited to the bureau of standards in Washington to see the engine just after it had arrived from Detroit. In a room adjoining the bench on which the motor rested was a machine for reproducing mechanical drawings, or blue prints, by a highly ingenious form of rapid rotary printing. These drawings are being sent in thousands to makers of automobiles all over the United States.

It is not pretended that these air engines are of the same quality as the best English or French war models. It was wisely foreseen here that the construction of motors so delicate would demand the training of thousands of skilled hand workers. Time is a vital factor in the situation, therefore it was resolved to produce an engine that could be manufactured in part in a thousand workshops and assembled at certain given points, as is done by Germany with her submarines. It is an engine designed for a certain specific air program, the nature of which the Germans will learn in due course.

Success of a Democracy.

Since I arrived in the United States during the second week of June, I have kept a diary of war happenings. This I shall keep as a document of great historical interest. Never has any democracy made such rapid progress in so vast an enterprise. The pace was accelerated every week. We were made acquainted in the course of four months with a series of war measures which would seem to be almost beyond the national power of digestion.

It is easy to say that many of these measures might have been adopted a couple of years earlier, but democracies do not work in that way. Even after the war had begun, we in England spent almost two years in discussing whether we should have equality of sacrifice in regard to military service, and Canada was still debating the question until a few weeks ago. Each nation has to make its war preparations after its own fashion. No nation seems to learn much from any other.

The American war machine has been built in the eAmerican way. Maybe it will have its faults, but for all that it is the mighty sledge-hammer that will pulverize Prussianism.

Eskimo Superstitions.

From the Christian Herald.

It is said that the Russian peasant is among the most superstitious of all mankind; but the Eskimo, un-Christianized (and this applies to all the Arctic coast tribes of Coronation gulf) has superstition woven into the very fabric of his nature. If he has killed a bear with a rifle, he must not kill a deer with it. He will not use an implement if a woman has stepped over it. A dead whale or seal, when brought ashore, must have a drink. If he moves into a house by the door, he must go out by the skylight. If a child has died, the father stands guard around the igloo with a snow knife, to keep the evil spirits away. He will not drive nails at that time. If he wants work done, another Eskimo will do it for him. After the birth of an infant, the female has new clothes made for herself and the child of caribou skin. She builds a snow igloo and goes into it alone to bear her infant.

Conjurers and medicine men give advice and cast out evil spirits. They are paid in skins, rifles, or any other article which comes in daily use among these people. Some of the "Swells" of the tribe wear a belt with decorations of seal skin, ribbons of different colors and little dolls made of ivory attached. There is a goddess of the sea and a goddess of the land, both very large and very strong.

When a member of a tribe dies, only the next of kin will attend the funeral services. When they bury, if in winter, they take the body on a sled, conveying it to a small island or promontory. Here they build a grave of rocks and place therein the body. Just before covering, the lashing around the body is cut. All the effects of the deceased are left at the grave, and often presents are brought. They mourn for a month, and the nearest relatives abstain from meat and other specified articles of food during that time.

Handkerchief Gardens.

From the Youth's Companion.

Almost one-half of the land capable of cultivation in Japan is planted in rice. Handkerchief gardens would perhaps best describe the little rice fields many of which are no larger than a tennis court, are equally flat and are surrounded by rims of earth to hold the water when the fields are flooded.

The average rice field in Japan is about one acre and a half in size; but, large or small, each field must be levelled and each must have its rim or dike. Then there must be a system of canals to bring water to the fields and another system of ditches to take it away when it is no longer needed.

If the land were fairly level the preparation of the ground, which is all done by hand, would not be so hard nor would it require such vast amounts of human labor; but Japan is a mountainous country. Terraces must be cut from the steep hillsides and so levelled that they will hold the water at a uniform depth over the small fields.

It is said that there are 12,000 square miles of rice land in Japan, the greater part of which has been prepared with an almost infinite amount of labor. That area of land cultivated in rice virtually feeds a nation of 50,000,000 people.

The little fields are usually permanent, and frequently a farmer owns three or four scattered fields. That further increases the work of caring for his crops. In recent years, however, the government has tried to consolidate the holdings of farmers by a process of land exchange.

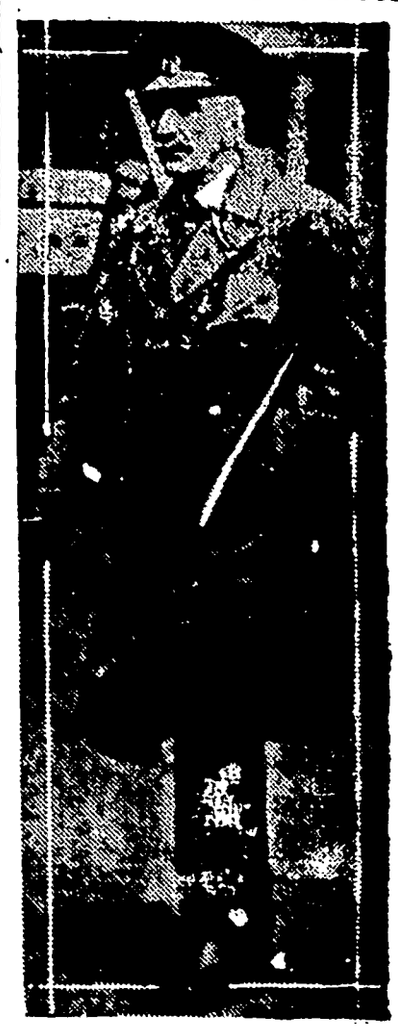
Iowa Ever Faithful.

From the Omaha Bee.

Iowa boys have contributed heavily to the casualty list in France, and yet have but lived up to the best traditions of the Hawkeye state. From Shiloh to Vicksburg, Iowa boys poured out their blood, a libation on the altar of freedom, and in Cuba and the Philippines they served well the cause of Old Glory. Those who have made the great sacrifice for humanity "over there" will be mourned, but sorrow will be lightened by the thought that they died fighting for the right.

George McGuire, of Washington, is the world's most patient, most persistent and most easily satisfied man. After 25 years' consideration of his application for a place as cemetery watchman at $40 a month, the government appointed him. He quit the temporary $60 a month job he has had at the interior department for a quarter of a century and accepted.

GENERAL WILSON WALKS TO OFFICE



Sir General Henry Wilson.

This new, characteristic photograph of Sir General Henry Wilson, chief of the British imperial general staff, succeeding General Robertson, was snapped while the general was taking a brisk walk to his office. Wilson is an Irishman, 53 years old, and is held in high esteem not only in England but also in France and Italy. While at the Staff college he worked out the main plans for the expeditionary force which were followed out almost to the letter six years later at the outbreak of war.

New Ordinances Passed By City Council

ORDINANCE NO. 31

An Ordinance concerning peddlers, solicitors, providing for a permit, and providing a penalty for a violation thereof.

Be it ordained by the Council of the Incorporated Town of Klemme, Iowa:

Section 1. That any person engaging in any of the vocations hereinafter named, within the limits of the Incorporated Town of Klemme, shall first procure from the proper officers a license or permit therefor, for which shall be paid the sums hereinafter fixed for such vocation respectively.

Section 2. Auctioneers or persons selling or offering for sale any goods, wares or merchandise or personal property of any kind at auction, shall pay a license fee of $5.00 per day; provided however that the Mayor may issue a permit for the purpose of selling any such goods at auction without any fee therefor where the same may be done for educational, religious or charitable purposes, and provided further that this ordinance shall not apply to any officer making a sale of property under any writ authorized by law.

Section 3. Transient agents of any insurance company, whose business it is to solicit applications for policies shall pay a license fee of $1 00 per day.

Section 4. Any peddler or peddlers selling or offering to sell any goods, wares or merchandise from house to house within the limits of said Town of Klemme, shall pay a license fee of $5 00 per day.

Section 5. All transient vendors of drugs, medicines of any kind; medical appliances or apparatus of any kind, selling or offering for sale any such goods or medicines at retail within the limits of said town, either in a room, under a tent, or on the street, shall pay a license fee of $5.00 per day.

Section 6 That any person who may solicit for, or collect money, subscriptions or funds for any educational, religious or charitable organization shall not conduct any such business within the limits of the said Town of Klemme, without first procuring from the Mayor of the said Town, a permit to so conduct the said business of soliciting, which permit may be granted by the Mayor at his discretion.

Section 7. Traveling or itinerant Doctors or Dentists shall pay a license fee of $5 00 per day. All doctors, physicians and dentists who advertise their business as specialists or otherwise, and travel from place to place at intervals, shall be deemed traveling or itinerant doctors or dentists, as the case may be, and subject to a license fee as herein provided.

Section 8. Any person carrying on any business or pursuing any occupation without a license or permit for the carrying on or pursuit of such occupation or business as provided by the ordinances of the said Town of Klemme; or any person who shall violate or fail to comply with any of the provisions, rules or requirements imposed by the ordinances of the said Town for the conduct thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than One Dollar nor more than One Hundred Dollars and in default of the payment of any such fine so imposed, may be committed to the city or county jail until such fine and costs are paid in the manner provided by law.

Section 9. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and publication in the Klemme Times in the manner provided by law.

Passed, adopted and approved this 8th day of April A. D. 1918.

F. J. WENCK,
Mayor

Attest
N. L. Palmer, Clerk.

ORDINANCE NO. 32

An Ordinance to prohibit stock or fowls from running at large and prescribing a penalty for it's violation and repealing all ordinances in conflict therewith.

Be it ordained by the Council of the Incorporated Town of Klemme, Iowa:

Section 1. That no swine, ass, bull, sheep, goat cow, calf, steer, horse, mule, colt, chicken, turkey, goose, duck or fowl or stock of any kind shall be allowed to run at large within the limits of the town at any time.

Section 2. It shall be the right of any person authorized in writing by the Town Marshall, and the duty of the Marshall, to impound every animal or fowl found running at large contrary to the provisions of this ordinance, in the public pound; and any person claiming the animal or fowl thus impounded shall pay the Marshall One Dollar for each animal or fowl thus impounded (to be paid by the Marshall to the Town Clerk) for the discharge of such stock or fowls. The Marshall is entitled to charge the further sum of five cents per head for each day's keeping of the fowl, fifteen cents per head for each day's keeping of the swine or sheep, and twenty-five cents per head for each day's keeping of any other animal so impounded, and the cost of advertising the same if it has been so advertised.

Section 3. The pound shall be under the care and control of the Town Marshall, and whoever shall break open the same or discharge, or assist or aid in discharging any fowl or animal therefrom without the authority of the Marshall or process of law therefor, or whoever shall hinder, delay or obstruct any authorized person in taking or driving any fowl or animal to the pound shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than one nor more than twenty-five dollars, in the discretion of the Mayor.

Section 4. Fowls or animals impounded may be sold by the Marshall to the highest bidder for cash, after giving notice of such sale as follows: Of the sale of fowls, swine or sheep he shall give three days notice of the time and place of such sale, describing such fowl, swine or sheep therein, by posting one notice on the door or gate at the entrance of the pound, one at the post office and one at the City Hall.

Of the sale of any other animal, he shall give a like notice, posted in like manner for ten days, and in addition shall publish such notice at least once in some newspaper printed in said town which publication shall be at least ten days before such sale.

The purchaser at such sale shall take thereby a title to the property purchased, as against all persons, and to such extent as the power and authority of the Town Council extends. From the proceeds of such sale, the Marshall shall retain his costs and expenses, including that of advertising and the charge for keeping as aforesaid, and fifty cents for each animal so sold, and the balance shall be paid to the Town Clerk for the use and benefit of the owner of such fowl or animal so sold, but if such proceeds are not claimed within one year, the Clerk shall report such sums to the Council as a part of the general fund and pay the same to the Treasurer of the Town.

The Town Marshall shall have no charge against the town for any costs or expenses in or about the impounding or sale of such fowl or animal.

Section 5. If the owner or any person having the charge of any fowl or animal shall knowingly permit the same to run at large contrary to the provisions of this ordinance, such person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than one nor more than twenty-five dollars, together with the costs of prosecution and upon a failure to pay such fine and costs may be imprisoned in the manner provided by law, and in addition thereto shall be liable to any person, firm or corporation whose property shall be injured by the same for all such damages so sustained by such person, firm or corporation by reason thereof.

Section 6. All ordinances and parts of ordinances in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Section 7. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage, approval and publication in the Klemme Times in the manner provided by law.

Passed, adopted and approved this 8th day of April A. D. 1918.

ORDINANCE NO 33

An Ordinance providing for the laying, relaying, repairing and rebuilding of temporary and permanent sidewalks and providing for the manner of making and collecting special assessments therefor.

Be it ordained by the Council of the Incorporated Town of Klemme, Iowa:

Section 1 That the Council may, by a resolution adopted by a two-thirds vote of the members, direct or order the construction, building, laying, rebuilding, relaying or repairing of any temporary or permanent sidewalks on any of the streets, alleys avenues or public grounds of the Town and prescribe the materials of which the same shall be built, the width of the same and regulate the grade of the same, and provide for the assessment of the cost thereof on the property in front of which the same may be laid, which in all cases but repairs shall be in proportion to the special benefits conferred upon the property thereby and not in excess thereof.

Such resolution, where it orders the construction or rebuilding of a permanent sidewalk and no petition is on file signed by the owners of a majority of the linear front feet of the property fronting on the improvement provided for therein, shall require for its passage the vote of three-fourths of all the members of the Town Council.

Temporary sidewalks shall be laid on the natural surface of the ground as near as practicable at a cost not exceeding Forty (40) cents per linear foot. Permanent sidewalks shall be constructed in accordance with the grade established by the Council. In cases of temporary sidewalks and permanent sidewalks, other than cement, the resolution shall prescribe the kind and character of the material of which and the manner in which the same shall be constructed and in all cases, said resolution shall name the time within which and the street and place along which the same shall be constructed.

Section 2. Permanent cement side walks ordered by the Council shall be made and constructed according to the following specifications, to-wit:—After grade stakes have been set, the earth shall be excavated Six (6) inches below the surface of the proposed finished walk and if there is any rubbish, manure or other soft material below this point, it shall be removed and the place from which it has been taken filled in with good solid earth which shall be thoroughly tamped. After the excavating has been done, there shall be placed thereon , a bed of gravel, sand or cinders two inches in thickness which shall also be thoroughly tamped and dampened.

Upon the foundation so prepared shall be placed a layer of concrete which shall be, when tamped, Four (4) inches in thickness. This concrete shall be made of one part good Portland Cement of any brand which complies with the Standard Specifications of the American Society for testing material, to four parts of clean, sharp sand and gravel. In preparing this concrete the measurment shall be by volume and the materials thoroughly mixed dry before water is applied. In mixing by hand, the ingredients shall be turned at least three times dry and two times wet. Sufficient water shall be added so that it will appear freely at the top when tamping. The concrete shall be put in place in not to exceed thirty minutes from the time water has been applied. Any concrete not used in thirty minutes after wetting shall be rejected and regarded as common sand. This concrete shall be thoroughly tamped and struck off to an even surface at the grade of the finished walk and finished with a trowel or wooden float to a surface roughened sufficiently as not to be slippery in the winter time. As soon as finished, the walk shall be cut into squares or blocks not exceeding five feet the longest way and the joints shall be neatly finished with a groover and the edges finished with an edger.

Where the full block of walk is continuously connected up with cement crossings there shall be provision made for expansion by placing expansion joints at least every fifty to seventy feet, such joints to be at least two inches in width and filled with sand.

Section 3. Whenever any resolution is offered or introduced for the building of a sidewalk, either temporary or permanent, as provded in Sections One and Two hereof, the Council shall determine whether said improvement is necessary or not by a majority vote of the members of said council, and, if it is determined to be necessary, then a time shall be fixed by the Council for a hearing thereon at either a regular, special or adjourned meeting and the Town Marshall shall serve a notice signed by the Town Clerk personally upon each known resident property owner, owning property along or abutting on the place in the street, alley, avenue or public grounds where such improvement is or will be ordered made, not less than ten days prior to such hearing, stating that such resolution is pending before the Council and is on file with the Town Clerk, describing the improvement briefly and stating the time when and the place where the parties interested may appear and be heard upon the said resolution and that the assessment of benefits thereunder will be made at the regular meeting of the Council in December thereafter. If any of the owners of such property be non-residents of the Town of Klemme, or be unknown to the Town Clerk, then such notice shall be published once in a newspaper of general circulation within said Town, such publication to be not less than ten days prior to such hearing and which notice shall be addressed to said owners, if known otherwise to the Unknown Owners of said lots and abutting property and shall be constructive notice to all non-resident and unknown owners interested. If at or after the time set for such hearing said sidewalk is ordered to be built by such vote of the Council as is required by law and as the said resolution provided, and the owner or owners of such property along the street, alley, avenue or public grounds where such construction is ordered, shall fail to make the same within the time fixed in said resolution, the same shall then be made by the Street Commissioner, or such other person as the Council may direct, at the expense of the abutting property as in such resolution provided.

Section 4. Whenever such resolution for the building, laying, rebuilding, laying or relaying of either a temporary or permanent sidewalk has been passed by the Council and the same has been constructed and accepted, the assessment and apportionment of the benefits to the various owners and property affected thereby shall be made at the regular meeting of the Council on the Second Monday in December thereafter and the property owners interested shall be required to appear at said meeting without any further notice being served on them, to contest the said assessment and apportionment. Such assessment and apportionment shall be made whenever it can be done consistently with the benefits conferred, according to the front foot rule of asssessment each property being assessed in proportion to the number of front feet abutting on the improvement.

Section 5. Whenever any temporary or permanent sidewalk previously built or constructed on any of the streets, alleys, avenues or public grounds of the Town of Klemme shall become in need of repairs and a new sidewalk may not be necessary, the Street Commissioner, or other person directed by the Council, may make such repairs without notice of any kind to the owner of the abutting property and at the expense of such property.

Section 6. The Street Commissioner or such other person so making or constructing such improvements or repairs shall return to the Council an itemized statement of the cost thereof, showing in detail the cost in front of each abutting property or parcel of land along which such construction or improvement shall have been laid together with the name of the owner thereof, if he can ascertain the same.

Section 7. Upon the return of such itemized statement of the cost of such improvement or repairs, the Council shall at the regular meeting on the Second Monday of December of each year, determine whether said statement, so far as repairs is concerned, is correct, and if approved by the Council, the statement as to cost of repairs shall be assessed and levied against the property and shall be certified by the Town Clerk to the County Auditor and said assessment shall be collected by the County Treasurer as other taxes.

At said meeing in December of each year, the Council shall assess and apportion said amount so certified to them for temporary or permanent sdewalks so constructed and relaid among and against the various lots and parcels of land affected thereby according to the benefits accruing to such lots or parcels of land and not in excess thereof and after each apportionment and assessment has been made, each property owner affected having the right to be heard thereon if desired, the same shall then be certified to the County Auditor by the Town Clerk and said assessment shall be collected by the County Treasurer in the same manner as other taxes.

Section 8. If, for any reason, the Town Council shall desire to make and apportion assessments of benefits for any sidewalk so constructed, before the regular meeting of the Council on the Second Monday in December following, they may do so by giving the party entitled thereto, the same kind of a notice at the time and place when and where the said assessment and apportionment shall be made as is provided by Section Three hereof which said notice shall be served in the manner therein provided.

Section 9. All Ordinances and parts of ordinances in conflict herewith be and the same are hereby repealed.

Section 10. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and publication in the Klemme Times in the manner provided by law.

Passed, adopted and approved this 8th day of April A. D. 1918.

Growing Old by Degrees.

Growing old has its stages. You can remember the time when, in reading your favorite author, you were disgusted to find that he had made his hero forty years old, and you wondered how he could be guilty of imputing romance to such unreasonable age. By and by even though you found forty years to be the old age of youth, you were relieved by the thought that it was the youth of old age, and still later on will wonder where youth ends and old age begins.

JOIN THE BANK OF HUMANITY

Trim Germans by Buying Liberty Bonds, Says Fairbanks.

BY DOUGAS FAIRBANKS.
(Movies' Strenuous Star.)

YIP! LIP! Are we going to trim the Germans?

Well, I guess with all of Uncle Sam's boys rearing to go.

But you have to help!

The Third Liberty Loan is more important than the first and second. The government needs your financial cooperation. You must do your "bit" by subscribing for more bonds. Victory demands sacrifice. To win without paying would make a laughing stock of the law of average.

Aside from the investment you are assisting to promote world democracy. Think of it! To make the world safe from unjust ruling. Government bonds are the last word in securities. Your property and other investments will be worthless, if we don't win this war. But there's no such word as "don't" in the American patriotic dictionary.

Remember we are all Americans. Let's get together. Invest in more than your share of Liberty bonds. The game of life resembles the famous childhood game of "Follow the Leader." When you do your patriotic duty, your neighbor will follow, and so down the line. When our boys come marching home with Old Glory waving proudly in the wind, you will be thrilled with the thought that you have done your "bit."

Let us all be stockholders in the Bank of Humanity. Come on!

FUNDS WILL SPEED VICTORY

Every Subscription Is a Token of Faith and Pride in Our Government.

By CYRUS H. M'CORMICK,
(President, International Harvester Co.)

Our country's call for funds, like its call to arms, admits of no halting, half-hearted response. The honor and safety of the republic require that the Third Liberty Loan shall be promptly subscribed.

This third draft upon our patriotism should be so met that it will be a most convincing answer to any who have doubted our unalterable determination to end this war only with complete victory for the cause of human freedom. The greater our armies and the greater the funds that support them, the sooner will come the victory.

Should anyone think of this Liberty Loan in terms of investment, let him consider that interest and repayment are guaranteed by the largest resources and soundest credit in the world. But every subscriber should reflect that his subscription is more than an investment—it is a token of faith and pride in our government, a contribution to establish for all men liberties like those that have made our country great and its people happy.

The same solemn obligation of democracy that summons our young men to war now calls upon all of us who cannot give our lives to give liberally of our means. It is the first and simplest duty of our patriotism to provide our government with the money needed to win the war, and to provide it quickly, fully and gladly.

Be a Sport; Invest in Bonds.

No self-respecting man permits the other man to pay all the bills. No self-respecting American will permit his neighbor to pay the bills for this war. Liberty bonds in your possession show you have behaved like a gentleman and a sportsman.

FARMER'S SHARE IN THE LOAN

Editor of Waterloo (Ia.) Points to Increase in Prosperity of the Farmer.

By HUGH G. VAN PELT.
(Editor, Kimball's Dairy Farmer, Waterloo, Ia.)

From the beginning this war has been a war of financial resources. Germany's officials have been very pronounced in their assertion that the war would be won by the side with the last billion dollars, but Germany can't furnish the last billion.

America can supply the dollars which will win this war. Our resources are conservatively estimated at $250,000,000,000 and the annual income for the whole United States at $50,000,000,000.

The money is in the hands of the people and to obtain the use of this money, the government must either tax the people or issue bonds.

What share of the bond taking should fall to the farmer? Farm products in 1917 were valued at $21,000,000,000, or from $6,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000 more than in 1916. Prosperity, therefore, has come to most sections of the farming districts.

Two Liberty Bond campaigns have resulted satisfactorily in making available the money our government needs to carry on the war. A third Liberty Loan campaign is in progress. The farmer must do his share during this third campaign, as he has done in the previous two. More will be asked of each business and of each individual as the need for funds increases. There are none so good in this country that they must not assist in every way possible toward bringing the war to a successful conclusion. No individual and no form of business can be excepted.

Farming interests have never asked to be shown special consideration when it comes to helping out the government with money. No farmer wishes it to be said of him in years to come that during the great war his money was not working to bring victory. There has never been a crisis in this country when the farmer has not come forward either with personal help or financial aid, and there never will be a crisis when the farmer will not respond with the same admirable spirit as shown by his forefathers.

BUY A TICKET FOR BIG GAME.

Manager of Champion White Sox Says Don't Peak Through Fence.
By CLARENCE H. ROWLAND.
(Manager of the World's Champion White Sox.)

Those men at the big cantonments and training camps! Who are they? Some of them are the boys who played with the White Sox or the rival teams, but ninety per cent of them are the boys who crowded the bleachers and grandstands to see us play the great American game of baseball.

Remember how they cheered us to victory or stuck by us in defeat, yelling and stamping and calling us by our first names? Well, it's just those boys who are getting ready to play the big game of the nations now, and they have to go up against a team that can use a weighted ball like the submarine warfare or pull any other trick. We Americans never can sit by and see anyone get an unfair deal. So it's up to us who stay in the war grand stands or bleachers to come across with the encouragement. Just remember money talks, so buy your Liberty bonds to the limit of your resources. Buy your ticket and witness the game like a man, not through a knothole in the fence.

Liberty bonds will keep the army supplies with equipment to win. Invest.

A NEW KIND OF SLACKER.

We are all familiar with the man who is afraid to don a uniform, with the stay-at-homes who think they need five meals a day, and with the business man who complains that the war interferes with his business. But here comes a slacker with a brand-new stripe of yellow—the man or woman who thinks there is some good reason for hiding currency.

The movement for hoarding money received its first impetus from the war rumors afloat when the United States entered the war to the effect that this democratic country might elect to confiscate savings accounts after the example of the two kaisers. Notwithstanding the assurances of the administration that such a thing not only was undemocratic, but was unnecessary, a great many selfishly inclined persons took money out of circulation and hid it away.

Somewhat later, when the security markets were unsettled, still other people of this stripe foolishly thought it would be wiser to have a portion of their tangible wealth hoarded in the shape of currency than either to invest it or carry it on deposit at the banks. To a large extent these people were moved by the fear that some sort of disaster might occur which would put them in want. Probably very few of them stopped to consider the far-reaching effect of such action.

For one thing, money taken out of circulation and hoarded is always in danger of being lost or stolen. For another thing, it does not earn the owner anything. Worst of all, such hoarded money cannot be passed from hand to hand and perform its usual function of exchange between the people of the country. Such hoarding makes more difficult the operation of business, adds another load to the already heavy burden of fighting the war, and puts the hoarder in the slacker class.

How much better it would be if you are hoarding money any place to invest this money in United States government Liberty Loan bonds. Any currency you have hidden away is simply the promise to pay of your country; Liberty Loan bonds are also promises to pay, but, in addition, will earn for you 4¼ per cent yearly. When you have invested in Liberty bonds you have set in motion a great many wheels in a very important machine. You annually lend money to your government with which it can carry on the war to victory. You free money heretofore imprisoned and permit it to work among business men and wage earners. You start yourself in a conservative investment habit. Finally, you change yourself from a slacker to a patriot.

Stop hoarding. Invest in Liberty bonds.

Need Money for Airplanes.

Your government is spending millions to build airplanes to blind the kaiser's armies and defeat them. Your money is needed in the workshop. The bonds you invest in help blind the enemy. Invest in bonds.

PATRIOTIC INVESTMENTS.

Law and order underlie all investments. If life and person are insecure everything else is in danger. That is the reason why the French poet wrote the lines.

"There is only one future—that of our country!
There is only one foresight—our country!
There is only one economy—our country!"

No matter how many farm mortgages you may have; no matter how many skyscrapers you may own; no matter how many flat buildings you may have for rent, or how many factories you may be operating—every investment you have rests on the sovereignty of the United States of America. The slightest danger that confronts the United States acts as a depreciation of every piece of property you own. Your farm is valuable to you because the United States of America has enacted laws which insure your right to the fee and title of your land. Anything that weakens the authority of the United States weakens your hold on your farm. Anything that cheapens the United States of America in the eyes of nations cheapens all the investments you have. Anything that tends to bring the nation into subjection to foreign powers, tends to bring your investments to a position of danger.

Every shrewd investor—every wise property owner—every sane workingman—knows that the safety of all persons and of all property in the United States rests on the safety of the United States as a sovereign power. If the United States is lost, every dollar of our invested capital is depreciated or entirely wiped out.

We are engaged at the present time in a desperate war. The issue is our right to remain "free and independent." If the military tyrant of Europe beats us we must be his vassals and his slaves. To whip him and retain our liberty and to insure our independence, we must win a complete victory over Germany. If we fail our mortgages and flats are worthless. The moral is: Invest in Liberty Bonds and Win the War!

Look at the Map; Buy Bonds.

Don't be fed on false hopes. Germany has been winning this war. Look at the map today and see for yourself. Only the United States can defeat her. We have the men and the machinery and the money. Contribute your share of the money by investing in Liberty bonds.

Invest in [illegible] "safety first" [illegible] autocracy. Liberty bonds or tribute—which?

The Thrift Car

Millions Saved—
Get Your Share

Improved methods of building cars, that build them better and save millions of dollars to the public, is one of the substantial advantages you get in this Overland Model 90.

The time to save money is when you select your car, because afterwards you cannot make it any more economical than it is built to be.

Select this Model 90 and you save money in the first cost and in the maintenance cost. You cannot get complete satisfaction from less advantages than it gives—

And you cannot get as much value in any other car for the low price of this Model 90.

It has a powerful, fuel-saving motor; narrow turning radius; rear cantilever springs; 106-inch wheelbase; 31 x 4 tires, non-skid rear. Auto-Lite starting and lighting and vacuum fuel system.

It is as desirable as it is adequate, comfortable and easy-to-handle.

AIR RAIDS CUTTING HUN SUPPLY LINES

BY HILAIRE BELLOC.

Copyright, 1918, New York Tribune.

During the continued lull before the opening of this season's fighting—the lull every moment of which is filled with preparation for the great coming struggle—it is of value to learn to appreciate the importance of certain geographical facts which are and will be closely connected with the last stages of the great war. They should be especially interesting to the American public, since the names of most of the points involved are already familiar to it from the press. But the geographical meanings of these places and their importance in military maneuvers are still not understood by that public, and unless they learn to understand them during this time of waiting the movements of the war which will soon begin will be difficult to follow.

First, as to the points the bombardment of which from the air one reads of almost daily in the present development of the aerial offensive by the allies—which, by the way, is proving the increasing superiority of the allied air navies. Treves, on the Moselle; the railway junctions outside of Thionville and Metz. Hannheim and Ludwigshaven opposite, the airdromes behind the Belgian towns near the North sea coast all these are outside the actual war zone, but are the points which most concern us.

Choking Off Attacks on Britain.

The bombardment of the airdromes behind the Belgian coast has for its principle object interference with the German air raids on London and on other points on the coast of southern England. The craft used by the Germans for these raids over the sea start their expeditions from very large concentration points, where they are stabled. These are not numerous and are thoroughly known to the British. The perpetual harassing of them by bomb dropping interrupts though it cannot as yet put a complete end to the air offensive against the civilian centers of Britain It is really, although civilian imaginations are slow to seize that fact, much the best defense that London has against attacks from the air.

Manheim and Ludwigshaven, apart from the great manufactories of war material which are located there, form a point of great importance for two reasons. The first is that one of the chief crossings of the Rhine is there. The second is that from the very fact of its being a principal crossing six lines of railway converge upon it. Unfortunately Mannheim is not far from the extreme limit possible for successful air work on a large scale at the present stage of development. It represents a radius of approximately 150 miles

Individual machines can of course, go many times that distance and drop a bomb or two on their way. We have even had one case of an air man flying from France to very nearly beyond the German lines in Russia but for engine trouble he would have crossed those lines and landed on friendly soil. There was another case of a Frenchman flying from behind the trench lines in Lorraine, passing over Munich, where he dropped bombs successfully on the railway station, and landing safely behind the Italian lines in the Venetian plain But for continual raids by many machines carrying a considerable weight of explosives Mannheim represents, not indeed the last limit of possibly effective radius, but still a lengthy one.

The two junctions outside of Metz and Thionville are more important, though the work there is much more delicate, because the French naturally desire to spare these two chief towns of Lorraine as much as possible. Luckily for the allies, the railway junctions at both places are well outside of the densely populated area.

Breaking Railway Lines for 70 Miles.

The importance of these two junctions is this That if both can be completely interrupted there will be no direct railway communications between the German bases and the German front over a gap of something like 70 miles. As points for the concentration of German troops, either in support of their front lines or during rest periods, they are also of great importance.

But although less understood because the place is of comparatively small strategic importance, Treves (which it will be noted is much more frequently bombed from the air than any other place) is the most important of all these allied air objectives. If you will look at your map you will see that north of the Moselle valley there is a large hilly forest district, with very few roads and no large towns, lying partly in Belgian and partly in the Rhenish provinces of the German empire. It includes the Ardennes, the Eifel and what the Belgians call "Haute Range."

Though there is one line of railway crossing this country the whole district is little suitable, because of isolation and the broken character of the ground, for good communication and the single railway is not a main line and does not lead up to the system on which the German front in France depends for its supplies. It is, in fact, a blind alley ending in the Ardennes and only reaching the German front by roundabout ways.

The two great avenues of supply for this front are to the north and south of this mass of hills and forest; to the north goes the great backbone railway of northern Europe—the Paris-Berlin line, of which the crossing of the Rhine is at Cologne and the crossing of the Meuse is at Liege. This railroad was the chief artery of communication for the original German advance. To the south of this mass of hills is the line of the Moselle valley. Treves is the knot or junction point for all its communications in addition to being a considerable depot for men and material.

Most Important Point of Attack.

The continued bombardment of Treves, therefore, of which the railway stations by this time have been destroyed, is of the highest strategical value It is, luckily for the allies, easier to reach than almost any other point of equal importance behind the enemy's line. It is only 75 miles from the airdromes when the allies offensive bombing planes start. Roughly, that is only about half the distance from the airdromes to Mannheim. That means that half of the weight in petrol which the planes destined for Mannheim would have to carry, is saved in a raid on Treves, and in mere mileage it means that there is much less than half the risk of being hit by the anti-aircraft guns on going or on coming back.

In this matter, by the way the actual mileage is an insufficient index of the comparative dangers, because the risk obviously increases more rapidly than the distance—the time to send warnings and to prepare resistance ahead of the raiding planes being a function which rises in efficiency more rapidly than the direct trajectory of the flight The same is true of the liability to engine trouble, of the exhaustion of petrol, etc.

The other geographical point which ought to be understood upon your side of the Atlantic is the political geography of the states which the Germans and Austrians are now carving out of the western provinces of what was once the Russian empire.

It is a mere commonplace, of course, which we all take for granted, that if Prussia can obtain a negotiated peace she will turn these states into dependencies of the great central European empire of which she will be the head, and that although they will enjoy some form of nominal autonomy they will, if she is unbeaten in this war, be no more than provinces under her dominion. They will certainly, for instance, have to furnish contingents of troops as her allies in any future war, and they will still more certainly be economically at the mercy of German exploitation. All this, I say, is understood everywhere in Europe and taken for granted. It is equally understood and equally taken for granted in the enemy's countries quite as much as in ours that if his armies are defeated on the west the whole of his ambitious scheme in the east collapses.

What are not equally appreciated on our side of the Atlantic, and I suppose not on your side either, are both the magnitude of Germany's eastern effort and the policy of division on which this new creation of states is based.

As to the policy of division—dividing in order to rule—the whole business of Prussia is to diminish and weaken Poland. Of all these states Poland is the only one with a real national consciousness of a great past and of high civilization. A strong Poland, with access to the sea, would destroy the Prussian scheme of conquest forever.

Rendering Poland Powerless.

The Prussian policy is not to annex more of Poland than has already been annexed by the shameless partitions of the past. That would give more trouble than it would be worth, for, as every example proves all over Europe, the attempt of one white civilized nation to govern even a small part of another white civilized nation against its will is a difficult, dangerous and exceedingly expensive operation. But if what is left of Poland can be surrounded by diverse states, each containing scattered and weak Polish minorities and each with a policy founded on opposition to the Polish claims for the reuniting of the subjugated peoples into a single nation, the Prussian object would be achieved. That is exactly what is being done. The largely artificial new states called the Ukraine—an academic term only recently come into use—and Lithuania are to have their frontiers drawn with the express purpose of limiting the poor remnant of Poland.

In the Courland she will rely upon the German minority of rich men in towns and the rich land owners outside

In Lithuania she will depend upon the hitherto not very accentuated divergence between Polish landlords and Lithuanian peasantry with the organization of the Catholic church flattered as much as is possible by the conqueror

But from Lithuania she will take Livonia and make something separate of it, small as it is, to keep up general fraction

In Esthonia she will work just the other way, and there she will depend upon the Protestant religion of the small population of 500,000 which it contains to remain pitted against the Catholic populations of the southern neighbors.

Rumania she intends to keep as it is now, dividing in half with more than 3,000,000 Rumanians subject to Magyar rule, but she will add to Rumania Bessarabia, as a source of friction against the Ukraine, in so far as this last state can be said to have any real national feeling.

Master Ukraine and Control Black Sea.

The Ukraine she will pit against Poland by creating an artificial false frontier and subjecting many hundreds of thousands of Poles to alien rule, and she will "protect" that large territory, keeping it in strict economic dependence, controlling Odessa, mastering the Black sea, cutting off northern Russia from warm water and preventing one of the richest granaries of Europe from feeding the western part of the continent.

Lastly, we should remember what this great German scheme means in mere figures. There is a doubtful element in the constitution of the Ukraine which, according to whether it is made larger or smaller, shows a difference of 5,000,000 in population. But with the Ukraine even in its narrowest limits this congeries of new, largely artificial and opposed states will actually double the German empire in numbers. With the Ukraine at its largest they will more than double it.

There were before the war nearly 70,000,000 souls within the limits of the German empire, including, of course, the annexed populations governed against their wills in the Polish and Danish provinces and in Alsace-Lorraine. In the new districts, which will be subject to the central empires, there is another 65,000,000 to 70,000,000. As for the dimensions of this district, the extreme length is 1,000 miles and the average breadth perhaps 300, the extreme breadth, according to the limits of the Ukraine, being from 650 to nearly 800 miles.

That is the state we have before us. That is the price to hold which the Germans are seeking a negotiated peace and the liberation of which can only be effected by our victory.

Attitude of Central Powers.

First, let us consider the attitude of the central powers. The government of the German empire, under its modern Prussian organization, things somewhat as follows:

We and our allies form one solid territorial block in the midst of Europe. Of this block we, the German speaking population, are almost exactly half. We are not only directors of it but masters. We have mainly to concern ourselves, therefore, with the state of mind of the German population. If that stands firm the whole mass will stand firm. We are blockaded by sea and the blockade has become very much more rigorous since the United States entered the war.

The strain in the matter of food and of things almost as essential as food, such as soaps and lubricating materials, has gone on for a long time and produces a very depressing effect The enormous mortality in the field, the rapidly rising figures of civilian mortality and particularly of infant mortality, play their part.

"On the other hand, we are fighting for our lives. We have done things which civilization will not forgive and which we can only compel it to reprieve by showing that we are invincible and therefore immune from punishment. That is a great factor of strength, and the nation knows it.

Next, we are fighting on foreign soil everywhere. We hold with our allies some 2,000,000 prisoners. Tremendous efforts to break our front have failed in the west, and in the east we have completely succeeded. In Italy we but recently won the greatest victory of modern or ancient times. We are within an ace of upsetting the equilibrium of our enemies and producing a general collapse.

We had against us two groups of foes, on the one side ancient civilization, represented by Britain, Italy and France, on the other, a hodge-podge of far less developed eastern communities, a perfect labyrinth of conflicting creeds and tongues, in the main Slav and deplorably organized. Of these last we have become unquestioned masters. They are defeated. We can do what we will with them and supplies from them will greatly relieve our internal strain.

The first group, the ancient western peoples, resembles a shell which is still strong, but the contents of which are corrupt. They cannot do more than resist. Their internal materials, meanwhile, are wasting fast.

The United States will bring a considerable accretion of men to the west, but this accretion will be brought neither in time nor in sufficient numbers to affect the issue.

The quarrel of the poor against the rich within each of the western states, the differing religions and national traditions of each, the inevitable misunderstandings which will arise between them in the last period of strain will do their work and we shall be victorious in this sense, at the very least, that we shall retain all we have occupied. We shall emerge stronger, comparatively, than when we challenged civilization in Europe three and a half years ago.

Such I believe to be the general attitude directing the German minds at this moment under Prussian influences and under the recent great relief which it derived through the break up of the Russian empire and the tremendous victory on the Italian front last October.

Now, what about the western nations? The state that once was called Russia we can eliminate. It no longer exists. Three western nations are the crux of the whole problem. Have they been misunderstood by the German authorities, and even by the Austrians? Is their internal organization stronger than the enemy imagines" Will it suffice to maintain the struggle until the enemy is defeated? (Without defeat and victory on one side or the other there is no permanent decision for Europe at all. Any one who conceives of permanent peace without it is living in a world of illusions).

I cannot make so bold as to answer the question directly, but I can, at any rate, state how the problem looks to those who are governing in the three countries

To begin with Great Britain. The mind that is governing Great Britain (a most complicated organism—for it is not only political, but social and aristocratic; not only this, but highly commercial, and to that extent cosmopolitan; not only this, but financial, for London is the clearing house of the world), seems to stand somewhat thus:

The strain is far heavier than we thought it would be even a year ago. We are mainly an industrial country, we are highly capitalistic and our social arrangements were never made for such a strain. The strain is worse because we are an island which lives by its imports, both of material and food, as a diver lives by his air tank.

Finally, it is against us, in the shape of submarines, that the really heavy offensive of the last few months has been conducted. It is we who, therefore, have suffered the most rapidly increasing pressure. Meanwhile, we have had to improvise vast armies and at the same time act as a main workshop for the whole west and that by a spontaneous and quite novel effort which those ignorant of our national character would have thought impossible. It has, indeed, surprise ourselves.

Our confidence ultimately reposes in this that there reside in Britain certain latent, silent and almost subconscious forces which are a sort of great reserve upon which the nation draws in time of great peril. Our nation is less vocal than other nations, it is full of astonishingly individual and eccentric energies which make the foreigner think us divided. But the mass is tenacious in the highest degree, and, though confusedly, the mass does understand that this war is for this island (more than for any other part of Europe) a matter of life and death

Finally, we are consistently secure in the fiber of our race. The physical courage and the grip of tradition of which we boast have been amply justified in this war, and will continue to be justified in the future.

Nothing Sacred to French Mind.

The French reply can be put much more shortly and simply, and it really is the core of the whole matter:

We have as a government nothing traditional or sacred about us. The parliamentary regime in France is only an experiment, and not a very popular one at that. It arose in defeat, and it will certainly be modified after this great struggle; but we are members of a completely united nation, older as a nation than any European nation except Ireland, and our people feel this war to be their war as does no other belligerent people.

We took the whole brunt of the first shock. We have suffered enormous losses. Invasion and ruin are still upon our soil. It was our military genius which checked the onslaught, with the fighting odds of five to eight, at the Marne. It was we who prevented the initial and easy victory of Germany. No internal differences count among us compared with our determination that the power which has attempted our destruction by the vilest means, by the violation of treaties, and by usages unheard of among civilized men, shall be destroyed. In this determination, with which the whole nation is filled, and of which we chance parliamentarians are merely the exponents, is rooted our certitude of victory. But we have suffered far more than any of our allies, precisely because we took the first shock. We are compelled, therefore, to trust in the reinforcement they will afford us. We will sacrifice private difference between ourselves and those allies to the supreme common end.

After victory there will be great domestic changes among us. They may be violent. They will certainly be fundamental But the nation will not attempt them until victory is achieved.

There, I take it, is a fair picture of the contrasting and opposed views on civilian morale within the belligerent powers which each, could it speak by its existing authorities, would disclose

The balance, the power to hold on, seems to me—quite apart from material considerations—to lie with the soul of the west; that is, with the ancient roots of Europe rather than the central powers.

"Touchstone For the Maple Leaf."

Arthur Hunt Chute, in the North American Review .

If where an Englishman is buried on foreign soil is called "a little bit of England," then we may call the Ypres salient a mighty bit of Canada. If anyone were to inquire what is the most important city of Canada, we might answer unhesitatingly, "The City of Ypres." The hosts of our young men who have fallen in battle round that city have hallowed the name for all Canadian hearts, and rendered the place ours in the deepest sense.

Montreal and Halifax and Vancouver are among our lesser cities, but Ypres, where so many of our brave are buried, shall remain for us the city of everlasting possessions. In years to come, the touchstone for the Maple Leaf will not be "Queenstown Heights and Lundy's Lane," but "Ypres and Lagemark."

I stood one night on a certain hill that commands the firing line in an almost boundless panorama. Beside me was an officer of the Second Canadian division, who had just come out. There that night, by its white trail of iridescent light, we could trace the course of the firing line for many miles through France and Flanders.

Just to our left the line of light jutted far out, like a lone cape into the sea. "What is that jutting out place?" my friend inquired.

"That," I answered, "is the Ypres salient, the bloody angle of the British line."

To mention the name of Ypres is to have one's memory awakened with a veritable kaleidoscope of pictures. That trail of light that jutted out into the night looked like a cape and an iron cape it has been through months and years of war But the holding of that cape has been at an awful cost, and there was not an inch along that trailing line of light that had not cost its trailing line of blood.

"WITH CARELESS EASE."

Pericles.

If with careless ease rather than with laborious practice, and with a courage which is the result not so much of laws as of natural disposition, we are willing to face danger, we have the advantage of not suffering beforehand from coming troubles, and of proving ourselves, when we are involved in them, no less bold than those who are always toiling.

Pope Gregory's Calendar.

From the New York Sun.

It has taken Russia since 1582 to adopt the Gregorian calendar, that monument to papal enterprise and the genius of Clavius which so closely approximates the civil to the natural year that there will not be a day's difference between them in 3,000 years. The bolshevists did the act, advancing their calendar by 13 days. It is perhaps best for us not to speak unkindly about their laggard recognition of Gregory XIII's improvement in time measurement, for it was not until 1751 that our English forebears allowed their common sense to overcome their sectarian prejudices and abandon the "old style." George Washington was born under the ancient Julian reckoning February 11, 1732, the act of the English parliament by which the change was made transformed the day after September 2, 1752, into September 14.

Probably the revolution in Russia would have done something to the calendar, no matter what system had been in force. Such is the habit of revolutions that overthrow social orders The French revolution evolved a calendar based on philosophical principles. It had 12 months of 30 days each, the new era dating from the minute of the autumnal equinox, September 22, 1792, which was the day from which the existence of the republic was reckoned, although the republic was formally proclaimed on September 21 A philosopher does not scorn a legal fiction. The French revolutionists introduced five festal days—Sansculottides—at the end of each year to let the sun catch up with them, and an additional jour de la revolution every fourth year to correct the error not taken care of by these. This calendar endured until Napoleon Bonaparte restored the Gregorian system January 1, 1806

Meanwhile, the Mohammedans use a lunar year of 354 days of 12 months, which alternately have 30 and 29 days. No attempt is made to regulate the calendar to the solar year and New Year's day may fall in any season, there is no correspondence between months and seasons. This is much opposed to our more orderly way, yet the followers of the prophet do not seem to be downcast over this. They will probably be brought into line some day however or the Gregorian calendar is sensible simple and easy for everybody to understand

Prince of Wales Popular.

From the Brooklyn Eagle

The young Prince of Wales, heir to the British throne, has taken his seat in the house of lords. He is about 23½ years old and could have exercised his prerogative as a legislator as far back as 1912. Unlike ordinary mortals, the sons of the king attain their majority at the age of 18, and Edward Albert, the future Edward VIII, was born June 23, 1894 Since the outbreak of the war most of his time has been spent at the front as an active staff officer

The fields of Flanders have changed him into a real leader of men. Under Field Marshal Sir John French, and more recently, Sir Douglas Haig, he has earned praise as an officer which rings true.

Many stories of his good nature and democratic manners are told. The Tommies declare that when driving in his motor car behind the lines he would frequently stop and give weary soldiers a lift to their destination

A tired private helped along in this way failed to recognize the prince and soon began to chat in regular soldier fashion with the free and easy lieutenant who had picked him up. Finally, in a burst of confidence he displayed a photograph of his "girl back home."

In reply to an inquiry whether he carried any similar mementoes the offficer remarked smilingly: "Well, I've got my father's picture with me, and I'll make you a present of it if you like." The amazed soldier did not recover his breath for several minutes after the prince had produced a gold sovereign with George V's head on it and pressed it into his hand.

Famous Detective Dies.

From the London Telegraph.

By the death of William Melville there has passed away a detective officer of whom any police force of any country might well be proud.

Probably nobody in or out of the police force possessed such an intimate knowledge of the "underworld" life of London as the famous chief of the special branch of Scotland Yard, and it was no doubt this fact which led to his acting as cicerone to the czar of Russia when he came over here for a few weeks before his marriage.

The czar, under the guidance of Mr. Melville, made himself intimately acquainted with every phase of the criminal life of the worst areas of London, both east and west. Night after night, in company with his expert guide, he threaded his way in and out of the unsavory haunts of the criminal fraternity, particularly political criminals of the anarchist type and never once did he suffer any bodily harm.

One of his most important duties was that of "shadowing" members of the British royal family and those of foreign countries when visiting these shores. He accompanied Queen Victoria and King Edward when they traveled on the continent, and attended the kaiser, the king of Italy and other foreign royal personages when in London.

Melville was decorated by the kings of England, Italy, Denmark, Portugal and Spain, and by the president of France in recognition of his services.

What Is Montenegro?

From the Portsmouth Chronicle

Montenegro is a small independent country in southern Europe, area, about 3,000 square miles and bordering partly on the Adriatic sea. It is an hereditary monarchy, the present king being Nicholas I. It is a very mountainous country, the Italian name Montenegro signifying Black mountains, as does also the Turkish name, Karadog, but the mountains are not black and the Montenegrins are brave mountaineers, poor, industrious and patriotic. At the beginning of the present war Montenegro took part with the allies and later it was overrun by the Germans and Austrians and is still held by them.

Riding Backward.

Brooke Herford

There are some people who ride all through the journey of life with their backs to the horses. They are always looking into the past. All the worth of things is there. They are forever talking about the good old times, and how different things were when they were young. There is no romance in the world now, and no heroism. The very winters and summers are nothing to what they used to be; in fact, life is altogether on a small, commonplace scale. * * * Now, that is a miserable sort of thing, it brings a kind of paralyzing chill over the life, and petrifies the natural spring of joy that should be ever leaping up to meet the fresh new mercies that the days keep bringing.

Advantage With the Allies.

From the Scientific American.

The impossibility of a Germany victory—German threats great spring offensive notwithstanding—becomes clear if we loo a few simple facts. Thus, when the allies hurled the Germany back at the Marne, France had 1,500,000 men in the fighting line England a scant 100,000. Such forces as they had were outnumb in the ratio of five to three, and they were outranged in artillery outnumbered and outmatched in all the things that go to mak military equipment.

Since the Marne the French army at the front has grown 1,500,000 to 3,000,000 and the British army from 100,000 to 2,50 In 1914 the United States was a spectator of the conflict; but by time the great German offensive (should it ever come off), is in swing we shall have several hundred thousand men at the front. 1914 Germany had a potential army of 9,500,000 men—today one of that number has been killed, captured, permanently crippled dead from natural causes, with the result that, on the western f the numerical superiority has passed from Germany to the allies, can oppose more than 6,000,000 men to a maximum of 4,500 German troops. In the matter of artillery there is an equal prepon ance on the allied side.

Last, and by no means least important, is the fact that wh left of the German army contains a far larger proportion than allied armies of men who, by reason of age and immature youth, ill suited to stand the terrific strain of modern warfare. Nor sh we in this comparison forget that while in the German army there been a noticeable decline in morale, due to the pinch of want and sickness of heart which comes from endless promises that are un filled, the morale of the allied armies, who are well fed, stea increasing in strength and cheered by some 18 months of all unbroken victories from the Swiss border to the North sea uniformly good.

German Civilian Morale.

From Land and Water, London.

The remaining strength of Germany in this war really depe upon the immunity of its civilian population. The fact that the bat have been fought on the soil of the allies and that German soil remained intact, that the German towns have been well lit normally protected during the course of the war, that all the circ stances of civilized life, save the actual privations through blockade, have been those of a people shielded from the consequen of war which has given to the enemy a constancy not always fou in the grand alliance.

The German is peculiarly susceptible to nerves. Neglect altogether the newspaper telegrams purporting to come from Holl and Switzerland, we know from excellent source what the effect bombing has been on Treves and Karlsruhe. Civilian morale in th unhappy places, to quote but two, has gone to pieces, and the shri of the German press, in regard to the latter town especially, were l nothing that has appeared in the allied press even after the wo raids on London. An intensive policy of raiding, therefore, on part of the allies, when their superior resources shall have given th as they soon will, an ample material for such action, will have a v great effect upon the enemy and perhaps a decisive one.

It is difficult to assess the exact value of the strikes in Berlin a the industrial centers of Germany. We know that the civilian elem is well disciplined; we also know that the working classes are sufferi from privations of food. Moreover, it was palpable that if the stri threatened to work serious harm to the armies in the field, they wo be suppressed with the same mercilessness that Prussian militari always shows to those over whom it has power, whenever they sta in its way. The most important factor is that these strikes recur; a their recurrence becomes more and more frequent. Bread rather th franchise is probably the main cause, but experience teaches direct civil discipline gives way, the revolt receives help from all to wh this discipline is repugnant. There is good reason to believe that t spirit of these strikes has touched the German navy more than on but there is no evidence that it has yet reached the German army, a until the army is affected, no political significance can be attach to them, beyond that they are straws, showing how the popul breeze is changing.

How a Drafted Man Lives.

A drafted soldier's letters, which appear in the People's Home Journal, gives an excellent picture of camp life. The letters begin with the young soldier's start from home for camp and carry him through the daily routine after his arrival there. In the beginning he says, speaking to mothers in general as well as his own:

"To begin with, let me say with all the emphasis I possess—don't worry! Your son will work as he never worked before. He'll lead a life that is strenuous to the last degree; but he'll be watched over and pampered as you never pampered him. Yes, I mean just that."

Speaking of what camp life has done for him, the young man writes:

"It takes a long while to make a good soldier, but it is surprising how quickly the average American learns. After I had been in camp two months I was known as the strongest man in the company. I worked in a bank before I was drafted. I was not sickly, but soft. I seldom got any outdoor exercise. Mowing the lawn almost broke my back. Today I carry on my back a light marching pack of 55 pounds or a heavy pack of 70 pounds, and never give it a thought. In addition to this load, I tote an 8.45-pound rifle also, frequently a pick or shovel, and carry the whole thing from 10 to 15 miles at a stretch.

"I used to dread getting into row for fear some one bigger than I would knock me into the middle of next week. Recently I had a friendly boxing bout with a corporal, who was once a riveter on the steel structure of skyscrapers. He knocked me down twice. Then I got mad and—scrambling to my feet—I knocked him cold.

"Mother had a fit when I wrote her about it; but when she told the minister he chuckled. To mother's surprise, he remarked, 'That boy must be getting along—I didn't think he had it in him!' He knew what I know. We must learn to fight with our hands as well as with our guns and with our brains, for some day the ability to knock a man cold may save a soldier's life.

"Don't worry about that precious boy of yours' Be proud of him—proud that Uncle Sam has pronounced him fit to undertake the biggest task America has put its shoulder to since 1776. He may come back to you covered with medals and glory. He may not come back at all. But whether he does or doesn't—he's a better man today than he ever was before' And let your dear old heart swell with the sense of satisfaction that he is a man! Otherwise, his commanding officer would send him home 'for the good of the service.'

"And remember; we haven't forgotten you mothers—that's the reason we're here. The men who went before us fought that we might be free. We're fighting for you who stay at home and do your bit—and for the mothers and the little ones that are to come."

Why?

From the Dallineator.

In a military camp, out near St. Paul, young soldiers were grouped idly on the grass, near the road. It was Sunday afternoon and the camp was full of visitors. There were many fathers and mothe there, but particularly noticeable we the unchaperoned young girls who passe giggling and ogling the soldiers.

The lads at the roadside watched t folk pass, talking among themselves, no and again responding with a laugh or careless word to the girls who accost them. Finally, an automobile filled wi young women went slowly by. The c was driven by one of the girls. It was costly car with a monogram on the doo The girls within were richly dress rouged and powdered and penciled in t manner popular even with decent girls today. The girls in the car called to t boys, offering them a ride and a suppe and passed on, giggling.

The boys looked after the car in silen for a moment, then one of them sa slowly and disgustedly:

"Fellows, it's bunches like that we're g ing over to France to die for!"

And nobody answered.

The young men of our country are beli tried out and sobered by fire. What happening to the young women America?

To judge by the thousands who are run ning after the uniforms, they are doin their silly best to help belittle and be smirch the men they should be honorin for the khaki they wear.

Every girl in America should be taugh that khaki is emblematic of a sacre cause, and that when they aid a boy wear ing it to degrade himself they are de grading the cause for which he wears it Every American girl should resolve tha she will help the boys she knows to beat themselves like American men—just plai American men, than which there is n finer, straighter, cleaner class in th world.

When Feathers Become Fur.

From the Scientific American.

There is a saying among textile experts that anything having two ends may be spun into a thread, but it has taken time to learn just how to spin feathers so that the down would be held in place during the dyeing and finishing process and not come out while in service.

This particular problem now seems to have been solved, and one of the methods for spinning a suitable thread consists in blowing the down down upon a center or core thread while the latter is being twisted. The result is that the down is caught up as the thread is being twisted and is held very firmly in place.

This thread is not very handsome in itself, but when woven into cloth and the cloth scoured, dyed, and finished by chemical methods peculiarly suited to the material in hand, the result is a fabric which resembles fur, and which may appear one of these days under an assumed name.

Thus a covering provided by nature for one animal has been made into something resembling that of a second. It is then used to supplement the covering of a third.

Dwarf Trees.

The Chinese influence on interior decoration extends to the wonderful dwarf trees which, once almost prohibitively expensive, are now to be had at really popular prices, commencing at about 60 cents for diminutive yews and cedars that look as if they had come out of a "Kewpies'" garden. Stately oaks, sycamores, cedars, standing at least 20 inches high, are wonderful with their gnarled and twisted branches and close foliage; they appear like ancient forest trees viewed from afar and through the "wrong end" of a telescope.

An Amateur.

"Some saintly folk in this town are always throwing the game of poker at our unoffending head," says a Georgia editor. "We want to say, once for all, that we don't know the game. If we had known it we'd be richer, at this writing, by a house and lot, a gold watch and chain, and a real diamond stud."

Wild Cat in Scotland.

A wild cat has been caught in Ardnamurchan deer forest, Argyllshire, Scotland, by a gamekeeper. The animal is very large, measuring 45 inches in length. It has a short, bushy tail, and is dark in color with brown stripes. It stands high on its legs and has a very tigerish appearance.

Civilization's Advance.

How timid and puny seem the old-time roar of the ocean, the crowing of roosters and the creak of farm wagons when nowadays, as we linger in some distant caravansary, we recruit our wasted energies on hesitation, ragtime, phonographs, telephone bells and siren horns

Becoming Modernized.

Recipe for Long Youth.

Old age can be cured. The prescription is a simple one: mix open air and a hobby, shake well, and take as many hours a day as possible. No one begins to age until he is bored, and the first gray hair comes when a man suddenly thinks to himself: "What's the use?" Then is the time when a hobby makes life interesting again.—Lippincott's.

The Beloved One

By JASPER WRIGHT MARLOWE

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

Whenever Miss Aida Worth visited the law office of Wade Guthrie she exhibited a hauteur and mandatory incivility that cut the young attorney to the quick. Not that he cared for the young lady in the least, but it hurt his sensitive nature to realize how faithful he had been to the interests of the imperious beauty and how unappreciated were his efforts.

There was a manifest contempt on her part, a certain latent threat in her cold glance, as though she knew something of his past. Her younger sister, Jessica, was quite the reverse. She had never forgotten the day when her father died. As she leaned over him to kiss him, he said solemnly:

"My child, it has been necessary to leave Wade Guthrie with full power to manage my estate. Trust him implicitly. He is a man among men, and our family owes to him lasting respect and gratitude."

More than once Jessica had remonstrated with her sister for her treatment of Wade Guthrie. "He is the hired servant of our father," Aida said, indifferently. "Besides—" but there she paused and failed to enlighten Jessica as to what further was in her mind. Now, Aida was about to marry, and her money exactions from the estate had become extensive. She flounced into the office of Guthrie one afternoon, a red spot on either cheek, an angry expression in her eyes.

"I sent for some money yesterday," she began, stormily.

"Yes, Miss Worth," responded Wade, "and I very much regret that I could not supply it."

"Could not supply it?" repeated Aida, contemptuously. "You perhaps forget that the estate you handle for my father is the property of myself and my sister."

"Miss Worth," spoke Wade, gravely, "you have forced a crisis that I have hoped to avoid. Not only has the estate exhausted all of its present ready cash; but is in debt, and only by the most rigid economy and careful management can we be able to carry it to a point where it will pay out."

Miss Worth grew white to the lips, but with anger, suspicion and resentment.

"Mr. Guthrie," she said, "it is your business to have money on hand. You will either get me what I require or I shall secure another lawyer, go to court and demand an accounting of the affairs of the estate."

Now he, too, had a bloodless face.

"I beg of you not to do that," he said. "As to resigning my trust and making a full private accounting you have only to send me your lawyer."

"You are trying to avoid the direct issue," snapped out Aida, "but I shall force you to the wall and expose you."

"You will expose me?" repeated Guthrie, vaguely.

"Yes. I know your position precisely. I know that you are an ex-convict upon whom my father took pity. Why a man of his judgment was swayed to place his estate in your charge I cannot imagine."

Wade Guthrie gripped his hands and set his face in a rigid mask. The deadly insult of the moment, the envenomed fury of his client stirred him to the depths.

"But for your sister, whose interests must not be imperiled by your rash act," he responded, "I would summarily go into court and surrender my charge of the estate. As it is, you will please send me your legal representative and I will satisfy him."

It was a remarkable story which Wade Guthrie recited to the new confidential advisor of Aida Worth. It told of how he had for three years made up for a continuous deficiency in the estate income. His own money had gone to cater to the expensive caprices of the elder sister. There was no promise whatever of the estate paying out unless collection could be made of a decidedly desperate claim.

"For the sake of Miss Jessica Worth," said Guthrie, "I am willing to continue to bear the burden of maintaining the estate. I will give her sister five thousand dollars to relinquish her claim to the estate, out of my own means."

Aida accepted the tender. She married. Then it became the one impelling motive of Wade Guthrie's life to see that the interests of Jessica Worth were cared for. He saw her rarely, because he loved her, little knowing that she esteemed him as her true and nearest friend.

The desperate claim unexpectedly paid out. Just after that Jessica came to his office one day in a state of considerable agitation.

"Mr. Guthrie," she said, tremulously, "my sister had more than once hinted to me of a certain dark passage in your past life. Today I found among my father's papers a letter that enlightened me. To save my dead brother from the penalty of a crime you assumed his guilt and took his sentence. Oh, that you should have borne the contumely! Oh, how base the ingratitude of my sister!"

Her eyes were suffused with tears. Her hands, placed in his, remained there. Wade Guthrie had kept silence through the years. He maintained it now.

But Jessica Worth understood and, understanding, venerated him, loved him. He knew it soon, and all his loyalty and self-sacrifice were rewarded at last.

"And in this case?"

"In this case, Mazeraux, a man like myself, who knows Neuilly and the neighborhood of the Bois, is at once struck by those three letters, 'B. R. W.' and especially by the 'W.,' a foreign letter, an English letter. So that in my mind's eye, instantly, as in a flash, I saw the three letters in their logical place as initials at the head of the words for which they stand. I saw the 'B' of 'boulevard,' and the 'R' and the English 'W' of Richard-Wallace. And so I came to the Boulevard Richard-Wallace. And that, my dear sir, explains the milk in the cocoanut."

Mazeroux seemed a little doubtful.

"And what do you think, chief?"

"I think nothing. I am looking about. I am building up a theory on the first basis that offers a probable theory. And I say to myself * * * I say to myself * * * I say to myself, Mazeroux, that this is a devilish mysterious little hole and that this house——Hush! Listen——"

He pushed Mazeroux into a dark corner. They had heard a noise, the slamming of a door.

Footsteps crossed the courtyard in front of the house. The lock of the outer gate grated. Some one appeared, and the light of a street lamp fell full on his face.

"Dash it all," muttered Mazeroux, "it's he!"

"I believe you're right."

"It's he, chief. Look at the black stick and the bright handle. And did you see the eye glasses—and the beard? What a oner you are, chief!"

"Calm yourself and let's go after him."

The man had crossed the Boulevard Richard-Wallace and was turning into the Boulevard Maillot. He was walking pretty fast, with his head up, gaily twirling his stick. He lit a cigaret.

At the end of the Boulevard Maillot, the man passed the octroi and entered Paris. The railway station of the outer circle was close by. He went to it and, still followed by the others, stepped into a train that took them to Auteuil.

"That's funny," said Mazeroux. "He's doing exactly what he did a fortnight ago. This is where he was seen."

The man now went along the fortifications. In a quarter of an hour he reached the Boulevard Suchet and almost immediately afterward the house in which M. Fauville and his son had been murdered.

He climbed the fortifications opposite the house and stayed there for some minutes, motionless, with his face to the front of the house. Then continuing his road he went to La Muette and plunged into the dusk of the Bois de Boulogne.

"To work and boldly!" said Don Luis, quickening his pace.

Mazeroux stopped him.

"What do you mean, chief?"

"Well, catch him by the throat. There are two of us; we couldn't hope for a better moment."

"What! Why, it's impossible!"

"Impossible? Are you afraid? Very well, I'll do it by myself."

"Look here, chief, you're not serious!"

"Why shouldn't I be serious?"

"Because one can't arrest a man without a reason."

"Without a reason? A scoundrel like this? A murderer? What more do you want?"

"In the absence of compulsion, of catching him in the act, I want something that I haven't got."

"What's that?"

"A warrant. I haven't a warrant."

Mazeroux's accent was so full of conviction, and the answer struck Don Luis Perenna as so comical, that he burst out laughing.

"You have no warrant? Poor little chap! Well, I'll soon show you if I need a warrant!"

"You'll show me nothing," cried Mazeroux, hanging on to his companion's arm. "You shan't touch the man."

"One would think he was your mother!"

"Come, chief."

"But, you stick-in-the-mud of an honest man," shouted Don Luis angrily, "if we let this opportunity slip shall we ever find another?"

"Easily. He's going home. I'll inform the commissary of police. He will telephone to headquarters; and tomorrow morning——"

"And suppose the bird has flown?"

"I have no warrant."

"Do you want me to sign you one, idiot?"

But Don Luis mastered his rage. He felt that all his arguments would be shattered to pieces against the sergeant's obstinacy, and that, if necessary, Mazeroux would go to the length of defending the enemy against him. He simply said in a sententious tone:

"One ass and you make a pair of asses; and there are as many asses as there are people who try to do police work with bits of paper, signatures, warrants, and other gammon. Police work, my lad, in done with one's fists. When you come upon the enemy, hit him. Otherwise, you stand a chaince of hitting the air. With that, good night. I'm going to bed. Telephone to me when the job is done."

He went home, furious, sick of an adventure in which he had not had elbow room, and in which he had had to submit to the will, or, rather, to the weakness of others.

But the next morning when he woke up his longing to see the police lay hold of the man with the ebony stick, and especially the feeling that his assistance would be of use, impelled him to dress as quickly as he could.

"If I don't come to the rescue," he thought, "they'll let themselves be done in the eye. They're not equal to a contest of this kind."

Just then Mazeroux rang up and asked to speak to him. He rushed to a little telephone box which his predecessor had fitted up on the first floor, in a dark recess that communicated only with his study, and switched on the electric light.

"Is that you, Alexandre?"

"Yes, chief. I'm speaking from a wine shop near the house on the Boulevard Richard Wallace."

"What about our man?"

"The bird's still in the nest. But we're only just in time."

"Really?"

"Yes, he's packed his trunk. He's going away this morning."

"How do they know?"

"Through the woman who manages for him. She's just come to the house and will let us in."

"Does he live alone?"

"Yes, the woman cooks his meals and goes away in the evening. No one ever calls except a veiled lady who has paid him three visits since he's been here. The housekeeper was not able to see what she was like. As for him, she says he's a scholar, who spends his time reading and working."

"And have you a warrant?"

"Yes, we're going to use it."

"I'll come at once."

"You can't! We've got Weber at our head. Oh, by the way, have you heard the news about Mme. Fauville?"

"About Mme. Fauville?"

"Yes, she tried to commit suicide last night."

"What! Tried to commit suicide!"

Perenna had uttered an exclamation of astonishment and was very much surprised to hear, almost at the same time, another cry, like an echo, at his elbow. Without letting go the receiver, he turned round and saw that Mlle. Lavesseur was in the study a few yards away from him, standing, with a distorted and livid face. Their eyes met. He was on the point of speaking to her, but she moved away, without leaving the room, however.

"What the devil was she listening for?" Don Luis wondered. "And why that look of dismay?"

"She said, you know, that she wouldn try to kill herself. But it must have taken a goodish amount of pluck."

"But how did she do it?" Perenna asked.

"I'll tell you another time. They're calling me. Whatever you do, chief, don't come."

"Yes," he replied, firmly, "I'm coming. After all, the least I can do is to be in at the death, seeing that it was I who found the scent. But don't be afraid. I shall keep in the background."

"Then hurry, chief. We're delivering the attack in 10 minutes."

"I'll be with you before that."

He quickly hung up the receiver and turned on his heel to leave the telephone box. The next moment he had flung himself against the farther wall. Just as he was about to pass out he had heard something click above his head and he but barely had the time to leap back and escape being struck by an iron curtain which fell in front of him with a terrible thud.

Another second and the huge mass would have crushed him. He could feel it whizzing by his head. And he had never before experienced the anguish of danger so intensely.

After a moment of genuine fright, in which he stood as petrified, with his brain in a whirl, he recovered his coolness and threw himself upon the obstacle. But it at once appeared to him that the obstacle was unsurmountable.

It was a heavy metal panel, not made of plates or lathes fastened one to the other, but formed of a solid slab, massive, firm, and strong, and covered with the sheen of time darkened here and there with patches of rust. On either side and at the top and bottom the edges of the panel fitted in a norrow groove which covered them hermetically.

He was a prisoner. In a sudden fit of rage he banged at the metal with his fists. He remembered that Mlle. Levasseur was in the study. If she had not yet left the room—and surely she could not have left it when the thing happened—she would hear the noise. She was bound to hear it. She would be sure to come back, give the alarm, and rescue him.

He listened. He shouted. No reply. His voice died away against the walls and ceiling of the box in which he was shut up, and he felt that the whole house—drawing rooms, staircases, and passages—remained deaf to his appeal.

And yet * * * and yet * * * Mlle. Levasseur——

"What does it mean? he muttered. "What can it all mean?"

And motionless now and silent, he thought once more of the girl's strange attitude, of her distraught face, of her haggard eyes. And he also began to wonder what accident had released the mechanism which had hurled the formidable iron curtain upon him, craftily and ruthlessly.

CHAPTER VI.

THE MAN WITH THE EBONY WALKING STICK.

A group consisting of Deputy Chief Detective Weber, Chief Inspector Ancenis, Sergeant Mazeroux, three inspectors, and the Neuilly commissary of police stood outside the gate of No. 8 Boulevard Richard-Wallace.

Mazeroux was watching the avenue de Madrid, by which Don Luis would have to come, and began to wonder what had happened; for half an hour had passed since they telephoned to each other, and Mazeroux could find no further pretext for delaying the work.

"It's time to make a move," said Weber. "The housekeeper is making signals to us from the window: the joker's dressing."

"Why not nab him when he comes out?" objected Mazeroux. "We shall capture him in a moment."

"And if he cuts off by another outlet which we don't know of?" said the deputy chief. "You have to be careful with these beggars. No, let's beard him in his den. It's more certain."

"Still——"

"What's the matter with you, Mazeroux?" asked the deputy chief, taking him on one side. "Don't you see that our men are getting restive? They're afraid of this sportsman. There's only one way, which is to set them on him as if he were a wild beast. Besides, the business must be finished by the time prefect comes."

"Is he coming?"

"Yes. He wants to see things for himself. The whole affair interests him enormously. So, forward! Are you ready, men? I'm going to ring."

The bell sounded, and the housekeeper at once came and half opened the gate.

Although the orders were to observe great quiet, so as not to alarm the enemy too soon, the fear which he inspired was so intense that there was a general rush; and all the detectives crowded into the courtyard, ready for the fight. But a window opened and some one cried from the second floor:

"What's happening!"

The deputy chief did not reply. Two detectives, the chief inspector, the commissary, and himself entered the house, while the others remained in the courtyard and made any attempt at flight impossible.

The meeting took place on the first floor. The man had come down, fully dressed, with his hat on his head; and the deputy chief roared:

"Stop! Hands up! Are you Hubert Lautier?"

The man seemed disconcerted. Five revolvers were levelled at him. And yet no sign of fear showed in his face; and he simply said:

"What do you want, monsieur? What are you here for?"

"We are here in the name of the law, with a warrant for your arrest."

"A warrant for my arrest?"

"A warrant for the arrest of Hubert Lautier, residing at 8 Boulevard Richard-Wallace."

"But it's absurd!" said the man. "It's incredible! What does it mean? What for?"

They took him by both arms, without his offering the least resistance, pushed him into a fairly large room containing no furniture but three rush bottomed chairs, an armchair, and a table covered with big books.

"There," said the deputy chief. "Don't stir. If you attempt to move, so much the worse for you."

The man made no protest. While the two detectives held him by the collar, he seemed to be reflecting, as though he were trying to understand the secret causes of an arrest for which he was totally unprepared. He had an intelligent face, a reddish brown beard, and a pair of blue-gray eyes which now and again showed a certain hardness of expression behind his glasses. His broad shoulders and powerful neck pointed to physical strength.

"Shall we tie his wrists?" Mazeroux asked the deputy chief.

"One second. The prefect's coming; I can hear him. Have you searched the man's pockets? Any weapons?"

"No."

"No flask, no phial? Nothing suspicious?"

"No, nothing."

M. Desmalions arrived and, while watching the prisoner's face, talked in a low voice with the deputy chief and received the particulars of the arrest.

"This is good business," he said. "We wanted this. Now that both accomplices are in custody, they will have to speak; and everything will be cleared up. So there was no resistance?"

"None at all, Monsieur le Prefet."

"No matter, we will remain on our guard."

The prisoner had not uttered a word, but still wore a thoughtful look, as though trying to understand the inexplicable events of the last few minutes. Nevertheless, when he realized that the newcomer was none other than the prefect of police, he raised his head and looked at M. Desmalions, who asked him:

"It is unnecessary to tell you the cause of your arrest, I presume?"

He replied, in a deferential tone:

"Excuse me, Monsier le Prefet, but I must ask you, on the contrary, to inform me. I have not the least idea of the reason. Your detectives have made a grave mistake which a word, no doubt, will be enough to set right. That word I wish for, I insist upon——"

The prefect shrugged his shoulders and said:

"You are suspected of taking part in the murder of Fauville, the civil engineer, and his son Edmond."

"Is Hippolyte dead?"

The cry was spontaneous, almost unconscious; a bewildered cry of dismay from a man moved to the depths of his being. And his dismay was supremely strange, his question, trying to make them believe in his ignorance, supremely unexpected.

"Is Hippolyte dead?"

He repeated the question in a hoarse voice, trembling all over as he spoke.

"Is Hippolyte dead? What are you saying? Is it possible that he can be dead? And how? Murdered? Edmond, too?"

The prefect once more shrugged his shoulders.

"The mere fact of your calling M. Fauville by his Christian name shows that you knew him intimately. And, even if you were not concerned in his murder, it has been mentioned often enough in the newspapers during the last fortnight for you to know of it."

"I never read a newspaper, Monsieur le Prefet."

"What! You mean to tell me——?"

THE LAST ACT.

J. G. Fraser.

Our contemporaries of this and the rising generation appear to be hardly aware that we are witnessing the last act of a long drama, a tragedy and comedy in one, which is being silently played, with no fanfare of trumpets or roll of drums, before our eyes on the stage of history. Whatever becomes of the savages, the curtain must soon descend on savagery forever.

Loyalty in North Dakota.

From the New York Times.

William Langer, attorney general of North Dakota, recently a visitor to New York, says that although the majority of North Dakota's population is of foreign origin, the farmers are showing their loyalty to the government in preparing to raise the greatest crop of wheat in the history of the state. Mr. Langer was graduated from Columbia university in 1910.

"We have in North Dakota a population of about 770,000," he remarked, "about one-third of German birth and 65 per cent of Scandinavian parentage. The western part of the state, in which one-third of the population lives, had no wheat last year, owing to the drought. To supply the farmers with seed for spring planting the state practically had to establish a seed store. A special session authorized the issuing of bond or warrants by the different counties to buy seed and sell it to the armers, the counties taking a lien on the property for future payment. Nearly $3,000,000 worth of seed has been taken by the farmers, and it is expected that the sales will aggregate $5,000,000. Montana has called a special session of its legislature to adopt the same plan."

The farmers had been seriously handicapped by a shortage of labor, said Mr. Langer, and to make up for this shortage more than $1,000,000 had been invested in tractors and other farm machinery during the year. Good tractor engineers got $10 a day last fall, and will probably demand more this season.

"There is no question of the loyalty of the state on the subject of winning the war," added Mr. Langer. "In the last Liberty loan campaign North Dakota oversubscribed its quota 70 per cent, and in the recent Red Cross campaign Burleigh county, in which the capital is situated, contributed $37,000, making it one of the record counties in the country in its per capita offerings."

A Brave "Armchair General."

From the Outlook.

The Paris "Gaulois" is famous for good stories. The latest to reach us concerns General Grossetti, who recently died. Despite the fact that he was of such enormous girth—perhaps because of it—that he walked and rode with difficulty, he was one of the most popular officers in the French army. The story comes by way of the "Journal de Geneve" of January 13, 1918. We translate as follows:

In the throes of the battle of the Yser, says the "Gaulois," when the enemy fire was the fiercest, and it was judged impossible for the French troops longer to withstand it, they began to retire.

"What are you going to do?" asked Grossetti. "I am too fat to follow you. In fact, my feet are used up. It is absolutely necessary for me to sit down. Get me a chair."

They brought him a camp stool, and, resting while the German shells continued to rain, he remarked: "What a pity to be so fat! You see, I am good for nothing but to stay here."

Of a company creeping past in single file and hugging the shelter of the house he inquired: "Where are you going, my children? I hope that you are not retreating. You would not wish to abandon your general here."

Stupified, the men looked at the general, seated placidly on his camp stool, while about him the shells were bursting and gutting houses. Seized with sudden, violent emotion, they snatched their kepis from their heads, crying, "Vive le General!" and turned back.

Toward the end of the afternoon a British staff officer, sent by Sir John French, arrived on the scene to inquire what the French commander proposed to do, for the retirement of his division might involve the retreat of the English forces. Grossetti ordered another chair.

"Pray give me the pleasure, sir, of sitting down beside me," he said. Notwithstanding his British calmness and courage, the English officer hesitated a second or two. Finally he sat down. The French general said:

"You may say, sir, to Marshal French that my name is Grossetti, and, as it indicates, I am too at to retire."

After some further conversations, continually interrupted by the bursting of shells close to them, the English officer took his leave. When he reached his headquarters, he remarked to his comrade: "I think I am brave; indeed, I am sure of it. But that 5 o'clock tea with General Grossetti gave me shivers up the back."

No wonder that the French, as a writer in the New York "Evening Sun" has pointed out, always afterward called Grossetti the General a fauteuil. But the "armchair general" was never used as a term of derogation; it was one of admiring affection.

Find Old Pueblo Ruins.

From the New York World.

Prehistoric apartment houses have been unearthed in northern New Mexico and a report of discoveries in one of them has been received by the museum of natural history from the museum explorers who have been assigned to the work. This work is the largest piece of scientific excavation ever undertaken in this country. It promises to uncover and restore the best examples of Pueblo architecture in the southwest, representing the highest Indian civilization attained by any aboriginal people within the boundaries of the United States.

The site is in the Animas valley, a few miles below the Colorado boundary, near the town of Aztec. It is known as the Aztec ruin. H. D. Abrams, of Aztec, owner of the property, has given the museum a concession to explore the entire ruin, in which, within the radius of a mile, vast mounds of earth and fallen stone mark the remains of nearly 100 community dwellings, which were the homes of thousands of peaceful agriculturists centuries before the landing of Columbus.

With the report the museum has received a quantity of necklaces of shell and turquoise, agate knives, pottery vessels of varied form and ornamentation, cotton cloth, woven sandals and other objects of art and utility made by the ancient race.

Franklin on Daylight Saving.

From the Outlook.

Thus, after a century and a half, we have heeded in the implied suggestion in Benjamin Franklin's autobiography. He wrote:

In walking through the Strand and Fleet street one morning at 7 o'clock I observed there was not one shop open, though it had been daylight and the sun up above three hours; the inhabitants of London choosing voluntarily to live much by candle light and sleep by sunlight, and yet often complain a little absurdly, of the duty on candles and the high price of tallow.

Meat is as Necessary as Steel and Ships

Food is the first essential of the fighting forces.

The American farmer and the packer have met every war emergency, and have promptly furnished an adequate supply of wholesome meat.

No other industry can claim a better record of war time efficiency.

Swift & Company has shipped to the United States Government and the Allied Nations,

Over 12,000,000 Pounds (400 carloads) per week, of beef, pork, and lard, since January 1, 1918.

In one week recently we shipped 24,000,000 Pounds (800 carloads) and the demand is increasing.

Our profits are limited by the Food Administration to 9 per cent on investment in the meat departments. (This means about 2 cents on each dollar of sales.) No profit is guaranteed.

Patriotism of the Press

Loyalty of Newspapers and Magazines Bright Spot in War History

By P. G. HOLDEN

WITH the entry of the United States into the world war, America faced problems of the most vital importance. They were problems which called for the best thought, the most untiring efforts, the greatest sacrifices, the most intense loyalty. They were problems which could be solved only through the unselfish patriotism of all the people.

A great army had to be created; a powerful navy had to be built. Munitions, clothing, food and hospital supplies had to be provided in enormous quantities. Provision for the care and comfort of our soldiers and sailors in camp or at the front had to be made. Transportation for our military and marine forces had to be assured.

After three years of warfare our allies in the great struggle were in immediate need of food and financial aid. It was the part of wisdom for us to help feed, clothe and arm the allied forces already on the battle field, that they might be more efficient in the struggle and thus reduce the number of our own boys we should need to send to the front.

The task that confronted us was the greatest in all our history. It was one that called for billions of dollars, for an unusual production and the most careful conservation of food; for the breaking of home ties in thousands of homes; the consecration of our united efforts and our resources to a common cause.

Awakening the People.

It was an emergency that demanded an immediate awakening of the people. There was no question but that the people would respond if they understood the vital needs of the nation, but they must be informed, and that quickly.

In this crisis a mighty wave swept the country from coast to coast. It was a wave of patriotism—the patriotism of the press.

Two thousand, five hundred daily newspapers carried to their readers the President's appeal to the people. Seventeen thousand weekly, tri-weekly and semi-weekly papers fell in line. Five thousand monthly, semi-monthly, bi-monthly and quarterly publications joined in this splendid example of patriotism.

These 24,000 periodicals, published in 86 different languages in over 11,000 different cities and towns and having a combined circulation of fully 50,000,000, carried the message to practically every home and every person in the United States, Alaska, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines.

Not once, only, but repeatedly, constantly, impressively, they explained to the people the needs of the nation and with all the power and influence they could command, urged the people to respond.

"Grow a garden; increase the food supply," was their first appeal. "Enlist in the army or the navy" was the next. Then followed appeals to the people to buy Liberty Bonds, to subscribe to the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A. and the Knights of Columbus funds.

Miles of Publicity.

Then came appeals for war work enlistments, appeals for boys to help work on the farms, appeals to housewives to sign food conservation pledges, appeals to women to join Red Cross units, and finally appeals to all to buy war savings stamps.

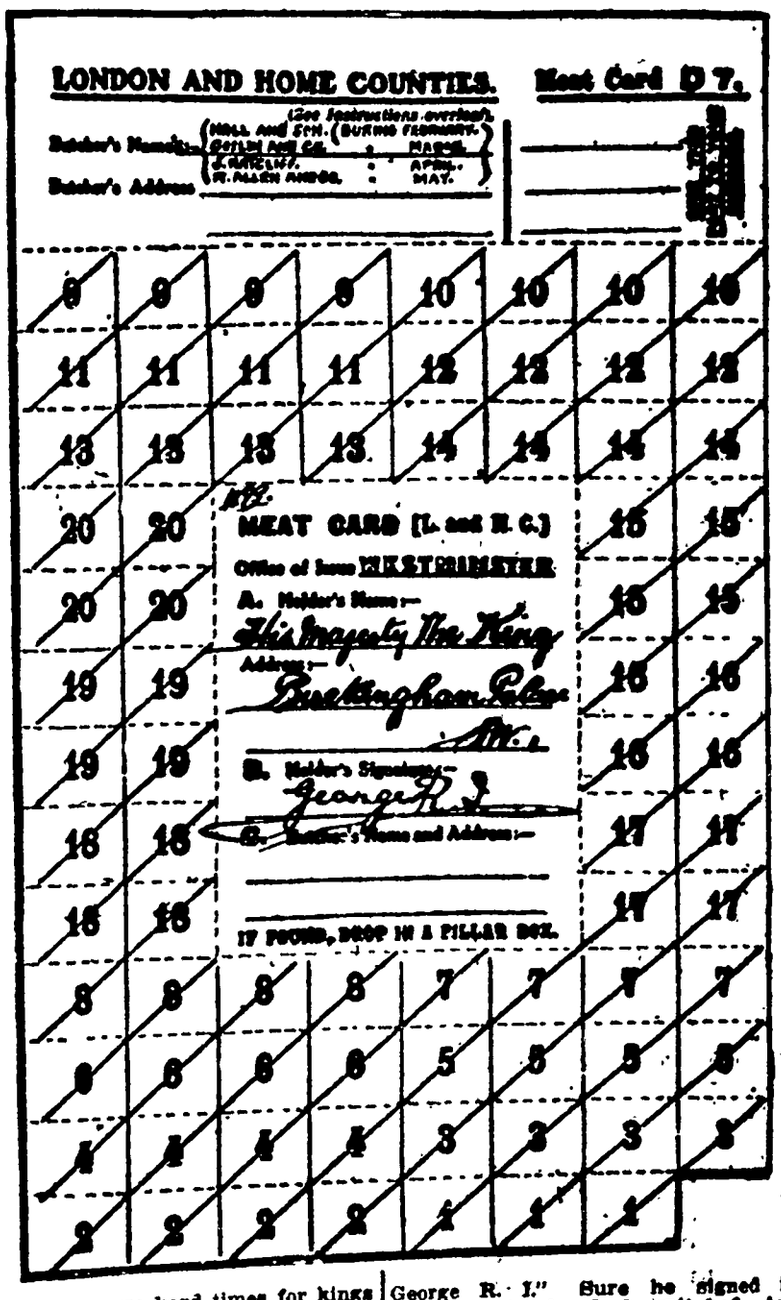
In practically every issue of all these publications one or more of these appeals have appeared. In the aggregate they have occupied, not merely columns but miles of reading matter and editorials, worth billions of dollars if regular advertising rates had been charged.

As a result millions of war gardens were planted, thousands of volunteers for the army, the navy, the Red Cross and other camp and field activities were secured. Two billion dollars of the first Liberty loan issue and $4,500,000,000 of the second issue were purchased. Thirty-one million dollars was subscribed for the Y. M. C. A., millions more for the Red Cross, the Y. W. C. A. and the Knights of Columbus. Ten million food conservation pledge cards were signed and hundreds of thousands of men, women and children enlisted for war work of various nature

In no other way, but through the loyal work and the unselfish service of the press could all these things have been accomplished.

When the war is over and we take time to look back over these days of struggle and sacrifice, we will be proud of the patriotism of the people, of organizations, of business firms and corporations. But in the final analysis the brightest picture, perhaps, will be the wonderful loyalty, the sublime patriotism of the press.

KING GEORGE'S MEAT CARD.



These are sure hard times for kings and such. King George of England, f'instance, has to use a meat card to get meat just the same as any of his loyal subjects. Above's the card. Note how it's filled out. "Holder's Name—His Majesty the King. Address—Buckingham Palace. Holder's Signature—George R. I." Sure he signed it. Writes a nice hand, doesn't he? Apparently kings have their troubles with butchers, too, same as other folks. At the top you'll see that George divides up his patronage, thus: "Hall & Son during February; Goslin & Co. during March; J. Hatcliff & Co. during April, and R. Allen & Co. during May."

German Substitutes Fail.

From the Westminster Gazette.

One of the greatest difficulties which the Germans have to deal with at present is the lack of raw material for their textile industries. When it is stated that reels of sewing cotton cost from three to five marks it will be seen what a difficult task the imperial clothing office has to face. A great deal has been said about the use of substitutes, but the truth is that paper and vegetable substitutes for cotton will certainly be discarded when the war ends, if cotton can again be procured. All sorts of things have been tried, such as seaweed, lichen, nettles, bulrushes, hop tendrils and even the catkins of the willow and poplar. The Hamburger Fremdenblatt announces that a further suspension of silk factories must be expected very shortly. This, it adds, will release a certain amount of coal; a significant remark, for "the coal situation in Hamburg is serious, and even the war industries are threatened with a curtailment of their gas supply." The process has been gradual, but if the war lasts much longer there will be something like a breakdown of German industry.

How to the Time to Get Rid of These Ugly Spots

There's no longer the slightest need of feeling ashamed of your freckles, as the prescription othine—double strength—is guaranteed to remove these homely spots.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from your druggist, and apply a little of it night and morning and you should soon see that even the worst freckles have begun to disappear, while the lighter ones have vanished entirely. It is seldom that more than one ounce is needed to completely clear the skin and gain a beautiful clear complexion.

Be sure to ask for the double strength othine, as this is sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.—Adv.

Win the War by Preparing the Land

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than May 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

Whistling Develops Lungs.

A doctor has discovered that whistling is good for the health. It fills the lungs with invigorating oxygen, and this revivifies flagging spirits and flabby muscles. Boys are prone to be broader chested than girls, and better constructed for deep muscular tones because of the lung exercise which accompanies whistling, and one of the first things they try to do when they've passed babyhood is to whistle.

Modern Young Man's Slogan.

Edna Ferber, writing a Jock McChesney advertising story in the American Magazine, represents Jock as making the following statement:

"'These days it isn't so much what you've got in you that counts as what you can bring out. I know the young man's slogan used to be "Work and Wait," or something nearly like that. But these days they've boiled it down to one word.—"Produce."

Mason City, Iowa

Successors to T. R. Glanville & Son

Louis Killian Company, succeeding T. R. Glanville & Son, for many years one of Mason City's leading business enterprises. While we may be strangers to many people in this community, the Killian name is not new to people of the states of Iowa and Nebraska. The Killian Company of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, ranking among the largest and best department stores in Iowa, being interested in the store at Mason City. The Killian Company, starting five years ago at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in their infancy, through courteous treatment, well assorted stocks, up to date business methods, right prices, square dealings and confidence of the public, have demonstrated their ability to serve. Connections with such an institution as well as several Killian stores throughout Nebraska, gives us an unusual opportunity to buy merchandise at the lowest prices always considering quality as the first essential.

After several months of extensive improvements here having added new fixtures, and new departments, we invite you to visit Northern Iowa's New Modern Store, when in Mason City. The Killian policy will be maintained here as in the other places where or stores are located.

We invite your patronage and wish to receive it only by your confidence which we expect to gain.

PLAN TO BE WITH US ON MASON CITY'S COMMUNITY BOOSTER DAY.

SURPRISE PARTY GIVEN

Last Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. Elmer Fuller, a number of ladies gathered to a surprise party in honor of Mrs. Emerson and daughter Arvella. It was a great surprise as they did not guess what was going on until they were there. The ladies played a number of games and visited until a late hour when a delicious lunch was served by the ladies in charge. A short time was spent in wishing the Emersons happiness and comfort in their new home at Adel, Iowa, to which place they departed by auto Sunday.

AGAIN URGES NO GLUT IN CHICKEN WORK

Department of Agriculture Advises Farmers to Sell Hens Gradually After May 20th.

Washington, D. C., April 25th.—The United States Department of Agriculture again advises farmers to sell their hens gradually and not to glut the market immediately after April 20th, when the restriction against sale of hens was removed. Hens should be sold gradually. This will stabilize the market and bring better prices for them. It also will mean more eggs. Every laying hen at this season produces eggs at far less cost for feed than during the winter.

SALE OF SCHOOL HOUSES

The President of the School Board of Ell Township will sell at Public Auction the two old school houses located in sub-districts Nos. 6 and 7, on Saturday, May 11, at 1:00 o'clock p. m. The school house in District No. 7, (located — miles east of Kelmme) will be sold first. 3w

Daily Thought.

They say that walls have ears. May these four walls of ours hear only laughter and kindly speech.—Myrtle Reid.

HERE IS YOUR CHANCE TO DO YOUR BIT FOR OUR BOYS

The ladies of the Klemme Red Cross Branch are going to have a benefit at the Idle Hour in the near future to raise a fund with which to purchase something for a remembranc when the boys leave for duty with Uncle Sam.

The fund must be separate from the Red Cross because Red Cross money belongs tot he American Red Cross, while this fund will be purely a local fund for the benefit of the boys who leave from here.

We have heretofore given the boys presents and money raised by subscription and now the ladies have taken it upon themselves to care for this fund. By creating a fund of this nature, and handled in this proposed way, the boys will be presented with comfort kits or other useful articles that they may need. The ladies are to be commended for this action and we must all get busy and not only support the move but BOOST it.

RED CROSS NOTES

The attendance has been much larger on Monday and Friday evenings of late and they have made 250 gauze compresses the past week, so it may be seen no time has been wasted which speaks well for the surgical class.

It has been decided to raise a fund so we may provide our soldier boys as they go with some token and as we are not allowed to use the Red Cross funds for this purpose we will give a Benefit movie in the near future. Watch for the date and everybody BOOST!

Following is the name of our new member: Mrs. Chas. Grell.

Join the Red Cross now. You can not spend a dollar for any better cause so next week let us be able to publish a long list of names. Yours will be appreciated.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

But for the firey furnace the world never would have known the heroic courage of the Hebrew children. But for the lion-den test we never should have known the true loyalty of Daniel to his God. It is in times of testing that we find out what is really in man. Peter was an honest hearted Christian but in times of testing he failed. He denied his Lord, cursed, and even cut off the high priest's ear. This proves that he had an unsanctified heart, even though he had said that if all men should fail the Lord he would not. Did Peter need more grace? Surely he did and he got it, too. He was in the upper room at Jerusalem when the Holy Ghost came and sanctified a hundred and twenty honest Christians. After Pentecost Peter was never weak or failed under test, but was a fearless powerful preacher. It is time for the church to learn from the good old Book of God that there is a positive and definite promise of the baptism with the Holy Ghost for all truly converted people. This blessing purifies the heart, and enables Christians to bet rue under any kind of a test.

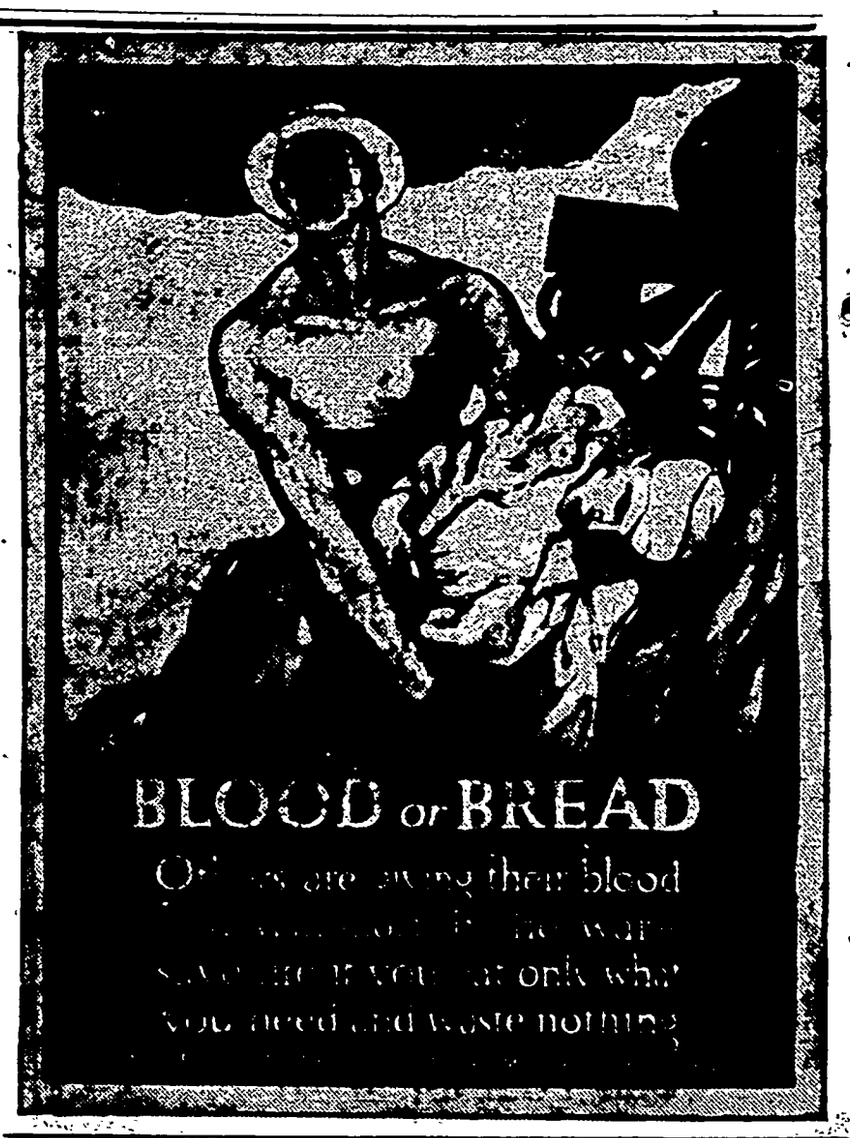
Preaching service at 10:30 o'clock Sunday morning.

Sunday School at 11:30 o'clock.

Epworth League at 8:00 o'clock p. m. Topic—"The Ruin of a Masterpiece." Leader, Mrs. Chris Gram. We are much encouraged over the splendid attendance and interest in the Epworth League. Let the good work go on and boost with all your might.

Preaching service at 8:30 o'clock. This will be a special sermon to the young people. We urge that all young people whether in the church or not, be present. I have something to say to you. We cordially invite all to this service.

Prayermeeting every Thursday evening at 8:00 o'clock.



EVERYONE MUST HELP.

Wars cannot be fought without money, and upon the Treasury centers every financial demand upon the Nation.

The rich of this country cannot alone meet the needs of the Nation; the men of the country cannot do it alone; the women of the country cannot do it alone; but all of us, the people of the United States, disregarding partizanship, forgetting selfish interests, thinking only of the supremacy of right and determining to vindicate the majesty of American ideals and secure the safety of America and civilization, can do the great and splendid work which God has called upon us to do.

DRAFT REGISTRANTS MAY BE RECLASSIFIED

Investigation at Des Moines May Undo Much Work of Local Boards.

Des Moines, Ia., April 20.—Selective service registrants given deferred classification may find themselves moved into Class 1 as the result of a draft investigation which began here today.

Many men in Classes 2 and 3 in localities where the first class lists are small, Adt. Gen. Guy E. Logan said, will be moved up a class. The investigation may also affect men as far back as Class 4, it was announced.

Inspectors were appointed by Governor Harding and General Logan today to begin an immediate investigation in counties where the percentage of Class 1 men is unusually small. If it is discovered that classification has been made without proper grounds, the classification will be appealed by the state and federal agents at once.

RENT RECEIPT LEADS TO BIG BOOZE JOINT

Council Bluffs, Ia., April 20.—A rent receipt found in the pocket of John M Haussner, arrested as he and J. C Walton were driving a booze laden Ford automobile across the Missouri river bridge between Council Bluffs and Omaha, enabled the county authorities here to find a garage in which were 21 cartons, containing 252 pints of booze carefully hidden. Haussner told the sheriff when arrested that he had bought the booze from a stranger on the road southeast of town, and intended to sell it in Omaha. Walton, both men maintain, was asked by Haussner to take a ride, and did not know the illegal nature of the Ford's cargo.

PRO-GERMAN PREACHER OF IOWA IS ARRESTED

Audubon, Ia., April 20.—Rev. E. J W. Starck, the pro-German preacher who was the central figure in several exciting incidents here several weeks ago and whose death at the hands of a crowd of infuriated citizens was barely averted by the pleadings of his wife and a friend, who interceded, while the preacher was being dragged to a tree, has been arrested in Chicago, according to advices just received by Sheriff B. F. Wilson of this county.

Sheriff Wilson received word from the chief of detectives in Chicago stating that they had Rev. E. J. W. Starck in charge and asked for full particulars. The sheriff immediately got busy and learned that Rev. Mr Starck refused to come without the regular legal process for taking a man from one state to another and the sheriff turned the matter over to the federal authorities. The federal authority extends over the United States without any question and the department at Des Moines informed Sheriff Wilson that they would follow the case up at once and immediately wired the department at Chicago to begin their investigation at once

IOWA EXPERTS WITH RIFLE TO INSTRUCT

Washington, D. C., April 20 —Iowa rifle experts have been drafted by the army to aid Lieut. Col. Morton M Mumma in instructing the soldiers of the nation in the operation of the new rifle used by the American forces.

Maj. Smith W. Brookhart, of Washington, has been selected as chief instructor at the Camp Perry, Ohio, rifle school as chief aid to Colonel Mumma, and the following Iowa rifle experts have been selected as instructors: Capt Don A. Prussiner, of Manchester, Capt. Edmund S. Geist and Lieut. H. Durchenwald, of Waterloo; Lieut Cedric A. Barnes, of Grinnell, and Lieut. Carl E. Loos, of Iowa City.

Major Brookhart leaves today for Camp Cody to spend two weeks instructing Iowa national guardsmen in the new rifle and upon completing the course will report to Camp Perry which opens May 5.

GRINNELL COLLEGE GIRLS WEAR OVERALLS

Grinnell, Ia., April 20.—Feminine overalls have invaded Grinnell college Shocking! "Not at all; they are for convenience and efficiency in working in the college war gardens," explains the Grinnell girl resentfully, and the next moment she holds the khaki colored garment up admiringly. "Aren't they cunnin'?" she exclaims.

The garments are no mere imitation of the men's variety, but are real feminine overalls. They blouse at the waist line and at the ankles.

Everyone at Grinnell will be busy on war work this spring. While the boys are drilling in their cadet uniforms the girls will be over the fence in the college garden doing their bit.

RESIDENTS OF STORM LAKE CALLED BY DEATH

Storm Lake, Ia., April 20.—F. S. Ranney, a resident of this city for 34 years and a veteran of the civil war is dead at the age of 74 years. When 18 years old he enlisted with Company C, 25th regular Wisconsin volunteer infantry and was wounded in a battle at Pine Bluff, Ark., Mr. Ranney is survived by his wife and four sons and daughters Mrs Robert Bleakley, of this city Mrs B. DRAFT EVADER IS TAKEN AT IDA GROVE

North Dakota Registrant Is Being Held For Officers From That State.

Ida Grove, Ia., April 20.—Sam Richards, a North Dakota draft-evader, was arrested by Sheriff McLeod on a farm near Holstein and is being held for officers from Benson county Richards is a migratory farm laborer and registered in Benson county North Dakota. Since that time he has been in various parts of the country, and claims that he wrote the board in the above county for a questionnaire while he was in Sioux City, but never received an answer The sheriff of Benson county has wired the local officer that he will send a man after Richards

WEEDING OUT ALL UNFIT FOR SERVICE

Des Moines, Ia., April 20.—Men physically unfit for the rigors of war sent to Camp Dodge under recent calls are being weeded out. These men now being sent home are from Minnesota and North Dakota, principally, as the most of the Iowans have already been passed upon.

Convalescent soldiers when released from the base hospital are to hereafter be placed in what is termed a convalescent company under a new plan recently adopted at the big camp. These men will be given light training and will be under special observation of the officers, instead of being sent back to their old organizations, where the rigorous training might be too much for them. Under this new plan also the men can be released from the hospital earlier than they could under the old plan, where they had to stay until practically their full strength had returned before taking up training.

Lieut. Col. J. R. Shook, division surgeon, is responsible for the new plan. He declares that men not able to report for full duty can be built up slowly under the direction of medical officers, and it will be better for the health of the men and for the development of the army.

The conversion of buildings at Fort Des Moines into hospitals is progressing. A 2,000-bed hospital is to be erected on the parade grounds in addition to the changing of many of the present buildings into quarters for injured soldiers.

CHAPLAIN WRITES TO PARENTS OF FALLEN HERO

Kingsley Ia., April 20 A letter dated March 12, from Winfred E Robb, chaplain of the 168th infantry with Pershing in France, has been received by Mr. and Mrs. William Nash, parents of Edward Nash, who fell in action in France on March 5. The letter is as follows:

"Long before this you have received the sad news of the death of your son Edward, of Hdq. Co 168 Inf But I cannot but write a note to explain my sympathy to you in your loss

"Edward was a splendid chap and he died with his face to the foe as a true soldier should

"The enemy on the night of March 5 attempted to raid our lines and take back a few of our boys, but the gallant fight our boys put up, they were repulsed after a few of their men had reached our lines. In this action Edward was killed, and we buried him beside his comrade in a little cemetery on the hill above the little French village where thousands of French people lined the streets and paid tribute to our dead heroes as we passed by, by saluting the ones who had fallen. And so, mother dear, he sleeps tonight, and when the resurrection dawns, the Good Father who reigns above, will call him, as he will you and I, forth to life again and there we shall meet again in the land where wars are not.

"I will photograph the grave, and if you desire, will send you a view of it, and if there be anything I can do, you have only to write me, for I shall be honored by the privilege of serving his family."

MEMORIAL SERVICE TO SALIX'S DEAD SOLDIER

Salix, Ia., April 20.—The people of Salix and vicinity this afternoon paid tribute to the memory of John Stekelenburg, son of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Stekelenburg, who was killed in action in France on April 5 The exercises were held in the Methodist Episcopal church and were attended by friends and neighbors of the family, the church being filled to overflowing.

The memorial address was delivered by Rev. Mr. Hill, pastor of the church, who had for his subject, "Our Responsibility to Humanity."

His text was taken from the sixth verse of the second chapter of First Timothy. "He Gave His Life a Ransom For All." The speaker emphasized the fact that the purpose of life should not be the accomplishment of things which satisfy us individually but the accomplishment of things which fulfill our responsibility to humanity. He made it plain that a soldier who has given his life as did John Stekelenburg has not satisfied the ambition of the individual but that he has done the thing required in the interest of humanity.

The speaker paid a glowing tribute to the American manliness of the Salix young man who hurried away less than a year ago at the call of his country, the call of humanity, and who now fills the grave of a patriot, a patriot to his country and a true servant of the cause of humanity in the whole wide world. He admonished the relatives and friends of the fallen soldier that while their grief is poignant they must take solace in the fact that his sacrifice is similar in every respect to the sacrifice of the Son of God.

IOWA'S 99 COUNTIES ALL GO OVER TOP

Des Moines, Ia., April 20.—A telegram from McNider reads as follows: "All counties in Iowa have exceeded their quota. We are the first state in the nation to exceed the quota, We are the first state also to have every county report quota filled. Iowa certainly takes her place in the sun in the third Liberty loan and the Seventh district is leading in every way."

ROCK RAPIDS—The very polite but pointed invitation sent out by the committee here to those who were hoarding flour has resulted in quite a large amount of flour being returned. The committee knows others who have flour, and have not returned it and will proceed against them in case they do not voluntarily return the surplus they have in stock.

ONAWA—At a democratic conference held here Ed M. Whiting, of Whiting, Ia., was unanimously selected as the candidate for state senator for the Thirty-fourth district. Mr. Whiting is one of the leading farmers of Monona county and has never been a candidate for office

IOWA FIRM LOSES RETAILER'S LICENSE

Postville Concern Sold Flour Without Required Amount of Substitutes.

Washington, D. C., April 19.—The food administration has announced that for selling flour without substitutes and failing to respond to a summons, the retailer's license of Hall Roberts & Son, of Postville, Ia., has been revoked. Hall Roberts & Son do a retail business in excess of $100,000 a year, and consequently must have retailer's license. The firm retains its elevator license. The firm was required to apologize publicly to the federal food administrator of Iowa for its conduct in the sale of flour and donate $500 to the American Red Cross to cover profits from illegal sales.

GENERAL HAIG HAS RELATIVES IN IOWA

Council Bluffs, Ia., April 19.—Oliver Dyson Haig, 60 years old, living in this city at 824 Fifth avenue, is a nephew of Field Marshal Sir Douglas Haig, the famous British army officer, and the Council Bluffs relative of the allied commander is watching with keenest interest the heroic efforts of the forces of England, France and the United States in their "fight to the end with their backs to the wall." The father of the Council Bluffs man was Benjamin Haig, a brother of Sir Douglas Haig.

The Haig brothers were born at Micklehurst, in Staleybridge, near Manchester, England. Dyson, whose given name is the middle name of the Council Bluffs man, moved to Scotland, where Sir Douglas was born Benjamin Haig came to Canada, where he died 43 years ago. When 10 years of age Oliver Dyson Haig came to Council Bluffs with his mother.

MAY ENLARGE ZONE FOR IOWA MINED COAL

Washington, D. C., April 19.—The Garfield fuel administration may modify the coal zone order to the extent of allowing Iowa coal to be used throughout Iowa. Now the eastern third of the state is shut off from it

Representative Green saw fuel administration officials and made a vigorous protest against the arrangements as to Iowa Senator Cummins, Representative Ramseyer and George Wrighaman of the Iowa Manufacturers' association saw the fuel officials and protested

The danger that people of Iowa will seriously suffer for coal this winter was emphasized

Fuel officials indicated they would consider moving the zone line farther east than it is now to allow Iowa coal to be used in all or nearly all of Iowa. Judge Green said he would wire Governor Harding to find out what he thought of that. Judge Green asked that Iowa mines be allowed to ship coal farther east when there was no Iowa demand This was refused.

ALLIES HOLD YPRES FRONT WITHOUT USE OF RESERVES

BY J. W. MASON,
United Press War Expert.

New York, April 20.—Participation of French troops with the British in the fighting before Ypres and Hazebrouck does not mean that General Foch is throwing his reserves into action before a major counter offensive.

The assistance of the French in the northern part of the battle front, is doubtless strictly limited. Instead of being taken from the "army of maneuver" these troops may even have been removed from other parts of the line where the German positions are weakly held. To keep intact the "army of maneuver" for action after the Germans have exhausted themselves is so important that it is probable General Foch is resisting all local pleas for use of the army to stem the German assault.

Maintenance of the morale of the troops in the field and of the civilians at home is necessary if General Foch's plans for saving his "army of maneuver" for offensive purposes at a later time are to continue. The losses suffered by the defenders of the Ypres-Hazebrouck front are undoubtedly severe, though not nearly as heavy as the German casualties. It is part of the game of high strategy that General Foch seems to be playing, however, to permit these losses to continue, as long as Hindenburg wants to keep up his destructive assaults.

There is no doubt of General Foch's ability to stop the German attacks along the Ypres-Hazebrouck line by throwing into that sector several corps of fresh troops. General Foch has the necessary number of men, but if this were done, Hindenburg might well shift his attack toward Amiens or he might again try to break through the line in the direction of Paris.

General Foch's use of his authority thus far has been highly reassuring. He has saved Amiens and in the north Hindenburg is still vainly slaughtering German man power before the defenses of Ypres and Hazebrouck.

Foch's plans can be trusted to work out as long as the allies' morale holds steady.

RHEIMS FLAMES SEEN 70 MILES

Germans Pump 100,000 Shells Into City in Week—Heroic Firemen Work Through Hun Barrage.

Paris, April 20.—Rheims which has been on fire for a week, is now nothing but a great pile of smoking ruins. During the past week the Germans have fired more than 100,000 shells into the heart of the city, according to the correspondent of Le Matin and flames from the burning buildings can be seen by aviators 60 and 70 miles away.

There are no traces of streets and thoroughfares which have disappeared from view under the accumulation of debris Ancient buildings in the Place Royale and the market place and the musicians house, which dates from the 6 century have been reduced to dust and ashes. The vaulting of the famous Rheims cathedral is falling stone by stone.

Notwithstanding the terrible bombardment, 40 firemen are still at work in the city Some of them have lost their lives. With them are some local firemen, one of whom, Sergeant Ciqi, has been on duty in Rheims since the outbreak of the war and has been wounded 14 times.

One of the most historic and picturesque cities in Europe has thus been effaced by German frightfulness. Rheims had a population of more than 100,000 before the war. It was once a stronghold of the Romans and preserved much of the Roman architecture, including a beautiful triumphal arc. On the site of the former Romar fortifications fine boulevards were built.

The Rheims cathedral was one of the largest and most wonderful specimens of Gothic architecture in the world It was built during the 13th century. It had a facade containing the famous "rose window" and 500 statues. Its portals were richly adorned with sculptures. In this cathedral the French kings were crowned.

Next in importance to the cathedral was the large 11th century abbey church of St Remy. Other structures were the Arch-Episcopal palace, dating from the 18th century, in which was located a museum of sculpture, and the Hotel de Ville, containing a public museum and a library of more than 80,000 volumes.

Rheims is less than three miles back of the French lines.

BOCHE PLANE LOSSES FULLY THREE TO ONE

Allies Dropping 50 Tons of Explosives Daily Behind Enemy Lines.

Washington, D C April 19.—Three enemy planes have been downed for every allied airplane lost in the western offensive said an official dispatch received here today

Enemy planes are brought down each day by the score, and nearly 100,000 pounds of explosives are dropped on the enemy organizations behind their lines. On March 26 not less than 36 hostile aviators were brought down and 24 were obliged to retreat. On March 27, 80 airplanes used more than a quarter million cartridges on the masses of German infantry and the men were mowed down by the hundreds.

German radiograms are recognizing the superiority of the allied airmen in the following manner. "In certain regions he penetrated with squadrons of 60 aviators with such great force that our aviators could only repulse them after severe combats."

The dispatch makes it clear that bombardments in enemy zones have been made solely upon military centers and strictly military objectives.

FRENCH CREATE NEW DIVERSION

Smash Germans on Four-Mile Front East of Amiens—British Defense One of Most Gallant Known.

By United Press.

The French are assuming a more dominant part in the western front fighting. Not only have their reserves appeared in great force on the Flanders battlefield, but they are taking the initiative before Amiens.

French artillery pounded the German positions in Picardy on a front of more than 50 miles from the Somme to the Oise, in one of the heaviest bombardments ever launched by the allies.

Unable to determine from what quarter the expected assault was coming, the Germans were caught by surprise when the French suddenly swept forward on a narrow front of scarcely more than four miles along the Avre, between Thennes and Mailly Raineval. The enemy was pushed back and the French established themselves in the outskirts of Castel, a mile and a half south of Thennes. This is at the point of the closest approach of the Germans at. Amiens, a distance of eight miles and a half.

Washington, D. C. April 20.—The French are striving hard to relieve the terrible pressure on their British comrades in arms to the north.

Military men saw this in the latest French moves in the Amiens sector, but up to early today this had not developed sufficiently to make a radical change.

With the French battling shoulder to shoulder with the British in the north other French forces in the Avre region have succeeded in a counter attack. United Press messages from Henry Wood yesterday, detailing the artillery struggle, indicated the French were testing out the lines for a weak spot, while today's news indicated they had succeeded in a small way against the enemy.

The British defense to date is considered one of the most stubborn and gallant in all history.

Entente officials here said frankly today that had the British not stood and died at critical times, the struggle might have ended ere now in a Teuton victory. The British, they said, had yielded only where further sacrifice of life would have netted little. Literally, they have died to the last man many points to stop the Teuton.

The German has sacrificed heavily in his onslaughts. Military men estimate that 400,000 to 500,000 Teuton casualties have resulted, thus far The British losses, too, are heavy

Military men find some satisfaction in the fact that the British have held well for two days and there is hope now that the French will be able to create a diversion in the southern end of the line.

MUTINY IN GERMAN CAMP AT BEVERLOO

Many Revolting Troops Are Reported to Have Been Shot Down.

Amsterdam, April 20.—Another mutiny occurred in the military camp at Beverloo, in the province of Limburg, where German troops were ordered to the front, it was learned today Many soldiers were reported to have been shot. The trouble continues, it is said.

The earliest guide book printed in English is "Instructions for Forraine Travell," published in 1642 by James Howell, a famous traveler of that day.

IRISH ARE UNITED TO RESIST CONSCRIPTION

Dublin, April 20.—A manifesto declaring Irish conscription is a "violation of the rights of small nations," has been issued by a conference of Irish party, Sinn Fein, and Irish laborite leaders. The manifesto exhorts the Irish people to the utmost resistance.

For the first time in many years the nationalists met the Dublin Sinn Feiners and their older enemies, William O'Brien and Timothy Healy, while labor representatives who have not been very friendly to the nationalists in recent years, also were present at the conference, which was held under the chairmanship of the lord mayor.

A committee composed of John Dillon, Edward De Vallers, Timothy Healy and a labor representative, with the lord mayor of Dublin, was apponted to attend the bishops' meeting at Maynooth, where the resolution was adopted.

The meeting also directed that public meetings should be held in the parish next Sunday, at which a pledge should be administered in the words of the resolution. Masses of intercession also will be held in every Catholic church.

Field Marshal Lord French commander in chief of the forces in the United Kingdom, arrived in Dublin yesterday with his staff.

The nationalists, or at least the majority of them, are understood to have decided to abstain from attendance in the house of commons during the crisis, thus adopting the attitude of the Sinn Feiners, who were elected to parliament, but have never attended.

Eulogy of Tempests of the Ice King Reads Better in Spring Than in Winter

When it's nice and cold and snappy; when the world is bright and happy; when you're drinking in the ozone with a pair of grateful lungs; when the wintry winds go zipping and the crusted leaves are skipping, could the simple joy of living be the theme of sluggard tongues?

Oh! the song that's in the breezes! How it flits with us and teases! How it chases us from the workaday to wander in the wood! How it comes to us and preaches and takes hold of us and teaches just to living laughing, loving, to be satisfied and good!

Blow ye tempests from the regions of the Ice King and his legion! Open up the smothered chambers of the dullard's sluggish heart! Blow new life into our bones, blow new visions to our seeing, for there's love and life and laughter when the winds of winter start.—Richmond Times-Dispatch

Juice of Lemons! How to Make Skin White and Beautiful

At the cost of a small jar of ordinary cold cream one can prepare a full quarter pint of the most wonderful lemon skin softener and complexion beautifier, by squeezing the juice of two fresh lemons into a bottle containing three ounces of orchard white. Care should be taken to strain the juice through a fine cloth so no lemon pulp gets in, then this lotion will keep fresh for months. Every woman knows that lemon juice is used to bleach and remove such blemishes as sallowness, freckles and tan and is the ideal skin softener, smoothener and beautifier.

Just try it! Get three ounces of orchard white at any pharmacy and two lemons from the grocer and make up a quarter pint of this sweetly fragrant lemon lotion and massage it daily into the face, neck, arms and hands. It naturally should help to soften, freshen, bleach and bring out the roses and beauty of any skin. It is wonderful to smoothen rough, red hands. Adv.

REFUSE PARDON PLEA FOR FRIEND OF EDITH CAVELL

Geneva, April 19.—When Edith Cavell was executed in Belgium by the Germans a girl friend, Miss Julia Wyss, aged 20, of Geneva, was sentenced to 25 years penal servitude for the same offense. She is now in a Prussian prison. A petition for a pardon, signed by 1,000 women of Geneva, was sent to the crown princess of Germany nearly a year ago. A cold, almost brutal reply signed by Baron Von Stulpenzel, secretary to the crown princess, has just been received. It states briefly that the petition cannot be taken into consideration by the crown princess.

FEW TROOPS ON EASTERN FRONT

Less Than 200,000 Teuton Soldiers Now in Russia—Rumors of Counter Revolt Revived.

By United Press.

Washington, D. C., April 19.—Germany has less than six divisions—72,000 men—on the Russian front, according to semi-official reports received here today, while the invading army which captured Helingfors consisted of about 40,000 troops. The other German forces operating in Russia number less than 100,000 men, it is authoritatively stated.

Since peace was declared between the bolshevisists and Germany, more than 2,000,000 German and Austrian war prisoners have been released. On the other hand, officials here declare, very few of the 2,000,000 Russians prisoners in Germany and Hungary have found their way back to their own country. Thousands have died in prison camps, more than 4,000 graves being located at Brandenburg alone, while others impressed in Teuton industries, have small chance of being repatriated. The majority who have been allowed to return are totally incapacitated or permanently crippled, dispatches state.

From sources which cannot be divulged, Kerensky governmental officials in this country have recently received reports of the growth of a counter revolutionary movement which threatens bolshevist powers. Only a decisive defeat to the allies on the western front can prevent a Russian uprising they declare.

Leaders such as Generals Semenoff Kaledines Alxieff and Savinkoff are the head of small, but powerful troop organizations, reports state. These number about 40,000 at present but will be swelled to 10 times that number, when the anti-bolshevist standard is raised, the officials here have been informed.

ALLY POSITIONS IN FLANDERS STRENGTHENED

Situation Today Looks Brighter Than It Has For Several Days—Boche Attempt to Outflank Vimy Ridge and Penetrate Between Bethune and Arras a Failure.

By Associated Press.

With the British army in France, April 19.—Exhausted by the failure of yesterday's heavy attacks on the Givenchy-La Bassee canal front the Germans made no further moves during the night and on the greater part of the Flanders battle front quiet prevailed this morning.

The British reestablished their line west of Robecq on the south westerly part of the Lys battle field by recapturing ground at Riex Du Vinage farm yesterday afternoon.

Kemmel hill on the northerly side of the battle area was still being heavily bombarded this morning in preparation for fresh assaults by the Germans.

By Associated Press.

Although the German thrust launched last week against the British lines from Givenchy to Ypres has bent back the British front badly in this entire area the offensive here stands checked today and in imminent danger of utter failure so far as the larger results aimed at are concerned.

Meet Severe Test and Win.

Field Marshal Haig's troops yesterday had to meet one of the severest tests yet put upon them in withstanding a German effort to broaden out the salient created before the early impetus of the German drive in the Lys battle field was spent. They came through the ordeal with colors flying and completely stopped the German onrush.

From Givenchy to St. Venant, an 11-mile sector on the southerly side of the salient German troops were hurled in masses on the British positions in an effort to break through to the southwest behind Bethune and compel the British to fall back from Givenchy and along the front southward toward Vimy ridge and Arras.

German Losses Heavy.

The defensive line held firm despite repeated desperate assaults which cost the Germans enormous losses and last night the battle had died down to an artillery duel. Correspondents at the front declare the British front is now more secure than it has been for days.

Further efforts probably of an equally determined nature may be expected from the Germans who are in too exposed a position from enfilading gun fire in their narrow salient to rest comfortably where they are. Indeed they resumed their attacks last night in the Mount Kemmel region, on the northerly side of the battle field, southwest of Ypres, where they are finding the British firmly installed on the dominating heights. These assaults, like the preceding ones, were failures.

On the Somme battle front the French have held to their gains of yesterday in the region of Castel, where they drove the Germans further from the line of the Paris-Amiens railway in a spirited local attack. German machine gun nests on the front of this attack were wiped out by the French during the night.

125,000 HUNS IN ATTACK.

By Associated Press.

With the British Armies in France, April 19.—The attack between Givenchy and St. Vincent began at 9 o'clock yesterday morning after a heavy bombardment by the enemy artillery lasting five hours. Hard fighting developed immediately along most of the line. It was especially intense about Givenchy and in the Robecq-Locon sector. The British were facing at least 75,000 riflemen, who were supported by great numbers of guns and from 50,000 to 60,000 other troops, who go to make up the complements for the infantry.

The defending forces at Givenchy had sustained numerous desperate attacks and had held their ground during the early hours of the battle. At Hinges hill, east of Locon, where the German line bulged out close to the canal, the enemy made a particularly determined effort to get across the waterway. Twice the German infantry attacked here each time coming up in four waves. In one of these drives the Germans succeeded in getting some bridges across the canal, but the only Germans who crossed were those who ran over and surrendered.

Deluge of Steel.

The British artillery and machine guns poured a deluge of steel about the frail bridges, and the slaughter of the opposing troops was heavy. One party of 200 Germans advanced at one time with hands over their heads to surrender. For some reason they changed their minds abruptly and fled. They were shot to pieces as they ran.

There also was hard fighting about Pacaut wood, near the canal and between Robecq and St. Venant, where the Germans hoped to improve their positions in order to facilitate operations to the north and south. The attacks in this region were repulsed completely. A concentration of enemy infantry in Calonne, west of St. Venant, was caught in the British artillery barrage and badly cut up. British troops in the neighborhood of Wytschaete this morning were continuing their all night battle with the Germans. A German attack yesterday resulted in pushing a salient out northwest of the place, but a subsequent British counter attack again drew the British line close about the town and at one time small bodies of British infantry penetrated to the southeastern section.

The British lost a very small piece of territory between Bailleul and Dranoutre yesterday, but the German attack here must be recorded as a failure. Further westward, hard fighting continued about Meteren, and this place today was No Man's Land. A heavy German attack east of Meteren was smashed.

Just south of this place, near Merris, the British by a counter stroke succeeded in pushing their lines forward toward the western outskirts of the village.

Use Troops Second Time.

The Germans have been bringing up fresh divisions to the Bailleul sector, but the most promising sign is that they are beginning to use a second time the troops which had such hard fighting in the early days of the offensive. For the last few days, the high command appeared to have departed from its usual careful methods.

In order to save time and to push forward quickly before the allies are able to get up more reinforcements, the enemy seems to have been sending troops into the attack without any more specific plans than that they must get to a certain objective. Junior officers have been directing much of the fighting and going ahead on their own initiative. The result of this has been quite apparent for the enemy undoubtedly has been messing affairs at numerous points.

The most noticeable feature of the conversations of German prisoners as contained in captured documents and letters, is the continual reference to the great casualties ever since the Germans began the offensive. They certainly were excessive in the first days of the big push, and now the northern battle fields are covered with the bodies of enemy dead.

The Germans are continuing to push forward continuously into the positions the British have evacuated east of Ypres, and the defending artillery has been playing havoc with the advancing troops. Twice the enemy massed to come into the Polygon wood, and on each occasion they were smashed by artillery fire. The Germans did not actually get under way for the occupation of the Passchendaele attack for many hours.

The country from which the British pulled back is an awful mud hole and it will take the enemy a long time to man the new positions and get artillery forward through the mud.

GERMAN RESERVES CUT TO 840,000

Washington, D. C., April 19.—Germany still has approximately 70 divisions (840,000 men), which constitute a fresh and comparatively unused reserve force on the western front, British military officials estimated today.

These account for the continual use of fresh German troops in the fighting, it is said.

U. S. TO RAISE 2,500,000 MEN

That Number Will Be in France and in Training Camps By End of Present Year.

Washington, D. C., April 20.—The quartermaster general's department is preparing equipment for an army of 2,500,000 in the field or training camps by the end of 1918, it developed today.

Estimates for congress provide an increase in the armed forces of 1,000,000 men during the next fiscal year. The House military committee which met with war department officials today received a summary of the estimates.

WOMEN MAY ENROLL IN STATE MILITARY

Will Be Commissioned in Home Defense Reserve Forces of New York.

Albany, N. Y., April 19.—Women are to be allowed to join the military force of the state, becoming commissioned officers and members of the ambulance corps of the home defense reserve, according to official orders issued today by Adjutant Shorrill.

A unit of the ambulance corps of the home defenses reserve, under the order, will consist of skilled women operators of automobiles and who volunteer with their vehicles for military service. The adjutant general will pass upon all applications and if accepted, applicants will be inspected by a guard officer as to their qualifications.

The uniform will be olive drab of khaki material of a pattern to be approved by the adjutant general's office.

MONEY AS NEEDFUL AS MEN, SAYS GOVERNOR

Wage Earners, Business Men, Farmers and Capitalists Are Vitally Interested in Triumph of Our Arms.

By FRANK O. LOWDEN,
[Governor of Illinois.]

This is a war to establish the right of people to govern themselves. It is, therefore, a people's war. But a people cannot govern itself successfully unless it is willing to finance a war waged upon it by military autocracy. Democracy is doomed, unless it has the vitality to put forth its resources in support of a war, in which its very right to exist is challenged.

Our enemy frequently has said that we, as a nation, care for money alone. More than a million of our young men have given the lie to this charge by offering the supreme sacrifice—the sacrifice of life itself—that their country might endure. Shall it now be said of the other millions—the millions who remain at home—that this charge is true? Will not our people at home, for whose security and future our soldiers have gone to the colors, will not they loan their dollars to the government in the support of a cause for which these men gladly offer to give their lives?

Remember, money is as needful as men, if we are to prevail. Remember that if we do prevail, these bonds will be the best investment we shall have made during the period of the war. If we fail, even then they will be worth more than our cattle and lands, our factories and stores, or any other property we may own.

Our wage earners, business men and capitalists are vitally interested in the triumph of our arms. Let all subscribe in proportion to their means. The number who shall partake of this loan is as important as the total amount subscribed. If our people generally are united in absorbing our Liberty bonds, it will prove to the world that democracy knows what its liberties are worth, and is willing to defend them at any cost.

COST TO CRUSH THE KAISER

Boersianer, Financial Expert, Gives Figures as Boost to Liberty Loan.

By BOERSIANER,
[Financial Editor, Chicago Examiner.]

Not many years before Abraham Lincoln became president Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln were fed and sheltered in the Globe tavern, Springfield, Ill., at four dollars a week. In other terms, they each paid two dollars a week for room and board at what then was one of the best family hotels in the state capital. Incredibly cheap? To us today, yes, but not to the Americans of the 50's and 60's. The purchasing power of a dollar in those days was tremendous.

When the Civil war broke out the wealth of the United States was appraised at $17,000,000,000. Let us be liberal and make it $20,000,000,000 at the end of that internecine strife, the total cost of which was $4,000,000,000. At that time the national debt was $2,625,000,000. Put in another way, the country had spent in the Civil war one-fifth of her entire wealth.

What happened? Within eighteen years the whole of the national debt was paid off; extinguished by a commonwealth with only one-third of the present population; with little or no prestige as a world power; with all her railways, half of her city real estate and 60 per cent of her farms mortgaged to European capitalists; with bank resources of only $4,000,000,000 and with not a dollar's worth of investments abroad.

There are estimates that ere kaiserism shall be crushed our national obligation will stand at $20,000,000,000. That would mean about 8 per cent of the wealth of the nation (which is not less than $250,000,000,000) or 4 per cent less than the percentage in 1865.

America today is the leading power, the wealthiest country in the world. It is a creditor nation. Its railways, real estate and farms are owned by her own people and her bank resources total $49,389,000,000.

After this, is it necessary to ask if a United States government bond is a safe investment? There is nothing safer in the world; nothing which promises so rapid and so high an appreciation once the war is ended. These are the cold facts of the proposition. There is another side: the love-of-country, the love-of-Liberty, the great-humanity-cause side.

DIAGNOSING MEASLES.

Measles is moderately easy or almost possible to control, dependent upon w you go at the job. If it is regard- as an eruptive disease and no ef- t is made to recognize, diagnose, or atrol it until the eruption comes out, is an uncontrollable disease. If it is arded as a respiratory disease and diagnosis is made on what can be n in the mouth, throat, and eyes be- e the eruption, then it is not so dif- ult to control.

As much as five days before the ption appears, Koplik's spots appear the inside of the cheek. These are all bluish spots with red areas sur- unding them. They look a little like all stomach ulcers, but they do not use the acute pain that the apthous cer called stomach sore does. If, hen an epidemic of measles appears, e mother or teacher, or both, would ok into the mouth of every child every orning, measles would be detected be- re it became contagious.

Another good early sign is small hite or grayish spots on the tonsils. hese may not be larger than a pin int or a pin head, anyway. There may many or only a few. The tonsils may t be very red, though usually they e enlarged. These tonsils spots do t persist for more than a day. Nor e they present in half the cases of easles, but when they are present ey usually come a day before Koplik's pots, just as Koplik's spots come from e to five days before the eruption.

The great advantage in controlling easles by quarantining children as on as they show mouth and throat pots is that the disease has not be- me very contagious at the time these pots appear. Koplik's spots can be en if the child stands before a win- ow with his mouth wide open. To see e tonsils spots it may be necessary hold the tongue down.

Watery eyes is another good early gn. An ordinary cold does not cause e eyes to water. If a child with a resh" cold develops red, watery eyes e should be isolated at once and held ntil measles is proven or disproven.

Recently I overhead a mother tell a riend that she was afraid her child was aking measles. He had been exposed. He was still sending him to school, but she found any breaking out on his ody the next morning she intended to eep him at home. Assuming that the oy was coming down with measles, er plan was faulty. If he was to go school until he broke out with meas- s, she might as well not stop school t all, since everybody already would ave been exposed. Besides, he might ever break out.

There are some cases of measles that ever develop eruption and others that ave a good inconsequential eruption. easles is more contagious before the ruption than afterwards. In fact, it possible for laboratory workers to ause measles by injecting monkeys ith blood from patients that have not roken out. If the blood be taken after he breaking out stage, it will not pro- uce the disease.

A Lamentable Censorship.

From the New York World.

Maj. Gen. Peyton March finds every- hing about our forces in France highly atisfactory save only the censorship, hich he calls "lamentable." He praises he health and morale of the troops, their pirit and contentedness, and pronounces hem so well trained as to be able to andle themselves "with entire credit to he United States;" but he makes it clear hat he is wholly dissatisfied with the olicy of keeping the home folks unin- ormed of their activities.

This is important as the opinion not of n editor who wants to print the news or of an official who wants to suppress for bureaucratic reasons, but of a com- anding officer who as chief of artillery f the American expeditionary forces has ad nine months' experience overseas in bserving without bias the effect of the ensorship. That he finds it objection- ble is one of the best of reasons for bolishing it, or at least of relaxing it to allow the dispatch of news that would heer and hearten the American public.

To the extent that the information would ccomplish that good result it would ac- omplish the equally good result of dis- ouraging and dispiriting the Germans. he effect of the present policy is merely o stifle enthusiasm by suppression, and y so doing to connive at the German pol- cy of belittling our progress in the field. The morale of the American public must e considered as well as that of the Ameri- an army. General March's return as hief of staff will accomplish one excellent mmediate improvement if it brings about he abolition of a censorship that has roved more fatuous than effective.

Busy Coining Pennies.

From Every Week.

Three million new pennies every day— hat's Uncle Sam's response to the war umble demand for the humble cent.

To meet the emergency, Director of Mint laymond Baker ordered the Denver ranch of our coin factory to turn out othing but pennies. The San Francisco nd Philadelphia mints are busy on pen- ies and other small coins. Altogether, he daily output of 1-cent pieces is around ,000,000.

At the beginning of the present fiscal ear the mint records showed that ap- roximately $73,000,000 in pennies had been ut in circulation. Where they were no one knew. Postmasters, paying tellers, reight agents, peanut vendors, newsboys nd babies' banks were believed to have most of them.

From July 1 to November 1 approxi- nately 41,000,000 were minted, and the ex- erts estimate that $100,000,000 in pennies will be required to carry on business un- er war tax conditions. This would mean about 100 pennies for every person in the United States, leaving out of considera- ion the many coppers lost or mislaid dur- ng the taxless days of peace.

Diet of a Philosopher.

From the Wesminster Gazette.

To Mr. Stead, who delighted in inter- viewing notable men respecting their per- sonal habits, Mr. Benjamin Kidd once made a very frank reply. He had found, he said, that well cooked lean meat was the most easily digested food and that on which he was able to do continuously the best intellectual work. He could not do good work on much starchy food.

Very spare eating was, in his own case, essential to the clear working of the mind. He rarely smoked and rarely took alcohol. It was not the immediate effects of alcohol but its after results that seemed to de- press the brain power.

He had found, too, that mental fatigue unduly prolonged led at a certain point to a clearing of the mind and a flow of ideas. He suggested as an explanation that the toxins formed in the system at this stage themselves acted as brain stimulants, which would mean that a serious price had to be paid afterward.

Danes Volunteer With Allies.

From the Tokio Near East.

Those who have been in Denmark have wondered very much about the attitude of the Danes towards Germany, in view of the degree to which they suffered by the loss of Slesvig and of the deep feeling which a considerable section of the popu- lation of Denmark still retains. A signi- cant fact has just come to light in the publication in Copenhagen of a book en- titled "Danish Soldiers' Letters." This volume contains the letters of Danes who have volunteered to fight in the French and British armies. The total number serving at the front must be considerable. It is a satisfaction to find that the pres- ence of these Danish soldiers with the Allies is known to Germany.

BATTLEFIELDS AND COMMERCE.

Victor Hugo.

A day will come when the only battlefield will be the market open to commerce, and the mind opening to new ideas. A day will come when bullets and bombshells will be replaced by votes, by the universal suffrage of nations, by arbitration of a sovereign senate which will be to Europe what the parliament is to England, the diet to Germany, the legislative assembly to France. A day will come when a cannon ball will be exhibited in public museums just as an instrument of torture is now, and the people will be astonished how such a thing could have been. A day will come when these two immense groups, the United States of America and the United States of Europe, shall be seen extending the hand across the ocean, exchanging their products, their industry, their arts, their genius, clearing the earth, peopling the deserts, improving creation under the eye of the creator, and uniting for the good of all these two irresistible forces united in powers—the fraternity and the power of God.

War Affects British Styles

From the Yorkshire Post.

In the interests of economy of feather the government has decided to limit the height of the upper part of boots. The high boot and the short kilted skirt are becoming unbecoming dress for women, but they have both come to stay. Already war has dictated longer but much narrower skirts. They are in no way hobbled and to those who look to the common sense as well as to the the beauty of a fashion they seem to strike a medium that might well be maintained. They render needless the long boot, which has persisted after the ban on the kilted skirt and the compulsory saving of leather now contemplated need raise no misgiving to those who, very properly, like to preserve a balance in their dress. It is a slight enough change in fashion for the war to make in women's attire.

Compared with the advice of Sir Arthur Yapp to men to wear frayed collars and threadbare suits, it is trivial, for no one judges the ability (or even the charm) of a woman by the length of her boots, but an impeccable collar and a decent suit are too often the foundation of a man's career. Nor are such changes as these comparable to some which the war has threatened. When starch seemed likely to fail, the whole system of conventional masculine evening dress hung in the balance. Its preservation is not wholly a matter for rejoicing. Instead of cavilling at the disappearance of high boots many will rather deplore that the war has not compelled a clean sweep of quite a host of fashions, such as tall hats, starched shirts and collars, black evening dress, expensive furs, bird plumage in hats, and a host of other modes and details of apparel which depend for their resolute grip on love of ostentation or the pressure of an unimaginative convention.

Printers Prove Loyalty.

From the Indianapolis News.

The International Typographical union, in a newly issued booklet, discloses a war record of which the organization can well be proud. There are now 2,518 members of that union in the military service of the United States and Canada.

The list of subordinate typographical unions reporting members is not complete, and "it is estimated that at least 500 additional members have enlisted or have been called under the universal service law." Not counted are several hundred printer's apprentices. Fifty-five members of the union have been killed on the battlefields or have died in service since the beginning of the war. Dependents of these have been paid $17,025 by the organization. The executive council of the union has subscribed for $60,000 forth of Liberty bonds and subordinate unions and individual members have taken $2,000,000 worth. Indianapolis it is gratifying to note, heads the printed list of cities from which members have enlisted, and seems to have sent more than its full quota in comparison with cities of like size.

Always a conservatively administered and loyal organization whose members have been willing to give a day's work for a day's pay, it is not surprising that the Typographical union's record in the war should provide an occasion for felicitation. Other labor organizations possibly will do as much, few will do more.

The publication of the booklet and the record it indicates should help to put an end for all time to the absurd statement, now seldom heard but once frequent, that the "heart of labor is not in the war." No other class has more depending on a victorious outcome of the war. Failure to support it whole heartedly would be an evidence of stupidity as well as disloyalty altogether unjustified by the record and reputation American labor has learned through the years.

Facts Worth Knowing.

From the People's Home Journal.

The first test of shrapnel was made in England 112 years ago when a committee of British army men reported favorably on the invention of a fellow officer, Henry Shrayne. Shrapnel was first employed in warfare in 1806 and fully demonstrated its explosive usefulness.

Since August, 1914, the United States has shipped 1,000,000 horses and 500,000 mules to Europe.

There are 150 cities in the United States with populations in excess of 50,000, and practically every one of these cities has hundreds of acres of park land. These park acreages, the government believes, could easily maintain 150,000 sheep each summer. And sheep are the best lawnmowers.

Twelve thousand square miles—7,680,000 acres—constitute the rice land of Japan which feeds a nation of about 50,000,000 people on an average of a pound a day for each person.

There are 674,728 depositors in the United States postal savings service. They have $131,954,696 to their credit.

The United States now manufactures practically everything it requires in chemicals. Before the war 90 per cent of our chemicals were imported from Germany.

It costs the United States $157 to equip an infantryman for service in France. That is the price paid for his tools of war only.

Green-Gilled Oysters Safe.

From the Youth's Companion.

Do not be afraid of "green-gilled" oysters. The United States bureau of fisheries, in telling of the value of oysters as a food that is wholesome and that can be prepared without waste in a variety of ways, explains that the greenish color is of vegetable origin and comes from the food on which the oysters in some waters live. Such oysters are often the best. In France they are prized above all others.

King George has sent his annual subscription of $5,000 to King Edward's hospital fund for London.

BRITAIN'S NEW ARMY CHIEF A FIGHTER.

General Sir Henry Hughes Wilson, Great Britain's representative on the new allied war council that was created at Rapallo, is one of his country's most distinguished soldiers. His long and brilliant record does not suffer by contrast even with those of his two renowned colleagues, General Foch, the representative of France and General Cadorna, the former commander-in-chief of the armies of Italy. General Wilson is the new "war lord" of Great Britain, succeeding Sir William Robertson. The photo is his most recent one and shows him at the wheel of his official car in London.

Like so many of the British empire's greatest fighting men, General Sir Henry Wilson is an Irishman. Now 53, he is the son of James Wilson, D. L., J. P., of Currygrane, Edgeworthstown, Ireland, and married one of his country women, Miss Cecil Mary Wray of Ardnamona, Donegal. He is a lieutenant general, a knight companion of the Bath, a D. S. O., a general staff officer of the Rifle brigade, and was director of military operations at army headquarters from 1910 up to the beginning of the war.

Career Is Distinguished.

His career from the beginning has been one of distinction an exceptional gallantry. He was educated at Marlborough college and graduated at the staff college, after which he entered the Royal Irish regiment. This was in 1884. In the same year he transferred to the rifle brigade, went to India and saw his first active service in the Burma campaign of 1885-87 in which he was wounded. A further two years' period of active service won him a medal with two clasps. Then he was brought back to England and was an instructor at the staff college from 1892 to 1894 and a staff captain in the intelligence division during the next three years. When the South African war broke out, he took part in the campaign as brigadier major of the Light brigade and served brilliantly for over two years during which time he won the distinguished service order, was four times mentioned in dispatches, was awarded a medal with five clasps, and made a brevet colonel on his promotion to major.

Is Picture of Fitness.

From 1902 to 1903, he commanded the Ninth provisional battalion, and in the years that followed was assistant adjutant general at army headquarters, assistant director of staff duties at the war office and commandant of the staff college. He got his knighthood for distinguished services in the present war and is also a grand officer of the Legion of Honor. In spite of his years, he is the picture of fitness and virility. In peace times he was fond of hunting, shooting, polo and tennis. He has country places at Edgeworthstown, Ireland, at Grove End, in Surrey, and also has a town house in fashionable Eaton Place.

Peace and Optimism.

Isaac F. Marcosson, in the New York Times.

Since President Wilson's speech in reply to Count Czernin which made the first real rift in the gray sky of war, the American heart has beat with the high hope that perhaps the worst of the bloody business is over and that possibly peace is in sight. No prospect could be more alluring.

But let us not be deceived. Like much of the optimism created in the war this soaring emotion may be a dangerous and costly dissipation. What I mean is simply this. Behind a reckless or heedless belief that the long night of ache and agony is near its end is a menace to the whole allied cause in general and to the United States in particular.

Everybody admits that the world is war weary. Europe's nerves are on edge, its people are irritable. Yet, allied Europe has learned to appraise properly every subtle attempt made by Germany to "gold brick" her into peace. The hint of an armistice arouses no rash hope in the war ridden countries. Germany "got over" her home made peace on Russia merely because she was dealing, in the main, with men who were fundamentally pro-German, and therefore willing and receptive victims. She could never "put this over" on England, France or Italy. Even the most dyed-in-the-wool pacifist is not deceived by Teutonic overtures. What is more important, there has been no let up in the war endeavor.

The greatest danger to our participation in the war lies in a slacking down the moment there is the slightest tangible evidence that Germany is willing to discuss peace. At this approach to the millennium people will be quick to say "At last the war is over! Let us get back to normal. Why further disrupt the social and economic life?" This sentiment is infectious. Like the army disorder which leads to rout, it is easily started but difficult to stop. You may be sure that the German propagandist will be swiftly on the job feeding the flames of this destructive optimism.

If the United States commits the folly of slowing down her war effort at the first indication of a peace parley she will be playing directly into the hands of the Germans. Trying to decoy an enemy into an armistice which enables her to recoup losses and renew her war equipment is one of the specialties of the German tricksters. Look at Russia!

This same history, in some respects, would repeat itself in the United States in the remote event of a parley. While the Germans would be prating of peace and blessed relief from the long trial they would be speeding up their munitions output, training new men, bulwarking the whole far flung war machine.

All this means one thing: If by some merciful circumstance we are enabled to talk peace this year we must talk it with a great army behind us, backed up with a war industry geared up to its greatest output, and with the whole country keyed up to the realization that the path to a permanent peace lies in an adequate preparedness for war. There must be no letdown in energy, no cessation of effort, no abandon to "the war is ended" optimism. Germany will have infinitely more respect for us if we keep the wheels of war whirring.

Last October Sir Eric Geddes, first lord of the admiralty and one of the British war wizards, gave me a message for the American people which bears directly on the present situation. It is such a significant utterance that I venture to repeat it here. It follows:

> Give up hoping that this can be a short war. Plan and provide for an ever receding duration of at least two years more. If we all do so peace may one day surprise us. If we do not, then there will be no peace, but only a postponement. There must be no postponement and no "next time."

Grass.

From the Indianapolis News.

In the spring the average man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of grass. And not so very lightly, either, for growing grass in a great many city yards is a good deal like trying to make the lower 40 produce 50 bushels of wheat to the acre. Many a man who has heard of or seen the velvetlike turf so famous in England has been filled with a strong resolution to make his front yard so green and so velvety that passersby will pause and wonder at the beauty of it. Then some one comes along and tells him that old tale about the turf in England being rolled for 100 years. That is what a yard needs as a final dressing.

Grass is a serious subject. A large book informs us that grass is an endogeneous plant, having simple leaves, a stem generally jointed and tubular, the husks or glumes in pairs, and the seed single. Lots of folk never suspected grass of that before.

Man has no further to go than the bible for a suggestion about lawn improvement. In Genesis i,11, is the injunction to "let the earth bring forth grass." The next verse declares that "the earth brought forth grass," which indicates that the soil in the garden of Eden was much better than it is in some other portions of the earth. Deuteronomy xxix, 23, says: "And the whole land thereof is brimstone and salt and burning, that it is not sown nor beareth, nor any grass groweth therein." One would not have to travel far to find a man who would make affidavit that his yard was just like this. Yet there is more encouragement in II Samuel, xxii, 4, where it is said "as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain." Job vi, 5, asks: "Doth the wild ass bray when he hath grass?" This question, of course, is respectfully referred to the United States Senate.

Bible readers are familiar with Psalms ciii, 11, where the statement is made that "my days are like a shadow that declineth and I am withered like grass." And in Psalms ciii, 15, we find that "as for man, his days are as grass." The average grass grower's trouble is well expressed in Psalms cxxix, 6, for there the scripture declares "As the grass upon the housetops which withereth afore it groweth up." Full many an experience in attempting to beautify the lawn is summed up in Isaiah, xv, 6, "The grass faileth, there is no green thing."

Sassafras.

From the Indianapolis News.

A friend who has not lost his touch with "green fields and running brooks" remarked a few days ago that sassafras will soon be with us again. There must be some benighted city dwellers who do not know that sassafras is "a tree of the laurel family, common in eastern North America, with a spicy aromatic bark especially on the roots, and very mucilaginous twigs and foliage." It is also "an aromatic stimulant." Its peculiar habitat, we should say, is Montgomery county, in and about Alamo, where James Buchanan Elmore, the laureate of this laurel, lives and toils and thinks. Those who have read his tribute thereto will never scorn this "aromatic stimulant." We have not, we regret to say, his poem at hand, but there is in it a stanza that runs something like this:

> O sassafras, O sassafras,
> Thou art the stuff for me!
> And in the spring I love to sing
> Sweet sassafras of thee!

There is in the thought of this "aromatic stimulant" a subtle suggestion of fields and woods, and also of rural taverns which carry sassafras tea on their menus. In these days of soft drinks it may be that the proprietors of sundae dispensaries will find it to their advantage to include sassafras tea in their offerings. Only the other day our brutal food administrator decreed that there should be no more afternoon teas. But surely even he would not object were sassafras tea served. There ought to be a great market for it in England, the usual supply having been cut off. When we are all looking for substitutes the claims of the "mucilaginous twigs and foliage" ought not to be overlooked. But it is from the poetic and romantic point of view that we prefer to consider the subject. With sassafras knocking at our doors spring must be almost here, and with spring come baseball and the circus, unless Mr. McAdoo puts an embargo on the circus.

France Not "Bled White."

From the Outlook.

The following figures, given by Mr. Stephane Lauzanne, editor-in-chief of the Paris "Matin," director of the official bureau of French information, show better than any words that France is far from being exhausted or "bled white."

In 1914, at the battle of the Marne, France had in the field an army of 1,500,000 men; today, after more than three years of war, France has in the field an army of 2,700,000 men. In September, 1914, the French war plants were manufacturing 12,000 shells per day; today France is manufacturing 300,000 shells per day. According to an agreement signed by the French high commissioner in Washington with the war department, it is the French war industries which manufacture all the light artillery for the American army.

In these war plants, which are the pride of the French nation and which no exhausted country could maintain, nearly 500,000 women are actually working, day and night. There also progress has been achieved: in 1914 only 25,000 women were working in these factories; on March 1, 1917, the number had increased to 375,582, and today it reaches nearly 500,000.

Since the beginning of the War the French parliament has voted credits for the war amounting to more than $20,000,000,000. Of these $20,000,000,000 only $2,000,000,000 have been borrowed from foreign countries. The whole difference was drawn on the savings of the French themselves, the whole balance was subscribed by loans or paid by taxes. Besides that, France has been able to loan $1,000,000,000 to her allies, and to give them 2,500 guns and 5,000 airplanes.

And today on the western front the French army is still holding two-thirds of the whole line. At the beginning of the present year 82 German divisions were facing the French army. As Mr. Lauzanne points out, to need 82 German divisions in order to hold an exhausted army is, indeed, out of proportion.

The Great German Illusion.

F. V. Keys, in the North American Review.

No one who has been intimately familiar with the inside of German institutions, with the ways of thinking in typical German circles, whether liberal or conservative so-called, with the whole political atmosphere breathed by radical or reactionary within the borders of the German empire, can hesitate to say that there never has been in Germany any such thing as public opinion.

In Germany, there were always just two bodies of opinion on any and every matter, there was the government, and there was the opposition. No one really got outside of these two categories.

The truth of this presentation of the case, on the German side, the events of the war have proved almost past belief. We have seen that the groups of men which in every country is assumed to be vowed to a strict observance of ascertained fact, the scientists, in Germany distinguished themselves by issuing to the world a document denying flagrant facts on the sole authority of their word, so that the famous "Es Ist Nicht Wahr" throws into the shade all the prerogatives claimed by the bulls issued over the signature of papal infallibility. Meanwhile, the intellectual leaders of all school, not excluding those that had coquetted with the political "left" and had sedulously followed the lead of aesthetic and literary innovators in Paris and London, closed up their ranks with the government, and left nothing unsaid that would fan the belief of the masses that this was a holy war in defense of German culture itself. And the opposition? It did precisely the same.

Why is it so impossible for the German mind to apprehend and understand that which we mean by "public opinion?" For the reason that the German nation has always been, psychologically, on a war footing. Her mentality has been, in a quite literal sense, the mentality of an army. And an army is the one place where there can be no public opinion.

Farmhand Finds It Pays.

From the New York Times.

"Sure I'm going back. It's the best job I ever had. Your chauffeurs and truck drivers and subway diggers and cement mixers think you're getting rich with war wages, but I'll bet I've got more money ahead in the last 10 months than any of you." The speaker was a young American, born of Italian parents in the old Mulberry Bend neighborhood. It was Saturday night and he was in a Spring street coffee house to meet his old chums of the "quarter" on his first visit to town since he went up state last April to take a job on a farm.

"I'm taking a two weeks' vacation with pay while winter work is slack. I've only been here a week, and I don't think I'll stay my time out. Everything seems so dirty here compared with the miles and miles of white snow up home. You see, I call it home after only 10 months. But it surely does seem like home. I'm on a big farm, where they have from four to 20 men, according to the season and their ability to get the men. We have a big, comfortable room with a concrete floor over the tool house. There are electric lights, a wide wood fireplace, a small sleeping room with a steel locker for each man, a shower bath with hot water, and plenty of good reading. We have a dining room in the farmhouse just off the kitchen and opposite the family dining room. And the eats are all anybody ought to want. I have taught the cook how to put up spaghetti with oil and garlic, only she uses butter, and another hand showed her how to cook sauerkraut with grated potatoes.

"Lonesome? Well hardly. We get to work early and some of the jobs keep us busy till after dark in winter, but we seldom have eight hours a day to put in. There are lots of good places to go and the boss' automobile is ready any time to take us five miles to town to the movies or to country dances. And the nice girls are not so hard to meet as they are in a city. The people for miles around soon find out whether a fellow is decent or not, and if he is there is no prejudice against a hired man.

"As for pay, it doesn't sound like much here in New York. I get $40 a month and board, mending and washing. There is really almost nothing to spend money for. Farmer clothes cost little and wear long, and amusements are either free or nearly so. There isn't a saloon or restaurant or coffee house within reach, and a fellow soon gets out of the habit of wanting to go some place every night. In the 10 months I have been there I have got $400 cash, and I have a little over $200 in the town savings bank. How many of you with your $100 to $150 a month can show a better record?

"No, the work isn't hard. The farm hand of today is a very different sort of man from the old timer. Very little of the farm work is done by hand any more. Tractors and horses do nearly all of it. I felt mighty smart last spring when the boss, after a week, let me mount a tractor and drag three plows in a gang. Then the tractor pulled the disk harrow and the drag and the seeder, and finally the harvester. I didn't know much about horses, but he picked out a steady team and let me ride a three-row cultivator for a start. Now I am a full hand at almost any job on the place, and I'm looking forward to a foremanship on that place or some other.

"But I'm looking further ahead than that. It only takes a few hundred dollars to start a fellow farming as a renter on a small place and I know of a dozen farm owners in our county who began as renters, besides there's big money in farming these days for a man who will work and keep the outfit together. I have a notion that maybe after another year or two father and I can double up on a farm and make it go."

The Luxuries of War.

From the Manchester Guardian.

The war is bringing about strange domestic changes. The other day a woman with a shawl over her head entered a piano dealer's shop in Yorkshire, saying she wanted a piano. The salesman hesitatingly suggested a sound instrument at £2, expecting thus to end the inquiry. "Not that," said the woman shortly, "a real one." Taken aback, the man more boldly indicated one at £60. This was thought better, but not "up to the mark," and another at £80 or £90 was also dismissed as inadequate. "I want one o' them with a big, broad top." A grand! Now beyond surprise, the salesman meekly pointed out the cheapest of that order at £130. "That's more like it," said the customer; and then, reassuringly, "Aw've got t' brass," produced at the same time a sufficient roll of notes from the recesses of her clothing.

A lady district visitor to whom the story was told followed the grand shortly after to its cramped new quarters, where such splendor had never been seen before. It was safely installed, filling the humble room with its bulk and the family with pride. "But they can't make any use of such a thing," declared the perplexed salesman, when the visitor reported to him. "Yes, they can," insisted the lady. "They were having their dinner on it."

When Beards Were Taxed.

From London Tit-Bits.

In the reign of Elizabeth every beard of a fortnight's growth was subject to a tax. Peter the Great, in 1705, imposed a tax upon the beards of the Russian nobles of 100 rubles, while the common people's beard tax amounted to 1 kopec. This tax caused much dissatisfaction, but in spite of this the impost was extended to St. Petersburg in 1714. The tax on beards was confirmed by Catherine I in 1725, by Peter II in 1728, by Empress Anne in 1731, and in 1743 by the Empress Elizabeth. It was repealed by Catherine II in 1762. In France a beard tax was imposed upon the clergy. The celebrated Duprat, lord high chancellor of France, was the adviser of the measure, and a bull was published by the pope enjoining the clergy to shave their chins. Then a tax was levied by the king upon all who wished to be exempted from the harsh decree. The bishop and others who could afford the means paid the tax, but the poorer clergy were obliged to yield at the point of the razor.

Wellington's Dairymaid Alive.

From the London Times.

Miss Charlotte Applin, of Strathfield-saye house, Strathfield saye, Hants, has just celebrated her 102d birthday anniversary. She served as dairymaid to the Duke of Wellington, and receives a pension from the family.

ORDINANCE NO 33

An Ordinance providing for the laying, relaying, repairing and rebuilding of temporary and permanent sidewalks and providing for the manner of making and collecting special assessments therefor.

Be it ordained by the Council of the Incorporated Town of Klemme, Iowa:

Section 1 That the Council may, by a resolution adopted by a two-thirds vote of the members, direct or order the construction, building, laying, rebuilding, relaying or repairing of any temporary or permanent sidewalks on any of the streets, alleys avenues or public grounds of the Town and prescribe the materials of which the same shall be built, the width of the same and regulate the grade of the same, and provide for the assessment of the cost thereof on the property in front of which the same may be laid, which in all cases but repairs shall be in proportion to the special benefits conferred upon the property thereby and not in excess thereof.

Such resolution, where it orders the construction or rebuilding of a permanent sidewalk and no petition is on file signed by the owners of a majority of the linear front feet of the property fronting on the improvement provided for therein, shall require for its passage the vote of three fourths of all the members of the Town Council.

Temporary sidewalks shall be laid on the natural surface of the ground as near as practicable at a cost not exceeding Forty (40) cents per linear foot Permanent sidewalks shall be constructed in accordance with the grade established by the Council. In cases of temporary sidewalks and permanent sidewalks, other than cement, the resolution shall prescribe the kind and character of the material of which and the manner in which the same shall be constructed and in all cases, said resolution shall name the time within which and the street and place along which the same shall be constructed.

Section 2 Permanent cement side walk ordered by the Council shall be made and constructed according to the following specifications, to-wit:— After grade stakes have been set, the earth shall be excavated Six (6) inches below the surface of the proposed finished walk and if there is any rubbish, manure or other soft material below this point, it shall be removed and the place from which it has been taken filled in with good solid earth which shall be thoroughly tamped After the excavating has been done, there shall be placed thereon a bed of gravel, sand or cinders two inches in thickness which shall also be thoroughly tamped and dampened

Upon the foundation so prepared shall be placed a layer of concrete which shall be, when tamped, Four (4) inches in thickness. This concrete shall be made of one part good Portland Cement of any brand which complies with the Standard Specifications of the American Society for testing material to four parts of clean, sharp sand and gravel. In preparing this concrete the measurement shall be by volume and the materials thoroughly mixed dry before water is applied. In mixing by hand, the ingredients shall be turned at least three times dry and two times wet Sufficient water shall be added so that it will appear freely at the top when tamping. The concrete shall be put in place in not to exceed thirty minutes from the time water has been applied. Any concrete not used in thirty minutes after wetting shall be rejected and regarded as common sand This concrete shall be thoroughly tamped and struck off to an even surface at the grade of the finished walk and finished with a trowel or wooden float to a surface roughened sufficiently as not to be slippery in the winter time. As soon as finished, the walk shall be cut into squares or blocks not exceeding five feet the longest way and the joints shall be neatly finished with a groover and the edges finished with an edger.

Where the full block of walk is continuously connected up with cement crossings there shall be provision made for expansion by placing expansion joints at least every fifty to seventy feet, such joints to be at least two inches in width and filled with sand.

Section 3. Whenever any resolution is offered or introduced for the building of a sidewalk, either temporary or permanent, as provded in Sections One and Two hereof, the Council shall determine whether said improvement is necessary or not by a majority vote of the members of said council, and, if it is determined to be necessary, then a time shall be fixed by the Council for a hearing thereon at either a regular, special or adjourned meeting and the Town Marshall shall serve a notice signed by the Town Clerk personally upon each known resident property owner, owning property along or abutting on the place in the street, alley, avenue or public grounds where such improvement is or will be ordered made, not less than ten days prior to such hearing, stating that such resolution is pending before the Council and is on file with the Town Clerk, describing the improvement briefly and stating the time when and the place where the parties interested may appear and be heard upon the said resolution and that the assessment of benefits thereunder will be made at the regular meeting of the Council in December thereafter. If any of the owners of such property be non-residents of the Town of Klemme, or be unknown to the Town Clerk, then such notice shall be published once in a newspaper of general circulation within said Town, such publication to be not less than ten days prior to such hearing and which notice shall be addressed to said owners, if known otherwise to the Unknown Owners of said lots and abutting property and shall be constructive notice to all non-resident and unknown owners interested If at or after the time set for such hearing said sidewalk is ordered to be built by such vote of the Council as is required by law and as the said resolution provided, and the owner or owners of such property along the street, alley, avenue or public grounds where such construction is ordered, shall fail to make the same within the time fixed in said resolution, the same shall then be made by the Street Commissioner, or such other person as the Council may direct, at the expense of the abutting property as in such resolution provided.

Section 4. Whenever such resolution for the building, laying, rebuilding, laying or relaying of either a temporary or permanent sidewalk has been passed by the Council and the same has been constructed and accepted, the assessment and apportionment of the benefits to the various owners and property affected thereby shall be made at the regular meeting of the Council on the Second Monday in December thereafter and the property owners interested shall be required to appear at said meeting without any further notice being served on them, to contest the said assessment and apportionment. Such assessment and apportionment shall be made whenever it can be done consistently with the benefits conferred, according to the front foot rule of asssessment each property being assessed in proportion to the number of front feet abutting on the improvement

Section 5. Whenever any temporary or permanent sidewalk previously built or constructed on any of the streets, alleys, avenues or public grounds of the Town of Klemme shall become in need of repairs and a new sidewalk may not be necessary, the Street Commissioner, or other person directed by the Council, may make such repairs without notice of any kind to the owner of the abutting property and at the expense of such property.

Section 6. The Street Commissioner or such other person so making or constructing such improvements or repairs shall return to the Council an itemized statement of the cost thereof, showing in detail the cost in front of each abutting property or parcel of land along which such construction or improvement shall have been laid together with the name of the owner thereof, if he can ascertain the same.

Section 7. Upon the return of such itemized statement of the cost of such improvement or repairs, the Council shall at the regular meeting on the Second Monday of December of each year, determine whether said statement, so far as repairs is concerned, is correct, and if approved by the Council, the statement as to cost of repairs shall be assessed and levied against the property and shall be certified by the Town Clerk to the County Auditor and said assessment shall be collected by the County Treasurer as other taxes.

At said meeing in December of each year, the Council shall assess and apportion said amount so certified to them for temporary or permanent sdewalks so constructed and relaid among and against the various lots and parcels of land affected thereby according to the benefits accruing to such lots or parcels of land and not in excess thereof and after each apportionment and assessment has been made, each property owner affected having the right to be heard thereon if desired, the same shall then be certified to the County Auditor by the Town Clerk and said assessment shall be collected by the County Treasurer in the same manner as other taxes.

Section 8. If, for any reason, the Town Council shall desire to make and apportion assessments of benefits for any sidewalk so constructed, before the regular meeting of the Council on the Second Monday in December following, they may do so by giving the party entitled thereto, the same kind of a notice at the time and place when and where the said assessment and apportionment shall be made as is provided by Section Three hereof which said notice shall be served in the manner therein provided.

Section 9. All Ordinances and parts of ordinances in conflict herewith be and the same are hereby repealed.

Section 10. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and publication in the Klemme Times in the manner provided by law.

Passed, adopted and approved this 8th day of April A. D. 1918.

Lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11, Block 10,

Lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11, Block 11,

Lots 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, Block 12,

All in the Original Town of Klemme, also

Lots 3, 4, 5, and 6, Block 7,

Lots 3, 4, 5 and 6, Block 8,

All in Klemme's First Addition to Town of Klemme.

Section 3. Any person who shall hereafter erect or cause to be erected or established by removal or otherwise, upon any lot or part of a lot within the limits and boundaries mentioned and described in this ordinance contrary to Section One (1) hereof, any building or addition to any building in length, breadth, heighth or otherwise, except the outer walls of the same be composed of stone, brick, mortar or other non-combustible material and also having the roof thereof covered with such material, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to a fine of not exceeding One Hundred Dollars and costs of prosecution and may be imprisoned until such fine and costs are paid, not exceeding Thirty days.

Section 4. In addition to the remedies provided in this ordinance for the enforcement of the provisions thereof, it is made the duty of the Mayor, whenever any building is found to be in course of erection or establishment by removal or otherwise, upon any lot or part of lot within the limits defined in this ordinance, contrary to the provisions thereof, to notify the owner or persons engaged in the building or establishing, by removal or otherwise, of any such building or addition to such building, to desist from the prosecution of such work and abate the same and if the same is not abated and removed within such reasonable time as shall be fixed by the Mayor, it shall be lawful for the Mayor to enter upon the premises and remove or abate such building or addition and the owner of same shall pay all costs and expenses of such abatement and removal and the material of which the same is composed and all building material found upon the premises to be used for the purpose of such construction or erection, may be held as security for such cost, provided the material so held shall not exceed in value twice the amount of such costs and expenses as nearly as such value may be estimated.

Section 5. That in the case of fire and to prevent the spread of the same the Mayor or Chief of the Fire Department may cause to be torn down and destroyed any building, when in their opinion the same should be done for the protection of other property.

Section 6. All Ordinances and parts of ordinances in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Section 7. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and publication in the Klemme Times in the manner provided by law.

Passed, adopted and approved this 8th day of April A. D. 1918.

ORDINANCE NO. 35

An Ordinance relating to Motor Vehicles, regulating their use and speed and fixing a penalty for a violation thereof.

Be it ordained by the Council of the Incorporated Town of Klemme, Iowa:

Section 1. No person shall operate a motor vehicle upon any of the streets, alleys or public grounds of the Town of Klemme, without having attached to the same and conspicuously displayed in the place and manner provided by law, the number plates or tags of the kind, color and size provided by law, nor without having the same provided with adequate brakes in good order and sufficient to at all times control said vehicle when in use.

Section 2. No person shall operate any motor vehicle upon any of the streets, alleys or public grounds of the Town of Klemme at any time between one half hour after sunset until one-half hour before sunrise of the next day without having two lighted lamps upon the front of each automobile showing a white light visible for at least five hundred feet nor without one such light upon the front of such motor cycle or motor bicycle nor without having attached to the rear of such vehicle a light lamp showing a red light and which rear light shall make the rear number plate on such vehicle visible for at least fifty feet.

Section 3. No person shall operate any motor vehicle upon any of the streets, alleys or public grounds of said town without having attached thereto an adequate bell, horn or other device for signalling.

Section 4. No person shall operate a motor vehicle upon any of the streets, alleys or public grounds of said town at a greater rate of speed than one mile in four (4) minutes.

Section 5. Upon approaching a pedestrian who is upon the travelled part of any street, alley or public grounds, but not upon the sidewalk, and upon approaching an intersecting street or alley, where the operator's view of such intersecting street or alley is obstructed for a distance of two hundred feet or less, every person operating a motor vehicle shall slow down and give a timely signal with his signalling device.

Section 6. No person shall operate a motor vehicle in said town while he is in an intoxicated condition, upon any of the streets, alleys or public grounds thereof, nor shall any person under the age of fifteen years operate any such motor vehicle thereon at any time unless accompanied by the owner of such vehicle

Section 7. No person shall operate or use in any manner upon said streets, alleys or public grounds, any motor vehicle, without keeping in constant use the muffler or other device provided for the silencing or deadening the noise caused by the exhaust on said vehicle.

Section 8. No person in charge of any motor vehicle shall leave the same unattended in any street, alley or public grounds in said town, while any part of the machinery thereof is in motion.

Section 9. No person operating a motor vehicle shall overtake and pass another vehicle at any street intersection in the business district of the said town.

Section 10. No person operating a motor vehicle, shall so operate it as to permit the motor to visibly emit an unduly great amount of smoke, steam or other product of combustion from the exhaust pipe or openings.

Section 11. At all theatres or other public places or gatherings or under any unusual circumstances in the said town, the operator of all motor vehicles shall cause the same to stand or move as may be directed by the Marshall or other public officer of said Town.

Section 12. The operator of a motor vehicle in turning to the right from one street into another shall turn the corner as near the right hand side as possible and in turning to the left from one street or alley into another shall pass to the right of and beyond the center before turning.

Section 13. The operator of a motor vehicle, in crossing from one side of the street or highway to the other side thereof shall turn to the left, so as to head in the direction in which vehicles are moving.

Section 14. The operator of a motor vehicle shall turn to the right when meeting another vehicle and shall at all times travel on the right side of the street and as near the curb as the conditions of the street or alley will permit.

Section 15. The operator of a motor vehicle, when overtaking and passing another vehicle, shall pass to

Klemme - Iowa

Any maker may claim for his product all the qualities there are. That is his privilege. He may even think his claims are justified

You read the advertisements, so you know that makers, as a rule, are not over modest in that regard.

If you believe them all, they all make super-cars.

In your experience, that theory doesn't hold.

Maxwell is different.

We never claim anything we cannot prove.

As a matter of fact we never have claimed anything for this Maxwell that has not already been proved in public test and under official observation.

Maxwell claims are not therefore claims in the ordinary sense—they are statements of fact—proven facts.

They are, in every case, matters of official record attested under oath.

For example: The famous 22,000-mile Non-Stop run was made with the Maxwell every minute under observation of the A. A. A. officials.

That still remains a world's record—the world's record of reliability.

That particular test proved about all that anyone could ask or desire of a motor car.

Among other things it still stands the world's long distance speed record.

Just consider—44 days and nights without a stop, at an average speed of 25 miles per hour!

And that, not by a $8,000 car, but by a stock model Maxwell listing at $825.

You will recall perhaps that a famous high powered, high priced six in a trans-continental trip made 28 miles average over a period of five days and eleven hours.

Now compare those two feats—one of less than six days, the other of 44 days. You know automobiles—which was the greater feat?

Is there any comparison on grounds either of speed or performance?

Proves you don't need to pay more than $825 to obtain all the qualities you can desire in a motor car—if you select a Maxwell.

For that Maxwell Non-Stop run was made, not on a track but over rough country roads and through city traffic—average of all kinds of going.

And—listen to this.

So certain were we of the condition of the Maxwell at the end of that great feat, we announced that at the stroke of eleven on a certain night this car would stop in front of the City Hall, Los Angeles, for the mayor to break the seal.

Five seconds after he had pulled the switch plug and stopped the motor after the 44 days and nights continuous running, she was started again and off on a thousand mile jaunt to visit various Maxwell dealers.

How is that for precision—certainty of action? That incident brought a storm of applause from the assembled thousands.

Hill-climbing?—this Maxwell holds practically every record worth mentioning—especially in the West where the real hills are.

The Mount Wilson record—nine and one-half miles, 6,000 feet elevation!—was taken by a stock Maxwell.

Two months ago a 12-cylinder car beat that record by two minutes.

Then—three days later—a stock Maxwell went out and beat that 12-cylinder record by thirty seconds! Pretty close going for such a distance and such a climb—wasn't it?

So Maxwell still holds the Mount Wilson honors.

Ready to defend it against all comers too, at any time—a stock Maxwell against any stock or special chassis.

Economy—also a matter of official record.

Others may claim—Maxwell proves.

Thousands of Maxwell owners throughout the United States on the same day averaged 29.4 miles per gallon of gasoline.

Not dealers or factory experts, mind you, but owners—thousands of them—driving their own Maxwells.

Nor were they new Maxwells—the contest was made by 1915, 16, and 17 models, many of which had seen tens of thousands miles of service—three years' use.

Nor could they choose their own road or weather conditions—all kinds were encountered in the various sections of the country.

Good roads and bad—level country and mountainous regions—heat and cold—sunshine and rain—asphalt and mud.

And the average was 29.4 miles per gallon!

There's economy for you. And under actual average driving conditions—not laboratory test.

But that isn't all.

The greatest achievement of this Maxwell was in its showing of speed and reliability and economy all in the same run.

In that 44 days-and-nights Non-Stop run, though no thought was given to either speed or economy, it still remains a fact of official record that the Maxwell averaged 22 miles per gallon and 25 miles per hour.

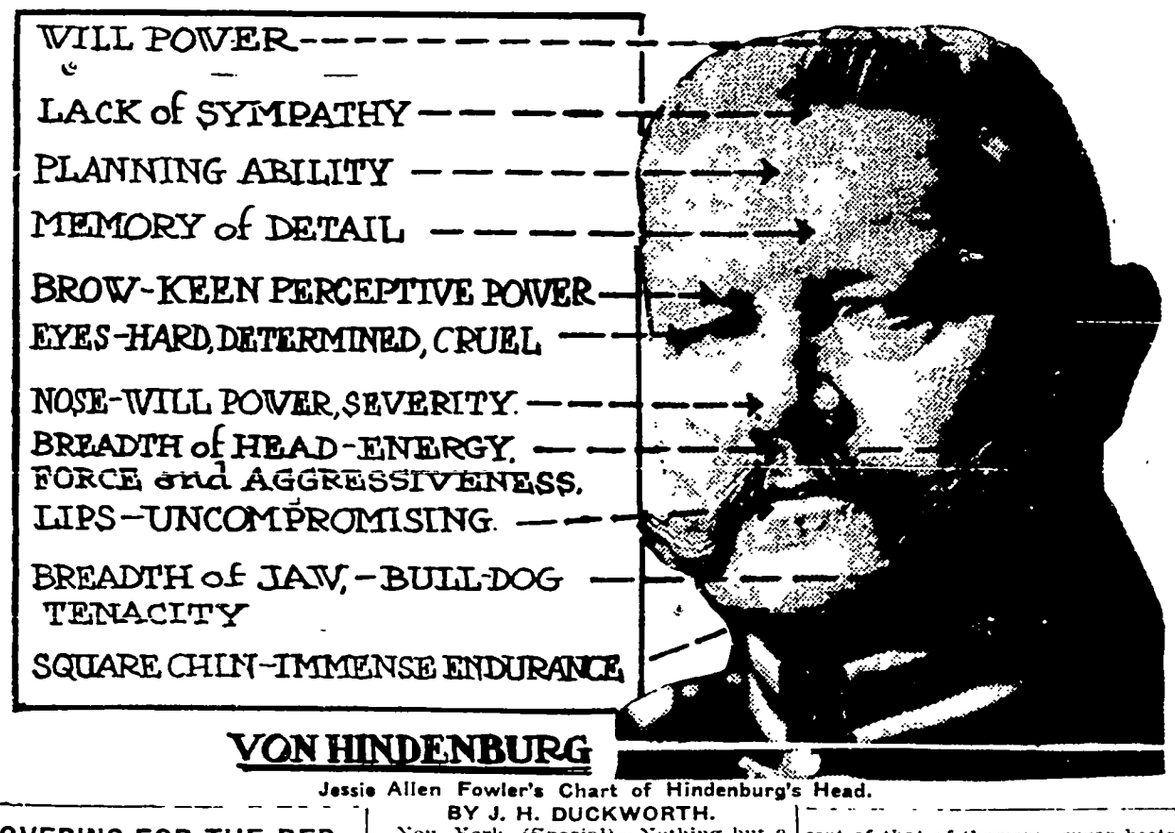
Now you know that speed costs—and that economy tests are usually made at slow-speed—closed-throttle, thin-mixture conditions.

You know too that you can obtain economy of fuel by building and adjusting for that one condition.

Speed you can get by building for speed. Any engineer can do that.

But to obtain that combination of speed and economy with the wonderful reliability shown in that 44-days Non-Stop run—that car must be a Maxwell.

Expert Says Only Bullets Can Get Through von Hindenburg's Head



Jessie Allen Fowler's Chart of Hindenburg's Head.

BY J. H. DUCKWORTH.

New York, (Special)—Nothing but a crushing defeat in the field will ever convince Field Marshal von Hindenburg of the weakness of the German cause.

The flat ears, full neck, heavy bulldog jaw of Hindenburg are characteristic of the pugilist type.

A great fighter perhaps, but the arguments for peace murmured by the suffering German people will never penetrate his cranium.

Only a bullet could get through the iron dome of the victor of the Mazurian marshes.

Such are the conclusions reached by Miss Jessie Allen Fowler, the famous phrenologist, after a 12-months' study of all the available portraits of Hindenburg.

I saw Miss Fowler today in her laboratory, surrounded by skulls, skeletons and alcohol preserved brains in bottles.

Hindenburg has the base of the head of a Nero cruel—combined with the ambition of an Alexander the Great, said Miss Fowler.

Hindenburg has a remarkable head. It is broad and massive in the anterior lobe, but lacks fullness, or socialibility, in the posterior region. It is broad at the base, above the ears, which gives him energy.

The salient characteristics of the face are power domination and bulldog tenacity. The socalled 'lines of command' in the deep wrinkles across the top of the nose are especially marked.

The power of Hindenburg to impose his will on the German people is indicated in the general modeling of the middle portion of his face—namely, in his powerful nose, square chin, closely pressed lips, and the hard, cruel and determined look of the eyes.

"Hindenburg is a very pronounced type of the domineering kind. His determination is abnormal. He is, however, less than normal in matters of sympathy and tenderness.

In short, his head indicates a man who works to win and who is willing to sacrifice everything to accomplish his end. There is little of sentiment or emotion in his makeup.

His physiognomical signs indicate that his nose has been moulded by his will power. His eyes express his large combativeness. His square chin is indicative of immense endurance—hence he has little sympathy for those who are weak and incapable.

"To sum up, Hindenburg has a typical fighter's face. It is cruel and hard—the face of a man who can send millions to their death without damaging his conscience. But it contains none of the finer qualities. It lacks sympathy and understanding of the aims and aspirations of the common people."

Which throws light on his recent statement that he would reach Paris this year—at a cost of 1,000,000 lives.

COVERING FOR THE BED.

The Pennsylvania state board of health has issued some advice to the people of that state on the subject of blankets. Dr. Dixon does not approve of the army blankets. He finds that three softer woven blankets are warmer than five army blankets. Furthermore, he believes the army blanket is not so well adapted to present army requirements. The original army blanket was made when soldiers fought in the open and marched and countermarched almost daily. It had to be stiff and heavy to stand the wear of frequent rolling and unrolling, strapping on the back, wagon transportation, wetting and freezing.

The soldiers in the present war would be more comfortable with a softer more pliable, less durable blanket. This opinion is of interest because many people still think an army blanket the last word in blankets.

The Pennsylvania specifications call for double blankets not less than 80 inches and weighing 4½ pounds a pair. The warp is to be of long staple cotton No. 14 yarn, 43 threads to the inch. The filling is to be of not less than 80 per cent staple wool and not more than 20 per cent cotton. The color is to be a medium gray. Such a blanket should fit snugly around the body and not permit the warm air to escape through the blanket or beside it.

The warmth of the covering will be materially increased without increase in the weight of the covering if a pliable paper blanket is inserted between two layers of cover. Paper stops the passage of air through the covering much better than blankets do. If it is pliable it does not prevent the covering from fitting the body closely.

Sheets add but little to the comfort of the covering. Being closely woven, they do not have many air spaces and, in consequence, they do not hold the heat in. They are advisable from the standpoint of cleanliness.

The Pullman company requires that blankets and more absorbent covering shall be protected by sheets next to the body and on top as well. This requirement should appeal to the clientele of hotels.

I have never seen any great objection to feather beds. They are warmer than mattresses because the bed moulds itself to the body and prevents cold air from getting under the cover. The old fashioned custom followed by some people of sleeping in feather beds has its advantages. It is the snuggest, warmest of all methods of covering. The objection to sleeping on a feather bed is that the body tends to take positions which become uncomfortable after several hours. Of course the feather bed is not adapted to any place other than private homes.

The objection to quilts is that they are heavy and stiff. They do not fit closely around the body and if enough of them for warmth are used the weight is objectionable.

Hillquit Sees a New Light.

From the Chicago News.

Morris Hillquit the New York socialist leader who, as candidate for mayor last fall, made opposition to the war and the policies of the national government his principal issue, has publicly offered his services to the war department as a propagandist of democratic and American doctrines. He pledges himself to do all he can to encourage strikes and unrest among the working people of Germany and Austria. "It is now clearer than ever," he told a socialist audience, "that Prussian and Austrian junkerdom is the foe of liberty and peace," and that "autocracy and militarism in Germany and Austria must be put down." His dramatic offer of his services to the government was applauded by his socialist auditors."

Last fall Hillquit ostentatiously refused to invest a dollar in Liberty bonds. He demanded immediate peace negotiations with autocracy and militarism. Last summer at St. Louis Hillquit and other socialists framed and signed a platform that "branded" the declaration of war on Germany by the United States "as a crime against the people and against the nations of the world," and pledged the socialist party to "continuous, active and public opposition to the war."

These antiwar socialists apparently have seen at last a new light. Trotzky's experience may have opened their eyes. Do they now realize the injustice and the folly of which they have been guilty in their violent denunciations of the government and the supporters of the war? If so, they should have the manliness to apologize to the people, withdraw their false and absurd charges and admit that the war was forced on America by the manifold crimes and wanton violations of law and right committed by the German autocracy.

The Flier's First Victim.

Lieut. E. M. Roberts, English R. F. C., in the New York Times.

I was up about 20,000 feet over the Somme front, and I want to tell you it was cold. I thought I'd freeze, and I said to myself: "I'll just do a dive and a tail spin through that big cloud below me. Maybe by the time I get out of it the excitement will have warmed me up a bit." I shot down, spun around and lurched out of the cloud almost against a big German craft. We weren't more than 40 feet apart, so close that neither of us could turn to attack the other without the assurance that we'd ram each other and both come down. That wasn't the idea of either of us.

Talk about being warm! I was hot all over with the surprise and excitement of it, but neither lost his head. As long as we kept on the same level and as close to each other as we were then, we were safe for our machine guns were mounted fast to the planes, and you had to turn the whole machine to aim one of them. You can bet we did some pretty fine jockeying to keep close together, and for what seemed like hours we sailed along side by side seemingly the only things in the sky. We were so close I could see the wrinkles about the German's mouth, and presently they drew up as he broke into a smile and waved his hand at me. I waved back thinking to myself: "All right old chap if you don't want to fight, you've got nothing on me." You see, it was my first experience alone in a fighting plane and the ground certainly looked miles away, with that big chap grinning over at me.

But presently just as I was wondering if we were going to sail on forever, he dived, came up beneath me, and let me have it. His bullets went through my planes, but none of them got a vital spot, and I wasn't touched. I went over on my back, looped behind him, and let him have it with my Lewis gun. I was so close I could see that stream of bullets hit him at the waistline and practically cut his legs off. He pitched over in his seat, the machine bucked, and then shot down, and I circled about above him, watching him crash down toward the earth. I was glad it was he rather than myself; but, gee, home did look good to me when I got back behind our lines.

Hats Off.

By Pauline W. Hamlin, of the Vigilantes.

A foreigner who witnessed a parade of soldiers on Fifth avenue was shocked that our men stood with their heads covered when the flag went by. A woman standing near him tried to explain that to the present generation war is a new thing and our men do not realize it is the proper thing to do.

The foreign answered, "But how can they help but uncover their heads? They are not saluting a bunch of red, white and blue bunting. They are saluting their own wonderful country! They are saluting the blood of heroes! They are saluting liberty, justice, truth and right!"

When the next flag came by, off came all hats whose owners were within hearing of the foreigner's voice.

Why not, always?"

Prussian Poland.

Statistics issued by the Polish national department, Chicago, show that without Prussian Poland, Germany would not have been able to pursue the war one year. Prussian Poland in 1916 raised 14,177,000 tons of potatoes or 26 per cent of that of Germany, cereals, 4,511,000 tons, or 21 per cent of that of Germany, sugar beets, 2,216,000 tons, or 20 per cent of that of Germany, coal, 43,629,000 tons, or 23 per cent of that of Germany, zinc, 205,000 tons, or 67 per cent of that of Germany, lead, 49,000 tons, or 49 per cent of that of Germany. Of the above production, however, the following quantities were consumed in Germany outside of Prussian Poland: Potatoes, 7,268,000 tons, or 51 per cent of the crop, corn 1,713,000 tons, or 38 per cent of the crop and beat, 812,000 tons, or 37 per cent of the crop. Freedom of Prussian Poland from Germany is being urged by the Polish national department.

A Wild Man of the Air.

From Letters of Stuart Walcott, Franco-American air service in the National Geographic Magazine.

Sept. 1, 1917.—The wild man in the Nieuport was out again this morning giving some one a joy ride. There is a long straight stretch of road in front of our piste and he came down that several times a nasty puffy wind blowing, which bothered him not at all flying only two or three feet off the ground.

In front of the piste is a telephone wire crossing the road. He came along the road 100 miles an hour until almost on top of the wire, and jumped up just in time to clear it by a few feet—really beautiful work. He goes all over the surrounding country flying low hopping over trees and houses—sometimes turning up sideways to slip between two trees a bit too close together to fly through—sometimes dragging a wing through the space between a couple of hangars, or doing vertical virages just in front of them.

It doesn't seem possible that any man can be so consistently accurate that he never misses. For this chap, Lumiere, has never had a smash.

"The Law of War."

From the New York World.

Abraham Lincoln's opinion of the war power of the president of the United States as commanderinchief of the army and navy is clearly defined in the letter of August 26, 1863, to James C. Conkling, which was a message to the Springfield convention.

> You dislike the Emancipation proclamation, and perhaps would have it retracted. You say it is unconstitutional. I think differently. I think the constitution invests its commanderinchief with the law of war in time of war.

And Lincoln was right. Nor is it within the province or power of congress, by statute or otherwise, to take from the president or transfer from the president this "law of war in time of war."

The Woman Senatorial Candidate.

Ralph Block, in the New York Tribune.

Persons who have never seen a feminist and have illusions about them would be shocked by Anne Martin. Along in the credulous '90s "a new woman," as the feminists were named in that scarce remembered day, was a person who wore bloomers and a derby hat. A lot of movements have passed under the bridge since then, and the public has developed a great deal in common sense, but there's no denying that some of that old flavor still lingers about feminism.

And so far as its modern repute is concerned there is much to justify the old mythology. Anne Martin's record is as good as any, and one side of it at least is full flavored of action. She was born near the famous Comstock Lode picture of a mining camp, Shooting-From-the-Hip Jones, Alkali Smith, barrooms with silver dollars stuck all over the floor, gambling hells, etc., etc. (see any western movie).

She now lives in Reno, although from no ulterior motive. She climbs mountains for a pastime. She was once the state tennis champion of Nevada. She fought her way inch by inch along with the Pankhurst family in the now famous siege of London. She picketed the White House and was thrown into jail for it, only to be released by presidential pardon.

All this would justify a picture of the proposed new senator from Nevada as a tall, gaunt, hard, steely-eyed, pioneering woman, with a talking delivery comparable to a steel trap making a ration of 10-penny nails.

The only thing wrong with this description is that it isn't true. She is of medium size, a gentlewoman rather than a propagandist, with thoughtful blue eyes, dark brown hair, a low, clear voice that deliberates as it talks, and a mind that out of a variety of experience has picked a path that is practical in its course, but idealistic in its aim.

Aid to Baby Killers.

From London Tit-Bits.

If a bomb be dropped from an airplane 10,000 feet up, and traveling at a speed of 100 miles an hour, it reaches the ground a considerable distance ahead of the point at which it was released and the difficulty of judging how to hit a particular building is enormous. A machine invented to assist the raiders has been found on a captured Gotha. The main feature is a telescope hung on gimbals and pointing through the floor of the bomber's compartment. In connection with this is a form of spirit level which brings a bubble into the center of a glass disc when the telescope is vertical, so that the bomber knows when it is in the position that can be trusted. Below the telescope is a prism, so that the image seen is not an object directly underneath, but at any desired distance ahead, according to the angle at which it is set. For instance, if the airplane is 10,000 feet up and the speed is such that the bomb must be released half a mile from the object, the prism has to be set at an angle of 15 degrees. Even then the calculation is liable to error, because the density of different layers of air may vary.

WAR PRAYERS.

From the Living Church.

For the Allied Nations.

Almighty God, grant that we and they who fight at our side may so keep our hands from all dishonor that we may dare to ask of Thee the victory; through Jesus our Lord. Amen.

For Our Warriors.

"O God, our refuge and strength; bless our soldiers, sailors and aviators; keep them safe from all evil; grant them skill and courage in battle; heal their wounds; assuage their pain, and whenever, soon or late, in days of war, in days of peace, Thou openest to them the gates of larger life, receive them again into Thy joyful service, to win with Thee and Thy servants everywhere the eternal victory of all good over all wickedness through our only Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen."

For Loyalty.

"O God our Ruler and King, put to silence the voices of foolish men in this nation, kindle the spirit of sacrifice loyalty and unity, that we may go forth in Thy might to win freedom for the oppressed; through Thy son, who hath made us free, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

For the Government.

"O Lord, open the eyes of those who govern this nation that they may see Thy purpose, and grant them obedience speedily to fulfill it, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen."

For Our Enemies.

"O Father of every nation, give to our enemies the freedom which Thou hast given us, deliver them from rulers who exercise lordship, forgetting that they are servants of all, and grant them to see with joy the coming of government of the people by the people, for the people, in the whole earth, whereIn they and we shall be brethren together under one Master, Jesus Christ. Amen."

For Those at Home.

"O [illegible] Father who didst sustain Thy most dear Son upon the cross, give courage and faith to those who in the time of war abide at home, make their love a beacon to those who struggle in the might of battle, whereby both together may receive from Thee the praise of deeds well done through our Redeemer, Jesus Christ. Amen."

For Peace.

"Blessed Lord whose pity never faileth, forgive the sins of the nations, and grant to them a righteous and enduring peace, out of which shall flow happiness to the people for evermore, for the love of Thine only Son, our Savior, Jesus Christ. Amen."

American Camphor Coming.

Camphor is now grown in Florida and Texas, the trees forming attractive hedges. Mr. Samuel C. Hood, formerly of the United States bureau of plant industry, gave lately in the Journal of Industrial and Engineering Chemistry of the American Chemical society the results of many tests made on Florida camphor trees. He reached the conclusion that the best yield is obtained from trimming the hedges in the spring and fall during the dormant season of the trees. If the outer leaves and twigs are allowed to remain on the tree through another growing season, the yield is decreased. The faster the trees grow the more gum they secrete so that better results are obtained from trees growing on good ground than on poor land. Forcing the trees with fertilizer also helps to produce gum. Even very slight shade decreases the yield. His results show a little more than 1½ per cent of pure camphor from the leaves and twigs. For many years this product has been contracted by the Japanese and it is gratifying to note the progress which is being made in this country.

The Little Tot.

J. Adam Bede in the New Republic.

Here's to the little woman! She's only a little tot. Three or four summers have touched her lips with wisdom and left the sunshine in her clustering hair. Her spirits are as blithe and buoyant as a bird, her thoughts as light and airy as the sky blown thistle down. She clings to your hand in the morning and is eager for your home coming when the shadows fall, being ofttimes found peering through the handle of the gate where her greeting is ingenuous and sincere. She is the new woman with the world before her, and with her toys and her playhouse she is waiting for the future—and you press her to your bosom while she waits. Yet a few years and other haunts shall know her and other hearts be hers, and then, too, other cares may come. But though the home nest has been long deserted and many years have flown she is still—to you—the little burst of sunshine and an unbroken package of delight while her baby words with beveled edges catch the ear, and though you are a century old your heart is 100 years young, and then you understand Him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto Me and forbid them not," for the best thing on earth is the little tot.

Makes Businesslike Housewives.

There is a business instinct latent in most women and simply waiting for development. This present agitation in favor of going to market in person is encouraging this instinct, and many women are suddenly finding out that there is a distinct pleasure in efficient housekeeping. The woman who goes to market begins efficiency the right way, at the purchasing end. By looking about, comparing values and careful choosing, she knows she is getting the most for her money; there will be no half guilty feeling when she adds up her housekeeping account. By taking home her purchases, she knows she is helping in economical distribution which will keep down prices. By paying cash, she is paying for her food before it is eaten, not after—another comforting thought.

Going to market in person brings home to her the fact that she is part of this big national food purveying system which begins at the farm, the ranch, the orchards, the fisheries, involves railroads, refrigerator cars, packing houses and canneries, and ends with the dealer and consumer. The food industry is the most important in the world, experts tell us, bigger than the war itself, and it is comforting to know that the women are doing their best at it.

True to Local Talent.

From the Plainville, Ky., Gazette.

Then came the contest of solos. Miss Bessie Farrier, of Plainville, rendered in a most beautiful manner that classical solo, "Sing On." She displayed remarkable power and training, and she is possessed of a wonderful voice, which will some day make her famous. One of the judges, a specialist in music, ranked her first. The decision of a specialist in music counts, far, far more than the decision of a judge who knows nothing about music. She was followed by Miss Ruth Kackly, of Hill City, who sang a little sentimental love-song, "All that I Want in This Wide, Wide World is You, You." This song is old and by no means classical. Two of the judges, moved by this love song, ranked her first. Apparently they could not appreciate really good music. We deem their decision of little value, for they are very ignorant of music. Plainville is ready at any time to meet Hill City again in vocal music, providing we can have competent judges. As it was, many people of Hill City said Miss Farrier should have had all firsts.

He Knew Nero.

From the Chicago News.

At his best Elmer was not noted for brilliancy, consequently he was not likely to shine in his history examination. One stumbling block in the world's record concerned Nero. Elmer had heard of Nero, but he had absolutely no recollection of his achievements. But for once his intellect was equal to the task imposed upon it.

"The less said about Nero the better," he wrote.

The examiner apparently thought likewise and marked him perfect.

HEARING FROM MAN WHO DISTRUSTS NEWSPAPERS

From the Kansas City Star.

The anonymous author of "Professor's Progress" in the Atlantic Monthly introduces a character who believes that Doctor Cook discovered the north pole, that New York city hasn't anything like the population the census gives it and that Kitchener did not perish at sea, but is imprisoned in the Tower of London for having sold military secrets to Germany.

In the Atlantic story his name is Nicholas Runkle, but we think he must have several names, because he frequently writes letters to this newspaper over other names than that. But there is no question that he is the same man. That is plain from the character of the information he imparts. Before the war he wrote to tell us that John Wilkes Booth was alive and conducting a shoe store in Sioux Falls, S. D., but latterly he has confined himself to telling us things about the war. At times he is pained at our lack of interest, but not wholly surprised at it, because he knows that newspapers do not want the truth and are afraid to print it. Somebody "keeps it out"—probably Wall street. But for that matter he thinks most anybody can keep a piece of news out by simply calling at the office and explaining that he takes the paper and is a taxpayer.

But he was at a loss to understand why we did not print the fact about the American army being sent to Russia. He cannot see the value of keeping this news secret when the Russians need every bit of encouragement they can get. The army went by the way of the Philippines and Manchuria, stopping in Japan for luncheon. This in itself was significant as showing that Japan is in the secret and probably preparing to send an army of its own. Either that, or it will send one to San Francisco as soon as Russia has drained this country of troops. By the way, did we know that General Bra[illegible] was an American, a distinguished [illegible] federate general who refused to [illegible] constructed and fled to Russia after [illegible] surrender? He is sworn to secrecy [illegible] self, but if we care to look into the [illegible] we will have no difficulty in identi[illegible] him.

The fact that there is a German am[illegible] Mexico is, of course well known to [illegible] but he supposes we have refrained [illegible] printing the truth at the request of [illegible] president. Perhaps we are right, but [illegible] ing it in a broader light would it ta[illegible] courage the French to reveal that [illegible] crown prince himself is in command [illegible] that army, having been sent there [illegible] deem himself after his failure at Ver[illegible] He thinks he would and will himself [illegible] mediately write to the president and [illegible] this view upon him. He is sorry that [illegible] pro-British affiliations—probably not [illegible] connected with Lombard street—[illegible] caused us to suppress the fact that [illegible] George was captured by the Ger[illegible] when his majesty was visiting the Br[illegible] front and was reported to have fallen [illegible] his horse. He has been in Berlin [illegible] since, and the person whom the great [illegible] jority of Englishmen suppose to be Ge[illegible] is the ex-czar of Russia who looks [illegible] much like him and who was lent to E[illegible] land for the purpose by Kerensky. Ke[illegible] sky, himself, by the way, used to ru[illegible] restaurant in Akron, Ohio. His real n[illegible] is Billings—William S.

We do not know where the author [illegible] "Professor's Progress" encountered [illegible] correspondent, but we are glad they h[illegible] met. Mr. Runkle, if that is his name, [illegible] a world of information that other Ru[illegible] whom he has not been able to re[illegible] through the newspapers would be thankful to acquire. Perhaps they could [illegible] him something in return, and thus in t[illegible] the te-rewth would be spread.

MOSES' LAW AS TO LEPROSY.

"When a man shall have in the skin of his flesh a rising, a scab or bright spot and it be in the skin of his flesh like the plague of leprosy, then he shall be brought unto Aaron, the priest, or unto one of his sons, the priest; and the priest shall look on the plague in the skin of the flesh: and when the hair in the plague is turned white, and the plague in sight be deeper than the skin of the flesh, it is a plague of leprosy and the priest shall look on him and pronounce him unclean.

"All the days wherein the plague shall be in him he shall be defiled, he is unclean, he shall dwell alone; without the camp shall be his habitation. The garment also that the plague of leprosy is in, whether it be a woolen garment or a linen garment, it is a plague of leprosy and shall be showed unto the priest. And the priest shall look on the plague and shut it that hath the plague seven days."

These laws are a part of the laws of Moses. It will be noted that leprosy as a contagion is made reportable. The priests were made diagnosticians. The rules for diagnosing the disease, including many not quoted, were laid down. If the diagnosis was confirmed the person was held in quarantine.

The clothing was to be shown the priest. If the disease was of a violent type, "fretting leprosy," the clothes that the disease is of a virulent type they should be washed. "He shall therefore burn that garment * * * wherein the plague is; it shall be burnt in the fire. If it be found that the disease is of a mild type." "Then the priest shall command that they wash the thing wherein the plague is and shall [illegible] up seven days more."

There then follow instructions [illegible] further examination to determine [illegible] type of leprosy. If after the washi[illegible] and the seven-day holding it be decl[illegible] that the disease is of a virluent t[illegible] the garment is to be destroyed. If, h[illegible] ever, the disease is held to be of [illegible] mild type, "then it (the garment) sh[illegible] be washed the second time and shall [illegible] cleansed."

Sanitarians of the present day rec[illegible] nize the advantage of repeating t[illegible] washing after an interval. In bacte[illegible] ology it is customary to sterilize e[illegible] day for three days. That the diagn[illegible] ticians may be in doubt is recognized by Moses.

"If the bright spot be white in t[illegible] skin of the flesh, and in sight be n[illegible] deeper than the skin and the h[illegible] therein be not turned white then t[illegible] priest shall shut up him that hath t[illegible] plague seven days. And the priest sh[illegible] look on him the seventh day and l[illegible] hold if the plague in his sight be al[illegible] stay and the plague spread not in t[illegible] skin, then the priest shall shut him [illegible] seven days more. And the priest sh[illegible] look on him again the seventh day a[illegible] behold if the plague be somewhat da[illegible] and the plague spread not in the sk[illegible] the priest shall pronounce him cle[illegible] It is but a scab, and he shall wash h[illegible] clothes and be clean."

However, if the disease was di[illegible] nosed as leprosy, the usual course w[illegible] to be followed. Here is provision f[illegible] two weeks of observation in doubtf[illegible] cases, but the patient was held in qu[illegible] antine during the two weeks.

FEDERALISM—THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

The British empire is a spiritual federation. The greatest miscalculation in this war was due to the German supposition that only force bound peoples. The Germans were not alone in suspecting the solidarity of the British empire. What dispassionate person, thinking of Mohammedan East Indians and Egyptians, Boers, Sinn Feiners and French Canadians, could doubt the insecurity of British rule? One has only to hark back a little way to the widely accepted expectation of Canadian annexation to the United States. "Rich by nature, poor by choice," Goldwin Smith described Canada. Ask the boches today what they think of Canadian loyalty. The unjustifiable assault of Jamieson and Rhodes on the Boer republic still inspires indignation in the American breast, but General Smuts sits at the British cabinet table and the solidarity of South Africa belongs to a different world from that of Poland. None the less India, Egypt, Ireland are the weaknesses of the British empire. Where force is used the spiritual bond fails.

Canada, South Africa, Australia are federal states within the British federation, held to the mother country by language and free trade. One must not exaggerate the tinsel of the governors general, one must not underestimate the British navy, but the English language is the source of communion. This spiritual federation. It is not imposed on the French in Canada or the Boers in South Africa, it is diffused. Literature is not so well known in the colonies as in the mother land but is a rich vernacular. It spreads common ideas, and few British subjects get ideas in any other language. The Germans know the value of a common tongue but they only understand how to impose it by force.

It is easy for Americans to understand the attachment of British colonists to the institutions of which England is the mother tongue. It is up to us to find out how essential free trade also is to the solidarity of the British empire. It is true that tarif reform has made progress in Britain, it is true that the colonies make even British manufactures dutiable; but the core of the empire is still true to the principle of free trade. There is no enduring solidarity without it.

The British empire begins to be a federal commonwealth. Who can doubt that Irish home rule will be followed by Scottish, Welsh and English home rule? The colonies are already self governing. British citizens might learn efficiency from the German empire, but they could teach the world the futility of government by force.

FEDERALISM—THE GERMAN EMPIRE.

We constantly excuse ourselves in America because of our youth. As we face new world alliances, we would do well to remember that the United States of America is the oldest federal organization in the world. While we are the oldest federal organization, the German empire is next to the youngest. The unprecedented power of Russia, with its vassal states, obscures the fact that when our government was 60 years old Prussia was at war with his present imperial ally, that within 50 years the German states were welded to Prussia by the Franco-Prussian war.

The German empire is a military federation. Its reluctant members united under the mailed fist of Prussia, as Austria is expected to do. The history of Prussia is an unbroken record of pillaging and subjugating neighbors. East, west, north, south, the insignificant land of Frederick the Great has stretched its piratical tentacles, relentlessly subduing German, Slavic and French neighbors. The old Germanic jealousies were so unreasonable that under the efficient tyranny of Prussian will the German population have joined in a harmonious solidarity. The German language unifies as the English language does, but the seeds of democracy, pregnant and promising in 1848, have been overlaid by the rank growth of autocracy. They are hibernating in the social-democratic and radical parties, but Prussian militarism keeps them from their place in the sun.

The enduring strength of Germany is not militarism; it is the language of Goethe and Schiller and Kant and the imperial German railways. As the British empire has its weaknesses in India, Egypt, Ireland, Germany has its weaknesses in Poland, Schleswig, Alsace. Force can never neutralize the disaffection of those populations. But America must learn the unifying power of German railways as we fathom the meaning of British free trade. The nucleus of German commerce is the railway system. To the American clumsy, slow, expensive, encumbered with personnel, this system is as useful in times of peace as in times of war. We stand in awe of the ability to transfer an army from the eastern to the western front. We (our railway men least of all) have not been conscious that their superiority has been equally great in the control of commerce. With us one railway corporation in 100 is managed efficiently. In Germany the whole system is federalized and managed for national service (with incidental 7 per cent dividends.)

The attempt of the oldest federal government to make war with the young upstart will remain frivolous until we respect those phases of federalism in which Germany is our superior.

It Sounds All Right.

From the Chicago Herald.

It was the office of the great sporting newspaper, and the golf editor was taking a brief holiday. In his absence the inquiries from readers which the golfing man answered through his correspondence column were given to the racing editor.

"Which is the better course," an ardent follower of the royal and ancient game asked, "to fuzzle one's putt or to fetch on the tee?"

The racing man tilted back in his chair and smoked five cigarets before taking his pen in hand. Then, when he had come to a decision on the weighty problem, he wrote as follows:

"Should a player snaggle his iron, it is permissible for him to fuzzle his putt; but a better plan would be to drop his gutta into the pringle and snoodle it with a niblick."

Farmer's Patriotism and Profit.

Don't waste your time speculating on peace. Speculate on war and invest your money in Liberty bonds. The farmer has come splendidly to the front with his muscles and knowledge of agriculture and has provided the allies with food. He has been paid handsomely for his crops.

If he reinvests those dollars in Liberty bonds he will be making a profitable deal and at the same time providing his government with the funds to pay him higher prices for his grain and his corn and oats now in the ground.

Food will win this war, but it won't win it if it must lie in the field and rot for want of funds to purchase it and move it to Europe where our young men are fighting the kaiser. Invest in Liberty bonds and help move it.

ALLIES DEMAND MORE CEREALS

American Meat Restrictions Relaxed to Effect Greater Wheat Savings.

ARGENTINE ARRIVALS SHORT.

Meat Supply Here Considerably Enlarged — Food Administration, However, Warns Against Waste.

The allies have made further and increased demands for breadstuffs, these enlarged demands being caused to some degree by shortage in arrivals from the Argentine. It is, therefore, necessary for the U. S. Food Administration to urge a still further reduction in the consumption of bread and breadstuffs generally if we are to meet our export necessities. The Food Administration has issued a statement explaining the situation in detail, particularly the reasons which lead it, for the purpose of centering effort for the time being upon the cereal situation to relax temporarily the restrictions on meat consumption.

Experience shows, this statement says, that the consumption of breadstuffs is intimately associated with the consumption of meat. For various reasons our supplies of meat for the next two or three months are considerably enlarged, and we can supply the allies with all of the meat products which transportation facilities render possible and at the same time somewhat increase our own consumption. In these circumstances the Food Administration considers it wise to relax the voluntary restrictions on meat consumption to some extent with a view to further decreasing bread consumption.

Conservation of food must be adjusted to meet necessities from time to time, for neither production, nor allied demands are constant factors, nor can any of these factors be anticipated for long periods in advance in the disturbed conditions in which we at present live. While the world situation is not one that warrants any relaxation in the efforts to eliminate waste or to relax economy in food, the Administration desires to secure better adjustment in food balances.

So long as the present conditions continue the only special restrictions we ask are the beefless and porkless Tuesday.

The meatless meal and the porkless Saturday are no longer asked.

The farmers of the United States are responding to the national call to increase hog production. Their increase, to all appearances, is being attained more rapidly. Of more immediate importance, however, are several complex factors which have effected an immediate increase in meat supplies.

The transportation shortage before the government took over the railroads, the bad weather in January and early in February, the large percentage of immature corn in the last harvest and the necessity of feeding this corn as rapidly as possible to save it from decay, have not only resulted in backing up the animals—particularly hogs—on the farms for a longer period of feeding, but have resulted in a great increase in their average weight and will result, with improved transportation conditions, which already appear, in larger than normal arrivals at market for the next two or three months. The weight of hogs coming to the market for the past two weeks indicates an increase in weight of from an average of 208 pounds last year to the almost unprecedented average of 232 pounds, or a net increase in their meat value of over 15 per cent. This is a distinct addition to the nation's meat supply. It therefore now seems certain that we have such enlarged supplies for at least some months to come, that we can not only increase our exports to the allies to the full extent of their transportation facilities, but at the same time can properly increase our domestic consumption.

The response of the public to our requests for reduced consumption of meat during the past few months has been most gratifying, and this service alone has enabled the government during this period to provide such supplies as transportation to the allies permitted.

The Administration also suggests that in those parts of the country where the old fashioned home preservation of pork is still the custom, this practice should be extended at the present time, as it will relieve the burden upon transportation to and from the packing houses and is economically sound as saving the cost of packing operations and at the same time will provide home supplies of pork to last over the months of decreased supplies.

The Food Administration desires to repeat that it does not want to give the impression that these are times when simplicity and moderation of living are not critically necessary, but that its sole desire is to secure an adjustment between our different food supplies and meet changing conditions from time to time and to keep the public fully and frankly advised of its position with the full confidence and reliance that whenever it becomes necessary renewed appeals for saving will met the same loyal response as in the past.

GROCERS HELP IN 50-50 PLAN

SIGN PLEDGE TO CARRY OUT FOOD ADMINISTRATION PROGRAM.

POST CARDS IN STORES.

Explain New Wheat Ruling to Thousands of Customers—Insures Greater Food Saving.

Grocers of the nation have accepted enthusiastically the 50-50 basis for the purchase of wheat flour and are doing their utmost to explain the new regulation to the housewife. This ruling by the U. S. Food Administration requires each purchaser of wheat flour to buy one pound of cereal substitute, one kind or assorted, for every pound of wheat flour. It was necessary to restrict the use of wheat flour in order that the allies and our fighting forces abroad might be assured of an adequate supply of wheat to meet their vital needs. This supply must come from our savings because we have already sent our normal surplus.

Wheat saving pledge cards were forwarded by the Food Administration to all retail food merchants, and these are being signed and posted in stores throughout the country. This card states, "We pledge ourselves loyally to carry out the Food Administration program. In accordance with this order we will not sell any wheat flour except where the purchaser buys an equal weight of one or more of the following, a greater use of which in the home will save wheat:

"Cornmeal, corn flour, edible corn starch, hominy, corn grits, barley flour, potato flour, sweet potato flour, soy bean flour, feterita flour and meals, rice, rice flour, oatmeal, rolled oats and buckwheat flour."

Some confusion has resulted on the part of the consumer in construing this "50-50" ruling to mean that an equal amount in value of substitutes must be purchased with wheat flour. This is a mistaken idea. The ruling states that the consumer in purchasing flour shall "buy at the same time an equal weight of other cereals."

One exception to this ruling is concerning graham flour and whole wheat flour, which may be sold at the ratio of three pounds to five pounds of wheat flour. This provision is made because approximately 25 per cent. more of the wheat berry is used in the manufacture of these flours than standard wheat flour.

Another exception is that concerning mixed flours containing less than 50 per cent. of wheat flour, which may be sold without substitutes. Retailers, however, are forbidden to sell mixed flours containing more than 50 per cent. of wheat flour to any person unless the amount of wheat flour substitutes sold is sufficient to make the total amount of substitutes, including those mixed in flours, equal to the total amount in wheat flour in the mixed flour. For instance, if any mixed flour is purchased containing 60 per cent. wheat flour and 40 per cent. substitutes it is necessary that an additional 20 per cent. of substitutes be purchased. This brings it to the basis of one pound of substitutes for each pound of wheat flour.

A special exemption may be granted upon application in the case of specially prepared infants' and invalids' food containing flour where the necessity is shown.

Some misunderstanding seems to exist on the part of consumers in assuming that with the purchase of wheat flour one must confine the additional 50 per cent. purchase to one of the substitutes. This is not the case. One may select from the entire range of substitutes a sufficient amount of each to bring the total weight of all substitutes equal to the weight of the wheat flour purchased. For instance, if a purchase of 24 pounds of wheat flour is made a range of substitutes may be selected as follows:

Cornmeal, 8 pounds; corn grits, 4 pounds; rice, 4 pounds; buckwheat, 2 pounds; corn starch, 1 pound; hominy, 2 pounds; rolled oats, 3 pounds

These substitutes may be used in the following manner:

Cornmeal, 8 Pounds.—Corn bread, no flour; corn muffins or spoon bread, one-fourth flour or one-third rice or one-third hominy; 20 per cent. substitutes in whole bread.

Corn Starch, 1 Pound.—Thickening gravy, making custard, one-third substitute in cake.

Corn Grits, 4 Pounds.—Fried like mush, used with meal in making corn bread.

Rolled Oats, 3 Pounds.—One-fourth to one-third substitutes in bread, one-half substitute in muffins; breakfast porridge, use freely; oatmeal cookies, oatmeal soup.

Buckwheat Flour, 2 Pounds.—One-fourth substitute in bread, buckwheat cakes.

Hominy, 2 Pounds.—Boiled for dinner, baked for dinner, with cheese sauce.

Rice, 4 Pounds.—One-fourth substitute in wheat bread, one-third substitute in corn bread, boiled for dinner (a bread cut), as a breakfast food, to thicken soups, rice pudding instead of cake or pie, rice batter cakes.

Several grocers have stated that their customers who strictly observe the 11 wheatless meals each week find it necessary to buy substitutes in addition to those ordered under the 50-50 plan.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

CHAPTER SIX. (Continued.)

"It may sound improbable, but it is quite true. I lead an industrious life, occupying myself solely with scientific research, in view of a popular work which I am preparing, and I do not take the least part or the least interest in outside things. I defy any one to prove that I have read a newspaper for months and months past. And that is why I am entitled to say that I did not know of Hippolyte Fauville's murder."

"Still, you knew M. Fauville."

"I used to know him, but we quarrelled."

"For what reason?"

"Family affairs."

"Family affairs! Were you related, then?"

"Yes. Hippolyte was my cousin."

"Your cousin! M. Fauville was your cousin! But * * * but then * * * Come, let us have the rights of the matter. M. Fauville and his wife were the children of two sisters, Elizabeth and Armande Roussel. Those two sisters had been brought up with a first cousin called Victor.

"Yes, Victor Sauverand, whose grandfather was a Roussel. Victor Sauverand married abroad and had two sons. One of them died 15 years ago, the other is myself."

M. Desmalions gave a start. His excitement was manifest. If that man was telling the truth, if he was really the son of that Victor whose record the police had not yet been able to trace, then, owing to this very fact, since M. Fauville and his son were dead and Mme. Fauville, so to speak, convicted of murder and forfeiting her rights, they had arrested the final heir to Cosmo Mornington. But why, in a moment of madness, had he voluntarily brought this crushing indictment against himself?

He continued:

"My statements seem to surprise you, Monsieur le Prefect. Perhaps they throw a light on the mistake of which I am a victim?"

He expressed himself calmly, with great politeness and in a remarkably well bred voice, and he did not for a moment seem to suspect that his revelations, on the contrary, were justifying the measures taken against him.

Without replying to the question the prefect of police asked him:

"So your real name is ——"

"Gaston Sauverand."

"Why do you call yourself Hubert Lautier?"

The man had a second of indecision which did not escape so clear sighted an observer as M. Desmalions. He swayed from side to side, his eyes flickered and he said:

"That does not concern the police; it concerns no one but myself."

M. Desmalions smiled:

"That is a poor argument. Will you use the same when I ask you why you live in hiding, why you left the Avenue du Roule, where you used to live, without leaving an address behind you, and why you receive your letters at the post office under initials?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet, those are matters of a private character, which affect only my conscience. You have no right to question me about them."

"That is the exact reply which we are constantly receiving at every moment from your accomplice."

"My accomplice?"

"Yes, Mme. Fauville."

"Mme. Fauville!"

Gaston Sauverand had uttered the same cry as when he heard of the death of the engineer; and his stupefaction seemed even greater, combined as it was with an anguish that distorted his features beyond recognition.

"What? * * * What? * * * What do you say? Marie! * * * No, you don't mean it! It's not true!"

M. Desmalions considered it useless to reply, so absurd and childish was this affection of knowing nothing about the tragedy on the Boulevard Suchet.

Gaston Sauverand, beside himself, with his eyes starting from his head, muttered:

"Is it true? Is Marie the victim of the same mistake as myself? Perhaps they have arrested her? She, she in prison!"

He raised his clenched fists in a threatening manner against all the unknown enemies by whom he was surrounded, against those who were persecuting him, those who had murdered Hippolyte Fauville and delivered Marie Fauville to the police.

Mazeroux and Chief Inspector Ancenis took hold of him roughly. He made a movement of resistance, as though he intended to thrust back his aggressors. But it was only momentary; and he sank into a chair and covered his face with his hands:

"What a mystery!" he stammered. "I don't understand! I don't understand——"

Weber, who had gone out a few minutes before, returned. M. Desmalions asked:

"Is everything ready?"

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet, I have had the taxi brought up to the gate beside your car."

"How many of you are there?"

"Eight. Two detectives have just arrived from the commissary's."

"Have you searched the house?"

"Yes. It's almost empty, however. There's nothing but the indispensable articles of furniture and some bundles of papers in the bedroom."

"Very well. Take him away and keep a sharp lookout."

Gaston Sauverand walked off quietly between the deputy chief and Mazeroux. He turned round in the doorway.

"Monsieur le Prefet, as you are making a search, I entreat you to take care of the papers on the table in my bedroom. They are notes that have cost me a great deal of labor in the small hours of the night. Also——"

He hesitated, obviously embarrassed.

"Well?"

"Well, Monsieur le Prefet, I must tell you—something——"

He was looking for his words and seemed to fear the consequences of them at the same time that he uttered them. But he suddenly made up his mind.

"Monsieur le Prefet, there is in this house—somewhere—a packet of letters which I value more than my life. It is possible that those letters, if misinterpreted, will furnish a weapon against me; but no matter. The great thing is that they should be safe. You will see. They include documents of extreme importance. I entrust them to your keeping—to yours alone, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Where are they?"

"The hiding place is easily found. All you have to do is to go to the garret above my bedroom and press on a nail to the right of the window. It is an apparently useless nail, but it controls a hiding place outside, under the slates of the roof, along the gutter."

He moved away between the two men. The prefect called them back.

"One second. Mazeroux, go up to the garret and bring me the letters."

Mazeroux went out and returned in a few minutes. He had been unable to work the spring.

The prefect ordered Chief Inspector Ancenis to go up with Mazeroux and to take the prisoner, who would show them how to open the hiding place. He himself remained in the room with Weber, awaiting the result of the search, and began to read the titles of the volumes piled upon the table.

They were scientific books, among which he noticed works on chemistry: "Organic Chemistry" and "Chemistry Considered in Its Relations with Electricity." They were all covered with notes in the margins. He was turning over the pages of one of them, when he seemed to hear shouts.

The prefect rushed to the door, but had not crossed the threshold when a pistol shot echoed down the staircase and there was a yell of pain.

Immediately after came two more shots, accompanied by cries, the sounds of a struggle, and yet another shot.

Tearing upstairs, four steps at a time, with an agility not to be expected from a man of his build, the prefect of police, followed by the deputy chief, covered the second flight and came to a third, which was narrower and steeper. When he reached the bend, a man's body, staggering above him, fell into his arms: it was Mazeroux, wounded.

On the stairs lay another body, lifeless, that of Chief Inspector Ancenis.

Above them, in the frame of a small doorway, stood Gaston Sauverand, with a savage look on his face and his arm outstretched. He fired a fifth shot at random. Then, seeing the prefect of police, he took deliberate aim.

The prefect stared at that terrifying barrel levelled at his face and gave himself up for lost. But, at that exact second, a shot was discharged from behind him, Sauverand's weapon fell from his hand before he was able to fire, and the prefect saw, as in a dream, a man, the man who had saved his life, striding across the chief inspector's body, propping Mazeroux against the wall, and darting ahead, followed by the detectives. He recognized the man: it was Don Luis Perenna.

Don Luis stepped briskly into the garret where Sauverand had retreated, but had time only to catch sight of him standing on the window ledge and leaping into space from the third floor.

"Has he jumped from there?" cried the prefect, hastening up. "We shall never capture him alive!"

"Neither alive nor dead, Monsieur le Prefet. See, he's picking himself up. There's a providence which looks after that sort. He's making for the gate. He's hardly limping."

"But where are my men?"

"Why, they're all on the staircase, in the house, brought here by the shot, seeing to the wounded——"

"Oh, the demon!" muttered the prefect. "He's played a masterly game!"

Gaston Sauverand, in fact, was escaping unmolested.

"Stop him! Stop him!" roared M. Desmalions.

There were two motors standing beside the pavement, which is very wide at this spot: the prefect's own car, and the cab which the deputy chief had provided for the prisoner. The two chauffeurs, sitting on their seats, had noticed nothing of the fight. But they saw Gaston Sauverand's leap into space; and the prefect's chauffeur, on whose seat a certain number of incriminating articles had been placed, taking out of the heap the first weapon that offered, the ebony walking stick, bravely rushed at the fugitive.

"Stop him! Stop him!" shouted M. Desmalions.

The encounter took place at the exit from the court yard. It did not last long. Sauverand flung himself upon his assailant, snatched the stick from him, and broke it across his face. Then, without dropping the handle, he ran away, pursued by the other chauffeur and by three detectives who at last appeared from the house. He had 30 yards' start of the detectives, one of whom fired several shots at him without effect.

When M. Desmalions and Weber went downstairs again, they found the chief inspector lying on the bed in Gaston Sauverand's room on the second floor, gray in the face. He had been hit on the head and was dying. A few minutes later he was dead.

Sergeant Mazeroux, whose wound was only slight, said, while it was being dressed, that Sauverand had taken the chief inspector and himself up to the garret, and that, outside the door, he had dipped his hand quickly into an old satchel hanging on the wall among some servants' wornout aprons and jackets. He drew out a revolver and fired point blank at the chief inspector, who dropped like a log. When seized by Mazeroux, the murderer released himself and fired three bullets, the third of which hit the sergeant in the shoulder.

And so, in a fight in which the police had a band of experienced detectives at their disposal, while the enemy, a prisoner, seemed to possess not the remotest chance of safety, this enemy, by a strategem of unprecedented daring, had led two of his adversaries aside, disabled both of them, drawn the others into the house and, finding the coast clear, escaped.

M. Desmalions was white with anger and despair. He exclaimed:

"He's tricked us! His letters, his hiding place, the movable nail, were all shams. Oh, the scoundrel!"

He went down to the ground floor and into the courtyard. On the boulevard he met one of the detectives who had given chase to the murderer and who was returning quite out of breath.

"Well?" he asked anxiously.

"Monsieur le Prefet, he turned down the first street, where there was a motor waiting for him. The engine must have been working, for our man outdistanced us at once."

"But what about my car?"

"You see, Monsieur le Prefet, by the time it was started——"

"Was the motor that picked him up a hired one?"

"Yes, a taxi."

"Then we shall find it. The driver will come of his own accord when he has seen the newspapers."

Weber shook his head.

"Unless the driver is himself a confederate, Monsieur le Prefet. Besides, even if we find the cab, aren't we bound to suppose that Gaston Sauverand will know how to front the scent? We shall have trouble, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Yes," whispered Don Luis, who had been present at the first investigation and who was left alone for a moment with Mazeroux. "Yes, you will have trouble, especially if you let the people you capture take to their heels. Eh, Mazeroux, what did I tell you last night? But, still, what a scoundrel! And he's not alone, Alexandre. I'll answer for it that he has accomplices—and not 100 yards from my house—do you understand? From my house."

After questioning Mazeroux upon Sauverand's attitude and the other incidents of the arrest, Don Luis went back to the Place du Palais-Bourbon.

The inquiry which he had to make related to events that were certainly quite as strange as those which he had just witnessed; and while the part played by Gaston Sauverand in the pursuit of the Mornington inheritance deserved all his attention, the behavior of Mlle. Levasseur puzzled him no less.

He could not forget the cry of terror that escaped the girl while he was telephoning to Mazeroux, nor the scared expression of her face. Now it was impossible to attribute that cry and that expression to anything other than the words which he had utered in reply to Mazeroux:

"What! Mme. Fauville tried to commit suicide!"

The fact was certain; and the connection between the announcement of the attempt and Mlle. Levasseur's extreme emotion was too obvious for Perenna not to try to draw conclusions.

He went straight to his study and at once examined the arch leading to the telephone box. This arch, which was about six feet wide and very low, had no door, but merely a velvet hanging, which was nearly always drawn up, leaving the arch uncovered. Under the hanging, among the moldings of the cornice, was a button that had only to be pressed to bring down the iron curtain which he had thrown himself two hours before.

He worked the catch two or three times over, and his experiments proved to him in the most explicit fashion that the mechanism was in perfect order and unable to act without outside intervention. Was he then to conclude that the girl had wanted to kill him? But what could be her motive?

He was on the point of ringing and sending for her, so as to receive the explanation which he was resolved to demand from her. However, the minutes passed and he did not ring. He saw her through the window as she walked slowly across the yard, her body swinging gracefully from her hips. A ray of sunshine lit up the gold of her hair.

All the rest of the morning he lay on a sofa, smoking cigars. He was ill at ease, dissatisfied with himself and with the course of events, not one of which brought him the least glimmer of truth; in fact, all of them seemed to deepen the darkness in which he was battling. Eager to act, the moment he did so he encountered fresh obstacles that paralyzed his powers of action and left him in utter ignorance of the nature of his adversaries.

But at 12 o'clock, just as he had rung for lunch, his butler entered the study with a tray in his hand, and exclaimed, with an agitation which showed that the household was aware of Don Louis' ambiguous position:

"Sir, it's the prefect of police!"

"Eh?" said Perenna. "Where is he?"

"Downstairs, sir. I did not know what to do, at first * * * and I thought of telling Mlle. Levasseur But——"

"Are you sure?"

"Here is his card, sir."

MEXICAN FOOD PRICES HIGHER THAN IN U. S.

Nearly Every Necessity Is Double or More Than Paid by Americans.

Chihuahua City (by mail)—Food is so expensive and so difficult to obtain in Mexico, one of the most fertile countries in the world, that the poor are suffering want and even starvation while the more prosperous Mexicans find it difficult to provide sustenance for their families.

Prices of food in the United States, even if considered by American housewives to be high, are not to be compared with those prevailing in Mexico since the embargo was placed on the exportation of foodstuffs from the United States to neutral countries.

An opportunity to compare Mexican prices for staple articles with those obtaining in the United States is afforded by the following quotations from merchants here:

Sugar sells for 27 cents a pound, American money, and is very scarce at this price.

American butter brings 90 cents a pound, gold, and is the occasion for celebration in the Mexican homes when it can be obtained at this price. Butter is unknown among the poorer classes.

Flour sells for 16 cents a pound and is growing more expensive as the embargo restrictions are made more stringent. Little wheat bread is eaten by the middle and lower classes who use flour for making tortillas, a cake made of flour and water.

American brands of coffee sell as high as 75 cents a pound and is very scarce. Mexican green coffee brings 28 cents a pound and is roasted over charcoal fires as it is used.

Rice, used principally by the Chinese and Japanese living in Mexico, is worth 12 cents a pound.

Lard is another article which has more than doubled in price because of the American embargo. It brings 95 cents a pound when it can be obtained. The principal source of supply is the smuggler.

Beans, which are a staple food throughout Mexico and are eaten three times a day, sell for 10 cents a pound. This is the highest in the history of Mexico. The red frijole bean is much preferred to the American white navy bean.

No ham or bacon can be bought here at the present time. The last shipment received sold for 83 cents a pound.

Chile peppers, grown in all parts of Mexico, are the only footstuff which has not increased in price. It sells for 3 cents a pound.

Small purchases are the rule in the small Mexican stores and shops. The centavo, or penny, formerly was the most used medium of purchase and exchange. It was not uncommon for children to ask for 1 cent's worth of sugar, lard or even flour. Because of the increased cost of such commodities the 5-cent piece has taken the place of the cent as the most used medium.

Central markets supply vegetables, fresh and dried meats and other commodities. The Chinese gardeners have obtained a monopoly of the green grocery business and they raise great quantities of vegetables on their well tended farms near this and other large cities. The Chinese also carry vegetables from place to place in big baskets suspended from a yoke which the peddler balances over his neck.

At that out stepped a dilapidated fellow who had a thick stubble of black beard.

"Oh, bugler!" said he. "I thought you said burglar."

When the men for the national army left a New Mexico town for their training camps recently, a feature of the farewell ceremonies was the presentation of a comfort bag to each of them. Some of the boys were unaccustomed to the use of the various toilet articles with which the bags were generously supplied, and were visibly more disconcerted than grateful when the received their gifts. One of them was heard to exclaim, as he gazed resentfully at the bag dangling from his forefinger. "And now, on top of everything else, I've got this darn thing to contend with."

PAGEANTRY OF WAR IS FAST DISAPPEARING

Somber Hued Uniforms Have Taken Place of the Bright Colored Ones.

Washington, (by mail).—The pomp and pageantry of war fast are disappearing.

The days are gone when a "thin red line," advancing with colors flying and bayonets gleaming, presented the enemy with easy cannon fodder.

In the first place, the resplendent uniform has been discarded by all belligerents for one of somber, inconspicuous hue. The reason is obvious the human target is delineated with dangerous distinctness when bright colors are worn. For almost the same reason, bayonets are no longer burnished. A raiding party, lurking in No Man's Land cannot afford to have its presence betrayed by the gleam of light from a star-shell on a polished piece of steel.

Moreover, the regimental standards usually are left at headquarters. A color sergeant probably would find himself in a difficult position if confronted with the necessity of fighting off an enemy and keeping the flag waving at the same time.

A sad feature of the present war is that there will be no "youngest drummer boy." For many years the proud individual who held this distinction in the Civil war has been dying off by hundreds, so perhaps many post-bellum controversies have been averted by eliminating the picturesque boyish figure.

The blare of bands usually has been associated with memorable advances of troops, but the musicians now can be convinced very easily that trench concerts might prove unhealthy. There still remains, however, the skirl of the bagpipes.

The general of the lace-encumbered uniform and flowing hat plumes has passed out with the horse hair sofa period, so far as field service is concerned. In the gloomy corridors of the state, war and navy building there is on display in glass cases mannikins attired in the uniform worn by American soldiers at various periods of the country's history. A continental warrior, clad in a blue coat with buff facings and wearing a perilously balanced three-cornered hat, compares but poorly in apparent efficiency with the trim fighting men of today. The garb of the modern American soldier is developed along strictly utilitarian lines. The dull khaki tone blends into the landscape at a distance and the broad brim campaign hat offers protection from the sun. The "tin hat," or steel helmet worn in trench warfare, also has been adopted by the expeditionary forces.

The civilian, however, still finds room for mystification in endeavoring to find why the blue jackets still wear the halo-like hat and broad bottomed trousers, apparent survivals from the days of the frigate.

No narrative of a heroic charge in wars of bygone days was complete without a picture of an officer leading his men with sword in hand. Now, it isn't done. The man with the sword readily is distinguished by the enemy as an officer—and as such a desirable target for rifle and machine gun fire.

In Civil war days, and as recently as the Spanish war, soldiers and officers were represented as gathering nightly about the campfire. In history and fiction, descriptions are not lacking of the anxious officers who studied out plans for the morrow's campaign by the flickering blazes. Campfires in France, if built at all, are located deep in a dug out, as their presence above ground would serve admirably as a range-finder for the foe's artillery.

But the element of individual and mass gallantry nevertheless still survives—and to a greater extent. As long as history lives, men will remember the stand of the French at Verdun, English tenacity at the Somme, the wild recklessness of the Canadians at Vimy Ridge, the sacrifice of the Anzacs at Gallipoli, and the proverbial courage of the Irish, who, it is said, charged into a withering fire at Loos kicking a football before them.

The Americans of the expeditionary forces have had their baptism of fire and have not been found wanting. Traditions of a nation are theirs to uphold and to increase.

Singer Pays Wilson's Salary.

John McCormack has become almost an institution. Wherever he goes to raise his voice in song huge auditoriums are packed. No home is regarded as complete unless it has a phonograph with a McCormack record. It even precedes the flivver in the evolution of family life. So when Mr. McCormack appeared before the collector of internal revenue in New York and turned over his check for his income tax, we were all interested. For almost everyone of us had had something to do with the creation of that income. The check was for $75,000, thus proving that Mr. McCormack's voice strikes a note of purer gold than Signor Caruso, whose income required a payment of but $63,000. That $75,000 was, in its way, our most popular tenor's accounting to his admirers for the By a coincidence it equaled the salary of the president of the United States. In effect, Mr. McCormack said to the American people, "Since you have been so generous with me, I will pay your highest salaried official, the president of the United States."

Her Suggestion.

From the Idaho Statesman.

Mr. Badger and his wife were continually at variance regarding their individual capabilities of making and keeping a good fire. He contended that she did not know how to make a fire, nor how to keep one after it was made. She, on the other hand, maintained that he never meddled with the fire that he didn't put it out—in short, that he was a perfect fire damper; and, as he was always anxious to stir up things in the various fireplaces, she made a practice of hiding the poker just before it was time for him to come into the house. One night there was an alarm of fire in the village and Budger flew for his hat and coat.

"Where are you going, my dear?" asked his wife.

"Why, there's a fire, and I'm going to help put it out."

"Well, my love," responded Mrs. Budger, "I think the best thing you can do is to take the poker along with you."

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Millions of Dollars Have Been Paid in Dividends to People Owning Stock in Packing Companies.

If You Act at Once This Is Your Opportunity to Secure an Investment in the 8%

Guaranteed, Preferred, Participating Stock of the

Skinner Packing Company

Omaha, U. S. A.

At the Present Selling Price of $100 Per Share, This Stock Is Fully Participating in the Entire Profits of the Company and Is Preferred as to the First 8 Per Cent.

$420,000 of This Stock Subscribed for by Conservative Investors Within One Week

This Is Architects' Drawing of Omaha's Daylight Snow White Independent Packing Plant That the SKINNER PACKING COMPANY Will Erect On Its 33-Acre Tract Just South and West Of the Present Swift Plant On the South Side.

This Company Is Organized on a High Grade Basis—No Promotion Stock

The 8% Guaranteed Preferred Participating Stock that is now offered, not only calls for the first 8% dividend, but it is fully participating in the entire profits of the company.

The above plant (the first unit of our operations), is designed and equipped to handle a daily killing capacity of 250 Cattle, 1,500 Hogs, and 500 Sheep, and to handle all of our by-products, from raw to finished commercial products. We will manufacture lard, sausage, smoked meats and animal stock foods from fertilizer and blood, and prepare all casings and bones ready for marketing, and in addition, will manufacture an extensive line of food specialties, all under the supervision and inspection of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry.

Our cost system and operating end has been estimated by the highest and most efficient authorities in the United States, and while our plans call for an estimated daily killing capacity of 1,500 Hogs, we have figured in our operation only 1,000 capacity. Also our estimate is based on only 55% of the average yield of Cattle and 75% of the average yield of Hogs, and covers only 300 days' run throughout the year. We have a fixed charge in our cost of 6% on $2,500,000, besides liberal items in cost for depreciation in equipment, on plant, machinery and insurance, etc. Every item is conservative and included in the cost estimate.

The Net Profit From the Operation of This Plant (the first unit), is Conservatively Estimated at $828,000 Per Annum, or More Than 30 Per Cent on Our Entire Capital

Financial Department . . . . . Suite 912, First National Bank Bldg., Omaha
Executive Offices . . . . . Suite 1400, First National Bank Bldg., Omaha

Omaha is the world's second largest live stock market; $192,000,000 of meat products were packed here last year, which represents but 60% of the live stock shipped to this market.

There is a great opening for a packing plant at Omaha operated under the right management and conducted along business lines. The operation by the Skinner Packing Company of Omaha's Daylight Snow White Independent Packing Plant, will retard the trans-shipment of live stock at this point, which will mean a great economic saving and a better market for shippers and producers.

The operating end of the business will be in charge of an official, nationally known in the packing house industry and with wide and valuable experience.

The SKINNER PACKING COMPANY will market its Specialty food products through the present nationally organized sales force of the Skinner Manufacturing Company.

The management of the Idle Hour have been showing some real fine pictures lately and they deserve a lot of credit for the films they are running. The pictures are all up to date and many of the pictures shown at the Idle Hour are right up with the pictures shown in Mason City and other larger places. They are making a regular feature of running a "Blue-Bird" night, the same as are run in the larger places.

Oscar Larsen, who is in the Supply Train Division of the Army, came from Camp Dodge Sunday for a few days visit with his folks and Klemme friends. "Scoop" says he likes it fine. He just returned from Chicago a few days ago where he has been attending a mechanical school for three weeks. He drove a truck back from Chicago to Camp Dodge. There were ten trucks and twenty men in this train of trucks. He left Wednesday for Camp Dodge to resume his duties.

The Thrift Car

Millions Saved— Get Your Share

Improved methods of building cars, that build them better and save millions of dollars to the public, is one of the substantial advantages you get in this Overland Model 90.

The time to save money is when you select your car, because afterwards you cannot make it any more economical than it is built to be.

Select this Model 90 and you save money in the first cost and in the maintenance cost. You cannot get complete satisfaction from less advantages than it gives—

And you cannot get as much value in any other car for the low price of this Model 90.

It has a powerful, fuel-saving motor; narrow turning radius; rear cantilever springs; 106-inch wheelbase; 31 x 4 tires, non-skid rear. Auto-Lite starting and lighting and vacuum fuel system.

It is as desirable as it is adequate, comfortable and easy-to-handle.

With it a salesman can double his value; a housewife gains time for Red Cross work, and business and professional men save time and multiply their activities.

It coins time and money for more than 80,000 others. Why not for you?

ERNEST LEWIS AND GEORGE HOPPE CALLED TO THE COLORS

George Hoppe went over to Mason City Monday to see the recruiting officer as to when he would be called for the Navy. He received orders for himself and Ernest Lewis to report at the Mason City branch on Friday, from where they will receive transportation to Des Moines for further examinations. If the boys pass at Des Moines they will be sent to the Great Lakes Training Camp for Naval Training.

O. S. BAILEY OUT FOR AUDITOR

O. S. Bailey, of Britt, is out for County Auditor this year and his announcement is now running in the Times. Mr. Bailey's slogan is, "A Business Man for a Business Office." He is a man born and raised in the county, has had a wide field of experience in successful business which he believes will fit him to perform the duties of the office to which he aspires, to the fullest degree of efficiency. Mr. Bailey has been connected with the Britt Tribune for a number of years and has made a wide acquaintance of friends throughout the county.

WAR SAVINGS STAMPS

The campaign for the sale of War Savings Stamps will begin in the county on May 4th, and will continue up to and including May 11th

To all those who live in Ell township the information is given that we are asked to raise an amount equal to 65 per cent of your allotment of Liberty Bonds of the Third loan. Forty per cent of this sum will be required as a first payment, the balance of your subscription can be paid in monthly installments during the remainder of the year 1918, final payment made in the month of December 1918

You are requested to call on your Bank on the 6th or 7th day of May and subscribe for the amount allotted to you

It is a matter of great importance that we contribute your share of the money required to support the Government in the prosecution of the war and this appeal to you is from the heart and with the hope of taking care of our boys at the front. Many of us are too old, others disqualified and are left at home, but we are just as much a part of the followers of the American flag and all that it stands for, as the boys in khaki who are shouldering the musket. Stand by them.

TEST ASSOCIATION NEWS

J. T. Galford is at the top of the list of the Klemme Cow Testing Association for the year which ended on April 27th. He has a herd of Holsteins, most of them being registered and they are the kind that bring in the big cream checks. The Holstein is the logical cow for this community and when the members fill their herds with the selected producers as Mr. Galford has done, this association will have no low producers or boarders. Markings are not what count in the Holsteins, it's the blood lines.

New Word.

That new word "leprosarium" is what might be called, without hesitation, a humdinger. The finest thing about it is that it sets the patterns for about a thousand other words we have been needing, such as whoopingcougharium, spavinarium, shinglearium, ringwormarium, toothachearium, measlearium, mumparium, feverarium, pellagrarium, windcolicarium, hookwormarium, scarletrasharium, yallerjandersarium, etc. Some words, those!

WHAT ABOUT A BAND THIS SUMMER?

It is about time that Klemme business men, and citizens wake up to the serious question of having a band in Klemme this summer.

All our neighboring towns have a band for this summer. We don't want Klemme to fall behind the times in this matter. A good band is the best advertisement a town can have. We have the material for a good band—that is the main proposition. But there are other things to consider also The band boys are willing to donate their time but they do expect the business men and citizens to give them the necessary financial support. If every business man will donate at least one dollar a week toward a band for this summer, then Klemme can have a band. One dollar a week will not be noticed by anyone—in fact we feel that it is money well spent as it will bring people to Klemme—that is the Big Idea. Get the outside people interested in coming here, give them something in the way of entertainment and they will fall over themselves to beat each other to town.

If the business men and the band boys can get together on this question in the near future then work can be started and we can get a band together in a few weeks and begin our concerts in the early part of June. This band question should be solved soon as we have not much time to lose. Let's get busy at once.

BERHOW OF KANAWHA ANNOUNCES FOR SUPERVISOR

Mr. Thos. Berhow, of Karfawha, is announcing for Supervisor in this issue of the Klemme Times. Mr. Berhow needs little introduction, as he is a man well known throughout the county. He is especially known to the farmers as he is a farmer himself and has always taken a lot of interest along that line. Mr. Berhow has resided in the county for a number of years and is a man who can be recommended to the voters of the county who will make good as a Supervisor.

THE OLD STORK BREAKS ALL FORMER RECORDS

The past week has been a record breaker in the number of births reported in this vicinity. Following are the names of the parents whose hearts have been gladened with big bouncing baby boys and girls:

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Lillibridge, a girl; Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Bachman, a girl; Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bachman, a girl; Mr. and Mrs. L. Klotzbock, a boy; Mr. and Mrs. Herman Barz, a boy; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Greiman, a boy; Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Lenz, a boy.

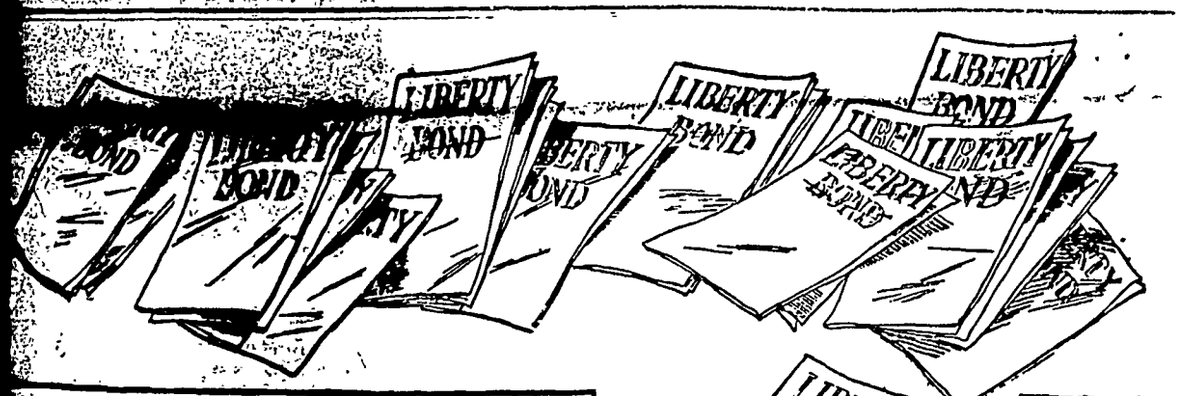
Is it any wonder that so many gentlemen have been stepping so high lately? The arrival of the baby boys and girls solves it all, those big smiles and long strides.

Joys of Companionship.

Half the difficulty of fighting any severe battle or accomplishing any hard task vanishes when a man feels that he has comrades at his side fighting in the same cause, or that the eyes of those he loves are upon him, and their hearts praying for his victory.—C. J. Perry.

Penalty of Public Spirit.

If a man undertakes to do anything of public service without being part of a machine, or if an organization which is composed merely of representative citizens and has no predatory interests undertakes to do anything the word which sums up the objections of the partisan mind is self-constituted."—Harper's Weekly.



You are asked to spend wisely—to buy only the things honestly needed to maintain your health and efficiency. This intelligent thrift. The Government asks it of you as a war measure : :

Bonds Are Not A Burden, But A Blessing

Thrift requires the exercise of restraint and self-denial qualities without which you cannot achieve the success in which it is your ambition to achieve and for the lack of which you are likely to suffer in later years.

The money you acquire by thrift you are asked to loan—not give—to your country. It will come back to you when you may need it far more than you do now, and you will be paid interest for its use.

War is a frightful thing, but it may prove of inestimable benefit to you, if it teaches you the good habit of thrift.

GARNER, IOWA.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

The New York Herald announces that a New York chef has a "wonder receipt for making bread without wheat flour." Jean Ricroch, chef of the Biltmore hotel, is responsible for the recipes, and he now gives it to the country, without money and without price. Mr. Ricroch told a Herald reporter the ingredients of the new bread is as follows "Twenty-five pounds of rye flour, 25 pounds of graham flour 25 pounds of corn flour, 25 pounds of crushed oatmeal, one pound of lard and two pounds of yeast." This, it is explained, is enough to make 150 pounds of bread. The yeast and rye flour should be mixed first and the others added alternately Smaller quantities of bread can be made by using small proportions. The receipt doubtless is a good one, but it does not provide for bread without wheat flour. Graham flour is unbolted wheat flour. So while the bread is a wheat saver, it does not do away entirely with the use of that grain.

The Atlantic division of the American Red Cross cuts out the garments made by the chapters in New Jersey, New York and Connecticut. In order to take care of the great demands the cutting department has been equipped with electrically driven machinery By the use of cutting machines the material can be made ready for thousands of workers The same scheme can be utilized in any city or town where there is a garment factory At Columbus, Ind., the Red Cross chapter turned its material over to a shirt factory. Work that had taken a great deal of valuable time was done in a twinkling by machinery and there was no charge. The owners of the factory were glad to further the Red Cross work in that way Any chapter, in a place where there is such a plant, should be able to find a patriotic cutter who is willing to do this job for the asking

The officials of the Long Island railway have begun another year's campaign to try and prevent motorists from committing suicide by driving in front of moving trains Last year the Long Island had 109 grade crossing gates smashed by automobile drivers It was a favorite game to drive at high speed into these barriers, smash them and then clear the track just a few feet ahead of the oncoming train. Mondays newspapers usually carry long casualty lists resulting from foolhardy motor car drivers, who celebrate Sunday by going to eternity instead of their intended destination There are reckless drivers in every state and in every city of every state Indianapolis has its share, and sooner or later they will learn that the game between the automobile and the locomotive is an unequal one The locomotive wins nearly every time

Josephus Daniels secretary of the navy, has made the declaration that Philadelphia is "the worst city for fostering vice in the United States." Repeated efforts have been made by the federal authorities to have a general cleanup in Philadelphia, because thousands of marines are stationed at the League island navy yard. However, reports received by Secretary Daniels indicate that the improvement in vice conditions has not been what the department desires. So the sweeping charge is made against the city of brotherly love. As might have been expected, the Philadelphia authorities are thoroughly aroused.

The first colonial assembly to enjoy the right of initiating legislation was the Maryland assembly, which convened in 1635 and was composed of representatives of the whole people—a purely democratic legislature. In the beginning every adult male citizen was permitted to sit in the assembly, but with the increase in population it was found necessary to limit the number, although there was still no legal restriction on the number of delegates the people might send.

In the east superstitions reverence is still paid to the sword. The daimois of Japan, when they voluntarily surrender their rank, kept, as a rule, the wonderful blades which had been handed down from generation to generation, in some cases for more than 1,000 years, and which had absorbed, as they believed, some of the character and life of the men that had owned them.

Horned toads are harmless, never trying to bite, even when taken into the hand But they have a habit, perhaps as a means of defense, of spurting a little jet of blood from the eye when disturbed One will thus eject first from one eye and then from the other a drop of blood to a distance of 12 to 15 inches, repeating this several times

Warriors of the Marshall islands sometimes wear battle helmets made of the skin of the porcupine fish, which is very thick and spiky. It is cured in such fashion as to preserve the shape of the fish and, while affording protection against a blow from a club, lends an extra touch of ferocity to the fighting man's aspect.

Coal miners were the first to use canaries to detect the presence of gas. The bird feels the effect of the first whiff of gas in a tunnel, and gives the alarm by dropping to the floor of its cage Tunnelers of the British royal engineers are making use of the same little helper. Bobbie one canary at the front, has been "gassed" seven times

The United States is growing lumber at the rate of 20,000,000,000 board feet a year and using it at the rate of 40,000,000,000 board feet annually. It is reported that of the 900,000,000 or more acres of original forest land about 300,000,000 acres have been turned into farm land, while 65,000,000 acres have been cut and not replanted.

In California are several sorts of flowers that would bear no seeds except for the visits and activities of insects. One of these is the yucca. A tiny moth lives in the flower and performs a peculiar work, intricate, but without which the yucca could not perpetuate itself through seeds.

The French government has appointed a number of officials to report on a scheme for the transformation of the port of Brest into a great trans-Atlantic commercial port.

If all the seeds of any one sort of plant were allowed to grow they would soon cover the earth to the exclusion of all else. A single orchid plant produced more than 10,000,000 seeds in a season and many common plants, as the foxglove, very nearly equal this remarkable record.

The best sponges come from the Levant, in the eastern Mediterranean, and are obtained by diving. The Levantine sponge divers often cut pieces from large sponges, replant the pieces, and tie them to stakes to keep them from being swept away by the current. They soon grow at an enormous rate.

O'MEARA CASE GOES OVER TO SEPTEMBER

Judge Hutchinson Grants Continuance in Ida County—Other Court News.

Ida Grove, Ia., April 27.—In the case of the State of Iowa vs. Raymond O'Meara, indicted for rape, Judge M. E. Hutchinson granted a continuance until the September term of the district court. The defendant was indicted jointly with another young man for assaulting a young woman. The other young man has been tried and convicted.

A settlement of the claim of J. H. Meyers against D. H. Hedrick in the McHugh estate, was made and the case was stricken from the district court docket. Meyers, who resides at Sioux City, was a cousin of the late Alex McHugh, who died several years ago, leaving her estate to D. H. Hedrick, of Battle Creek, by will. Meyers entered into a contract with the will beneficiary to withdraw a contest, and it was under this contract that a settlement was effected.

KAISER UNDER FIRE OF BRITISH AVIATOR

Bombed While Inspecting Damage Done by Allied Fleet at Zeebrugge.

Copenhagen, April 26.—A British airman bombed Zeebrugge mole while the kaiser was inspecting the results of the recent naval raid there. German newspapers declared today. The kaiser remained on the mole and completed his inspection.

London, April 26.—Reuter's Amsterdam corespondent sends the following telegram received from Berlin:

"The kaiser on Tuesday visited Zeebrugge, the scene of the frustrated English raid. He boarded he mole where he convinced himself that the damage caused by the blowing up of the railway bridge had already been temporarily repaired.

"He then passed to the canal lock where two cement laden vessels lie. The kaiser got a captured English captain of marine who happened to be brought past to explain the battle."

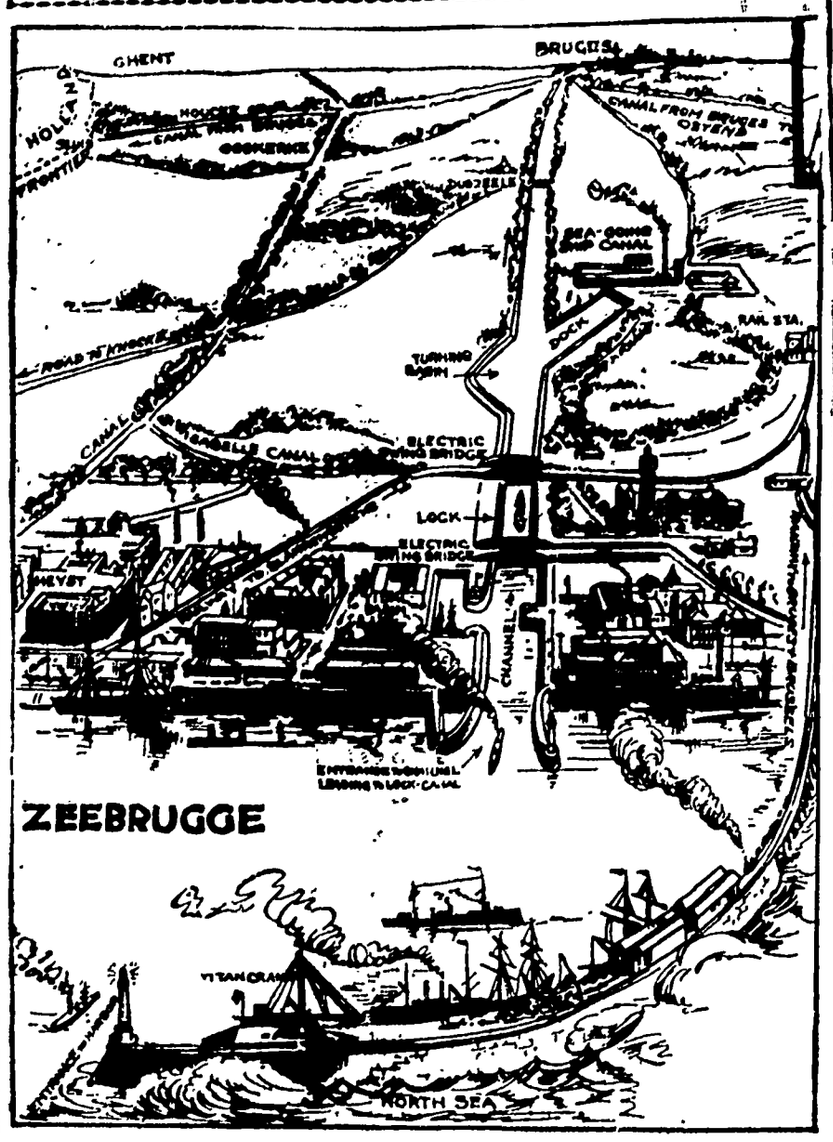
PERSPECTIVE OF ZEEBRUGGE DEFENSES.



WHERE BRITISH FLEET WROUGHT HAVOC.

Late press dispatches indicate that the British naval attack against the German submarine base at Zeebrugge was highly successful, probably putting that base entirely out of commission for some time. The perspective map, shown above, gives a clear idea of the principal points involved in the attack, including the outer mole and and the long channel leading into the interior. The damages inflicted include: Blocking the harbor entrance with ships laden with concrete; injury to canal locks by submarine sent against the works with heavy explosives: large rift broken out of protective mole. A similar attack at Ostend failed because the wind shifted and blew away the smoke screen which was intended to protect the attacking forces.

French Envoy Urges America to Prepare for Long Bitter Siege

BY ROBERT J. BENDER.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Washington, D. C., April 26.—"America must expect a long and bitter struggle on the west front. It may be months before a decision in the bloody fighting there is realized.

"Today the allies are outnumbered by their foe. The situation is serious. The duty of the American government, the laboring man and the people at home is to make haste now. A successful outcome is assured."

This summarizes a remarkably frank discussion of the allied war situation by M. de Billy, French high commissioner to the United States, who has just arrived here from France with French officers, who were in the thick of the German onslaughts in the west.

Long Hard Drive Ahead.

Having failed in their original intention of separating the French and British lines, the Germans, they say, are now preparing for a long, continual drive—and it may be many weeks before the end is in sight.

Talking with these men, who have actually witnessed the recent battles in France, one is impressed by the tremendous earnestness with which they seek to drive home the vast effort necessary by America NOW. At the same time the complete confidence they have in the future, is clearly conclusive of the German failure to crack the morale of French troops or people.

Man power is the first vital demand on America, M. de Billy declared. England is rushing great reserves to France and the French are mustering all the reserves they can. The great reservoir, however, is the United States. Troop shipments from here must be hastened to the utmost, he said.

To Use Every Good Soldier.

Germany is preparing to throw every good soldier she has into the west front battle line, according to French information. The collapse of Russia has been followed by the virtual stripping of the Russian front forces. Two more divisions have been recently sent to Picardy. There are no great German forces today on any front except the west.

Next to man power demanded to meet this German determination, transportation, according to M. de Billy, stands out as the most vital question. Anything that can be done must be done, the Frenchman said, to inspire the people and workingmen of America to the crying need for ships.

America must exert its greatest effort now while the danger is acute, and at the same time prepare for continuing the struggle through 1919 and 1920.

As for the American boys now in France, the commissioner said both Generals Foch and Petain had spoken very highly of Pershing's men.

STRATEGY THAT DESTROYED NAPOLEON WRECKING BOCHE

BY J. W. T. MASON.
United Press War Expert.

New York, April 27. —Von Hindenburg's renewed pressure on the front between Ypres and Hazebrouck, after the recent heavy German casualties is still another indication of the growing realization in Germany that the present situation in the west is not exerting its expected influence on the end of the war.

By securing a footing on Mont Kemmel, the Germans added difficulties to the British defense of the Ypres salient, but have not placed in any peril the British forces defending that area. The British line continues intact. It is in perfect position for another moderate retirement, if it becomes necessary to exchange still a little more ground for a further slaughter of German man power.

The key to the entire west front situation at the present moment is the impossibility for Hindenburg to stop his offensive efforts without confessing the ruin of his great plan to end the war before America's military strength can be brought to bear. There is every reason for confidence in General Foch's ability to prevent this by compelling the uninterrupted payment of German casualties on a continuously high scale.

Hindenburg has not yet reached his Moscow but the basis of the strategy that overthrew Napoleon in Russia is now being used by General Foch under modern conditions. Hindenburg's progress in the west will eventually exhaust him, through the too costly expenditure of human lives, just as Napoleon progressed, but lost his man power in Russia. Hindenburg, however, will not abandon his quest yet. He has become the victim of his own ruthless machine. He cannot guide it. He can only feed the machine with German lives and trust blindly to fate, which is moving inexorably against him.

NEW SOLICITOR FOR NORTHWESTERN ROAD

STILL GREATER BLOW BETWEEN AMIENS AND ARRAS TO COME SOON

By United Press.

London, April 26.—The Germans have captured Mont Kemmel, it was officially announced this afternoon.

London, April 26.—Major General Radcliffe, director of operations, declared in an interview today that he expects a big German offensive between Arras and Amiens—"far greater than the present attacks," for the purpose of separating the British and French armies.

"So far, the German successes have been merely tactical," he said. "There has been no change in the strategical situation."

General Radcliffe declared it was perfectly possible for the allies to hold on the Ypres sector even with the Germans on Kemmel hill, but that it was not convenient to have them there and it was hoped to eject them.

BY WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the British Armies in Flanders, April 26.—French troops are wholly surrounded on Mont Kemmel. They are still fighting.

After eight hours' fighting yesterday, German storm troops finally wedged their way between the French and British flanks, and crossed the Kemmel-Ypres road, where the terrific allied fire held them up for two hours. Then they turned southward and poured down the valley to the west of Kemmel hill surrounding the French, who are still fighting atop the height

This is an indication of Hindenburg's determination to force a supreme, decisive contest, which unquestionably has been induced by the fact that preceding the present attack the Germans already had engaged 130 divisions (1,560,000 men), of which approximately only 50 rank as first or second class units, with which to force the final issue.

Allies' Grip Strengthened.

The German drive toward Amiens is increasing. In the meantime, the allies have had time to take the greatest defensive precautions. In consequence, the victorious outcome is likely to rest with the side having the best generalship, the most munitions and the most reserves

As a result of unifying the allied command Foch is consistently opposing the present attack, as heretofore, with the minimum forces necessary preferring to loose ground rather than uselessly sacrific his reserves

While the two preceding German drives lasted 10 days each with five day intervals for organizing it is considered doubtful that the Germans, with their limited number of fresh divisions left from the violence of the present attack, can exceed their precedents.

Garrison Holds Out.

Although the Germans have reached the crest of the hill, the remnant of the French garrison is still there The French also hold the village

In night fighting at Mont Des Cats (five miles west) the French raked the slopes with machine guns and held out against terrible odds, preferring death to capture.

Today the German lines apparently run west of Kemmel, but the ultimate winner is still a matter of doubt

Similar fighting surged about Villers-Bretonneux, the British fighting like lions, retaking the town, atop a ridge, much in the same fashion as the Germans got Kemmel working around the sides until it was surrounded.

As the French held out in Flanders the Germans held out in the town east of Amiens.

In the Kemmel fighting the Anglo-French made a savage counter attack both allied flanks enfilading Von Eberhardt's Alpiners, turning the green flower fields of the valley into a sizzling hell. The Germans paid dearly for their gains

GERMANS SHIFT DRIVE.
By Associated Press.

Flanders is again the scene of the full tide of battle. Around Mont Kemmel and against the other hills forming the protecting bastion to the plain east and north of Ypres the Germans are hurling thousands of troops. The French have lost a part of Mont Kemmel.

Unable to make appreciable progress against the defense of the British, French and American troops south of the Somme the enemy swung his attacks to the north.

South of the Somme the Germans have been driven from the high ground and village of Villers-Bretoneux by the British with the loss of 600 prisoners. Further south they hold Hangard. On this front, heavy artillery duels are in progress.

American wounded in the fighting on the French sector from Hangard to Castle are arriving in Paris.

The tactics of switching attacks is not new to the Germans and was persisted in by them in their vain attempt to capture Verdun two years ago. After the first successful lunge on both sides of the Meuse the enemy tried to gain his objective by attacking first on the right bank and then are now trying the same method by alternating between Picardy and Flanders in attempts to reach Amiens and wipe out the Ypres salient.

It is not improbable that the German attacks may be intended to cover preparations for an effort some place else, but it is significant that they have attacked on the most imporant sectors on either battle front.

STORY OF YESTERDAY'S BATTLE
By Associated Press.

With the British Army in France, April 26.—Success in the southern sector of the battle front and a long, fierce struggle in the north have fallen to the lot of the allied arms in the contest for vital positions which the Germans have been trying at a heavy cost of life to secure. The latest information from the south is that Villers-Bretenneux apparently has been retaken as a result of a brilliant British counter attack and not only has the town been virtually cleared of the enemy, but a large portion of the original positions north and south of it have been reclaimed. German dead are heaped about the unhappy town and some 700 prisoners are in British camps.

In the north, Mont Kemmel has been attacked desperately by a great force of German troops especially trained for mountain warfare. The attempt on Mont Kemmel is another move in the German obvious scheme to get control of a chain of hills running east to west in this sector and including such elevations as Wytschaete, Kemmel, Scherpenberg, Mont Rouge, Vidaigne and Mont Descats. This pretentious program has as its object the forcing of the allies to pull back their lines to the north still further.

The northern attack this morning was along a front extending from Wytschaete nearly to Bailleul and it was carried out by at least four, and perhaps six German divisions.

French Bear Brunt.

The brunt of the assault came against the French who were defending Kemmel which was the enemy's goal Between 3 and 4 o'clock the German hill men rushed forward and attacked the positions protecting Kemmel hill At the same time they began pushing further to the south in order to furnish a protecting flank for the main operation

Hard fighting developed immediately The Germans pushed on up the slopes, and it is reported that at one time some of the detachments even made their way to the crest of the hill, but this afternoon it was announced that it was still in possession of the allies

The story from Villers-Bretonneux was most cheerful To capitulate, the Germans began their attack on Villers-Bretonneux about 6 o'clock Wednesday morning after a heavy bombardment, including great quantities of gas shells, which forced the British to pull out of parts of the town and hold it lightly Heavy mists were hanging over the whole region, and under cover of this the Germans advanced, supported by five bulky and heavy armored tanks

Simultaneously with their attack at Villers-Bretonneux the Germans also began operations to the south against the French and north on the river Somme At Sailly-Le-Sec and Vaire several attacks were repulsed during the early hours The first drive against Villers-Bretonneux was made with two divisions and this was thrown back. The Germans immediately put two fresh divisions into line and again surged forward

Taken by Surprise.

By noon the Germans had swung a salient about 6,000 yards wide and 4,000 yards deep about Villers-Bretonneux and were holding the town strongly This they continued to do until 10 o'clock last night when the British delivered a surprise counter attack

According to prisoners the enemy had no expectation of further trouble from the British last night and were sitting snugly in their new position when the storm broke

At the appointed hour the British gunners put down a sharp barrage and the British infantry drove forward The attack was made from the southwest and northwest on Villers-Bretonneux and these two forces drove in toward the east part of town in a converging movement. As a result the British have bottled up the town

The British infantry immediately rushed the town and hand to hand fighting ensued, the bayonet being used freely. Six hundred prisoners were taken here alone and a great number of the enemy were killed The town was virtually cleared.

ONE OF LONG RANGE GUNS IS DESTROYED

French Counter Measures Partially Successful—Two Others Still in Service.

Paris, April 26.—One of three German long range guns which have been bombarding Paris has been destroyed, according to deputy Charles Lebocuq of the department of the Seine. The deputy said he had talked with the general commanding the sector near Crepy-En-Laonnois, where the big guns are stationed. The enemy he declared, is constructing new emplacements.

"The emplacement platform on which the gun slides explains the regularity of the direction of the firing which we undergo. At the moment of firing 10 heavy guns are fired by a special apparatus to camouflage the sound of the big gun so that its location cannot be judged from the sound.

"At the same time thick clouds of smoke from surrounding heights protect the gun from airplane observation." He said.

CHARGE MUTILATION OF NEW AIRPLANES

Cleveland, Ohio, April 27.—Charged with drilling holes in the wings of airplanes ready to be delivered to the government an employe of a manufacturing company was arrested by federal agents last night.

DEPORT AMERICAN FROM EMERALD ISLE

Dublin, April 27.—Disarmed Lynch, Sinn Fein food controller, who has just completed a term of two months' imprisonment for seizing and slaughtering pigs in Ireland will be deported. Lynch is an American.

PROPOSE SUBSTITUTE FOR PUBLICITY PLAN

Publishers Knock Creel in Asking Government to Establish Real News Bureau.

New York, April 27.—As the result of a suggestion made before the American Newspaper Publishers' association on Tuesday by Hopewell Rogers, its retiring president, the organization decided to seek cooperation by the government in establishing a voluntary censorship bureau composed of practical newspaper men.

Mr Rogers in his address alluded to "wasted efforts" in the preparation of government publicity matter and classed the government's publicity department as "incompetent and disloyal

Under the plan proposed today a committee of trained journalists would be selected to gather from the various departments such news as would be of interest to the public and of value in the prosecution of the war, and at the same time eliminate such material as publishers regard as unimportant, thereby saving the time and effort now used in sending out "copy" which reaches waste baskets

BOCHE RESERVE ARMY DEPLETED

Trying to Smash Out Victory Before Supply of Manpower Is Exhausted—Amiens Salient Dangerous.

By Associated Press.

On the French Front in France, (Thursday) April 25.—The more they advance along the road toward Amiens, the more perilous becomes the salient the Germans are forming in the Somme region, especially in view of the fact that the allied reserves are virtually intact and the allied armies are now commanded by a single chief.

The present moment is less favorable to the German plans than when they started their advance on March 21 Then a weak point existed—between the French and British armies—now there is no sensitive part of the line, since the unified command has given the opportunity to make the most practical use of all the allied troops.

The German effort gives more marked signs of becoming a desperate attempt to force a way to Amiens, whatever the cost. This cost hitherto has been very high, for neither the French nor the British are ceding an inch of ground without taking the heaviest toll from the German attacking forces Several additional German divisions have been terribly tried since the offensive was resumed this week, and the enemy possesses only a limited number more with which to continue his overwhelming rushes

From March 21 until today, the Germans have employed approximately 130 divisions, of which 30 have been withdrawn to refill the ranks and have then been sent into the battle for the second time, making the total of divisions in action 160.

About 70 other divisions have not yet been engaged in the battle, but of these a considerable proportion are unfitted to do more than hold quiet sectors. The forward movement must therefore be carried through very quickly, as otherwise the German staff will find itself without further reserves.

MENNONITES HELD TO FEDERAL GRAND JURY

Charged South Dakota Men Tried to Buy Release of Their Draftees.

Sioux Falls, S. D., April 27.—Two leaders of the German-Russian Mennonite colonies in South Dakota have been held for appearance before the next federal grand jury and will have to answer serious charges made against them by military authorities.

The defendants are John J. Wipf, known among the Mennonites as the "boss" of the Rockport settlement, and J. P. Entz, of the Elm Springs colony. They waived their preliminary hearing before United States Commissioner Conway today and were held to the federal grand jury under bonds of $2,000.

The two men were arrested on telegraphic instructions from the United States marshal at Topeka, Kan. One charge is that they attempted to bribe military officers to secure the release of 14 Mennonite young men who were drafted for the national army.

MARRIED WOMEN TO GET THEIR WEALTH

Schmidt, Illegitimate Son of Prussian Junker, Planned Thus to Gain Fortune.

Detroit, Mich., April 26.—One of Helmith Schmidt's living wives arrived here today from New York to try to search one of the murder plants, which she herself succeeded in escaping from.

She left for Royal Oak shortly before noon to look at his property there, hoping to recover equity for the $3,500 which she says he stole from her. A third living wife was believed located in New York today. Schmidt is said to have obtained $1,400 from her.

He appropriated $3,200 from his present wife, who, police think, was to have been his next victim.

An illegitimate child of a Prussian junker, Schmidt was trying to accumulate money to return to Germany and live as an aristocrat, development today indicated.

DROP LIBERTY LOAN POSTERS ON GERMANS

President Wilson Increases His Bond Holdings—Pershing Plans Propaganda.

Washington, D. C., April 26.—President Wilson made a second subscription to the third Liberty loan at a local theater last night, taking $2,000 worth of bonds. He made his first subscription at the same theater two weeks ago.

Some of the third Liberty loan posters sent to General Pershing in France will be dropped from airplanes behind the German lines. A letter from General Pershing to the war loan organization of the treasury received today says:

"The third Libery loan posters have just been received," General Pershing wrote, 'and I desire to say that I consider their use and display among the troops of France a most excellent method of impressing on the A. E. F. the fact that the people back home are standing solidly behind them.

'Some of them dropped from airplanes back of the German front line will help also to impress on such German soldiers and civilians as may see them, the idea that the United States considers the winning of the war a definite necessity and that our people are both ready and willing to make the necessary sacrifices to accomplish this end."

NEW DRAFT BILL IS SENT TO CONFERENCE

House Adopts Senate Resolution Requiring Young Mer of 21 to Register.

Washington, D. C., April 26.—The House late yesterday adopted the Senate resolution for the registration for military service of young men who have reached the age of 21 years since June 4 last. The measure now goes to conference.

The House sustained the military committee in striking out a provision of the bill as it pased the Senate which would exempt from registration those eligibles who have entered medical or divinity schools since June 5 last.

Representative Kahn, of California ranking republican on the military committee, told the House the proposed new registration would place from 500,000 to 700,000 new registrants available for military service. In that connection he recalled that Germany recently called into service its class of 1919, consisting of approximately 550,000 men.

18 FOES DOWNED BY AMERICAN AVIATOR

Major Lufberry Makes Great Record—Baer Now an Ace—U. S. Flyers Make Good.

Paris, April 26—Maj Raul Lufberry, of Wallingford, Conn., destroyed his 18th German airplane Tuesday. Lieut. Paul Baer, of Mobile, Ala., brought down his fifth German machine the same day, thus becoming the latest American ace. Besides the machines he is officialy reported to have destroyed, Lieut. Baer, it is reported, has brought down two other German machines. His seven victories in the air have been scored within the last six weeks.

The semi-official count of victories won by American aviators in the French and American service now shows a total of 40 during the last two months.

DECORATE COLORS OF AMERICAN REGIMENT

Individual Members Who Were in Fight at Seicheprey to Receive French Crosses.

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Army in Lorraine, April 26.—A French general will decorate with the croix de guerre the colors of the American regiment which defeated the five-day attack by picked German troops northwest of Toul two weeks ago.

Individual members also will be decorated. The citations and ceremony are scheduled for Sunday.

This is the first time an American regiment has received the French war cross.

URUGUAY ON POINT OF DECLARING WAR

German Reply to Recent Note Understood to Be Unsatisfactory.

Montevideo, Uruguay, April 26.—It is rumored here today that the German reply to Uruguays inquiry as to whether the German government considered that a state of war existed between Uruguay and Germany, is an unsatisfactory one. It is expected an official statement on this subject will be issued tonight.

OPEN POTASH FIELD.

Washington, D. C., April 26.—Eight square miles of the potash brine zone known as Searle's lake in San Bernardino and Inyo counties, Cala., were opened today by the department of the interior to applications for leases.

VOTE DOWN STRIKE.

Boston, April 26.—The allied Hebrew trades last night voted down a proposal to call a strike May 1, in protest against the conviction of Thomas Mooney in connection with the San Francisco preparedness day bomb explosion.

KAISER BREAKS NAVAL OFFICER

Vice Admiral in Command at Zeebrugge Pays Penalty For Surprise and Defeat.

Amsterdam, April 27.—Vice Admiral Schroeder, the commander at Zeebrugge, according to reports reaching here, will be deprived of his command for being taken by suprise by the British Tuesday.

German newspapers, in commenting on the raid at Zeebrugge, generally take the hint given in the official reports at Berlin and represent the enterprise as having been a failure. Some, however, admit that the attack was made with great boldness.

"The cement laden ships which were sunk close to the coast will not hinder the exits and entrance of the German naval forces," the Koelnische Zeitung says.

The Lokal Anzeiger says that the raiders succeeded in blocking the water way to a great extent, but that the U-boats still are able to leave their harbor as a narrow passage remains.

The Weser Zeitung regards the British version as a fantastic substitution of the wish for the deed and adds:

"It is a success of which we Germans may boast."

The Koelnische Volks Zeitung see in the attack evidence that the existence of a submarine base at Zeebrugge is making "life intolerable for England."

CLAIM COMPLETE SUCCESS.

London, April 27.—The Associated Press learns from a high naval source that the operations at Zebrugge were a complete success, with the result that the Flanders flotilla now will be obliged to resort to the Ostend route in putting to sea, from which the British forces can more easily handle the German ships.

In addition to the damage done the mole and the German guns, material and shipping, the channel has been blocked by the cement ships and a German dredger was destroyed. The loss of the dredger, together with the blocking up of the channel must result in the speedy silting up of the waterway, and it will take at least several weeks to clear the passage.

PLEADS GUILTY TO CONSPIRACY CHARGE

Woman Who Concealed Soldier Husband and Sent Another in His Place Sentenced.

Dubuque, Ia., April 27.—Judge Henry T. Reed today sentenced Mrs. Clifford Brown of Waterloo to six months imprisonment in the Black Hawk county jail, following her plea of guilty to a charge of conspiracy.

Mrs. Brown, according to her confession, conspired to conceal her husband, an army deserter.

Brown came home on a furlough, said. Eugene La Beeres of Cedar Rapids, donned Brown's uniform and returned to camp, impersonating Brown.

The deception was discovered shortly afterward and all three were arrested. Brown has been court martialed and La Beeres interned.

WOUNDED S. DAKOTAN IS WIDELY KNOWN

Chester W. Ruth a Newspaper Man and College Orator of Ability.

Mitchell, S. D., April 27.—Chester W. Ruth, formerly a Mitchell newspaper man and prominent in South Dakota college forensic circles, has been wounded in France, a member of the United States marine corps. News of his injuries was reported last night in Washington.

Mr. Ruth represented Dakota Wesleyan university, of Mitchll, in several debating and oratorical events and won high honors. He was editor of the Phreno-Cosmian, the college paper, and, upon the completion of his college course entered newspaper work. A year ago he went to Cleveland and was in newspaper work in that city when he enlisted in the marine corps.

Just before his enlistment Mr. Ruth was married to Miss Laura Easton, of Wessington Springs, S. D. Mrs. Ruth is now engaged in government work at Washington, D. C. A brother, George Ruth, also is a member of the marine corps and is in France. Mr. Ruth's father, R. E. Ruth, now deceased was one of the most prominent traveling men in South Dakota for many years.

OPEN ASH-PORT BLAMED FOR SINKING OF LINER

New York, April 27.—An ash port, carelessly left open, was believed today to have flooded the American liner St. Paul, sinking her at her pier. However, so far no official announcement as to the cause of the accident, which probably cost three lives, has been made. Twenty men of the 350 aboard were injured.

Work of raising the vessel was progressing rapidly today. Meanwhile, investigation definitely to place the responsibility for the sinking was conducted by army men.

12 MEN ARE INDICTED FOR PART IN LYNCHING

Edwardsville, Ill., April 26.—Seven men were being sought today on indictments charging murder in connection with the lynching of Robert Praeger at Collinsville, three weeks ago. Five of 12 indicted are in jail here. Four Collinsville policemen were charged with malfeasance for failure to interfere with the mob.

The five under arrest are Joseph Riegel, Westerly Beaver, William Brockmeier, Enid Elmore and Richard Dukes.

Thirty-seven witnesses were named by the grand jury, including 18-year-old Maida Gilmore, whose testimony was said to have involved her father.

A KING'S PALACE FOR A WAREHOUSE

How much the King of Italy appreciates the American Red Cross is indicated by his action in turning over a part of his palace at Genoa to be used as a warehouse for Red Cross supplies.

The Red Cross has been shipping millions of dollars worth of supplies for refugees and the families of soldiers into Italy. Large storage space was needed and the King solved the difficulty so far as Genoa was concerned.

The royal palace now being used as a Red Cross warehouse is a great stone building crowning one of the steep hills which rise from the harbor. It has two large wings, and there are thirteen rooms which the Red Cross may use.

The Red Cross representatives have been sent into every section of Italy to remain and work among the people They will see to it that the families of Italian soldiers do not suffer while the men are at the front. This is the same kind of work behind the lines which has been so successful in France and Belgium.

With the Austrians and Germans pounding at the North, and possibly for a time making advances that turn Italian peasants out of their homes, the Red Cross will have need of all its resources to handle the refugees. The result in keeping up the spirits of the people and the soldiers will be worth infinitely more than the mere money cost.

We sometimes hear people say that they do not see anything in the Bible about the "Second Blessing." We agree with them that the term "Second Blessing" does not appear in God's Word, but it's equivalent appears many, many times. For an example, take the blind man at Bethsaida. Jesus took him out of the city, spit in his eyes, and put his hands on them, and then asked him if he saw ought. This poor man opened his eyes for the first time in life and saw men as trees walking. Now reader, I consider this a big blessing, even if the men did look as trees to him it was a great blessing that he could see at all. But listen, Jesus put his hands upon his eyes the second time and made him look up, and he was restored, and saw every man clearly. Surely this was another and great blessing. Whether we choose to call this the "Second Blessing," or not, the fact remains that this man received two definite and separate experiences. Read it for yourself, in Mark's gospel, 8:22-26. For another good illustration of the teaching of the second work of grace is in Acts 2:38. Peter is urging the people to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. This is conversion and the first blessing. But Peter did not stop here. He preached holiness as holiness really is. He said in the same verse, "And ye (that is after you have repented) shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." If there isn't two distinct blessings taught in this verse we are sadly mistaken, and we cannot be mistaken in this since we are enjoying the two experiences in our own heart, given unto us by the Holy Ghost. Yes, there are many passages of Scripture that teach two works of grace and many ups and downs in the life of the converted to teach them their need of holiness.

There was an official on one of our great railroads who was retired at seventy. "He'll die now," said his friends kindly. But he didn't. Instead, he became interested in the wild flowers, and now he is too busy in looking for the ram's head orchid, and trying to find a new station for the hart's tongue fern, and tramping around in the woods and fields in all kinds of weather, even to think of dying. Anyway, he wouldn't have time until he's finished his monograph on the willows of the United States.—Lippincott's.

Defining Candor.

Candor is telling the other fellow something about himself that makes him sore at you.—Milwaukee Free Press.

Original Suggestion.

A very pretty way of renewing old furniture in a child's room is to paint it robin's egg blue enamel. When dry, stick on underneath each keyhole drawers of dresser or chiffonier small pink-tinted designs of roses, etc. (which one finds on old valentines, postals, etc.) and when well dried on in place give them a light coat of shellac. The effect is very pretty.

Heredity.

Who knows what seeds each man sows on earth leaves behind him, what are only destined to come up after his death? Who can say by what mysterious bond a man's fate is linked up with his children's, his descendants', how his yearnings are reflected in them, and how they are punished for his errors?—Ivan Turgenief.

Truth About Royalty.

The first king was no more than a fortunate soldier.—Voltaire.

Pearls and Rubies.

Pearls may be found nearly anywhere in waters inhabited by oysters or mussels. Some of Canada's fresh water pearls have a fairly high value. The Mississippi has also yielded valuable pearls. Rubies have usually come from the East—India or Ceylon—though South America has furnished some good specimens. Oil wells are really excavations into underlying lakes or "fields" of petroleum, generally found on this continent just above the Trenton limestone formation.

Duty of Charitable.

We give most worthily when we assume the worthy use of our gifts. The idle flinging of a coin to an undeserving beggar is not true benevolence; it is a cheap and easy way of buying relief to our own feelings. So to give to any cause which does not wisely and economically expend its receipts is foolish charity. In a word, it is as much a part of a giver's duty to examine financial reports as it is to read appeals for aid.

Jewelry, Perhaps.

A western court has just decided that a wooden leg is "wearing apparel." Under what classification would it put a bone head?—Puck.

SERMON ON PATRIOTISM

By a 1,000 Per Cent American.

Here is a sermon on patriotism. It comes to Chicago from Sturgeon Bay, Wis. The standard of patriotism preached in this sermon is so much above the patriotism of many thousands of men and women in the Seventh reserve district that the Liberty loan executive committee is sending the story broadcast throughout the district in the hope of rousing a spirit of emulation in the breasts of all citizens, both naturalized and native born. Were every man in the Chicago district to attain the standard of Demosthenes of Sturgeon Bay, Wis., it is pointed out, the whole $3,000,000,000 would be subscribed in this one district alone.

Demosthenes, a 1,000 per cent American, has the following message for Uncle Sam:

"You can borrow anything and everything I have."

And this is not his message alone. It is also the message of his two brothers—Antoneos and Stavros. Their surname is Anagnostopoulos, and tney conduct a small candy store in Sturgeon Bay, Wis. Let Demosthenes Anagnostopoulos do the rest of the talking:

"We boys didn't have anything when we came to this country. My brothers and I were very poor in the old country. All we have we made here. This country has given us great opportunity. Whatever we have we owe to this country.

"We don't consider that we have done anything beyond a fair share in taking $3,000 worth of Third Liberty loan bonds. We took $1,600 of the second loan, and our allotment for the third loan, figured by the apppraisal committee on the basis of assessed valuation of property, was $100 each, or $300 for the three of us. But as we had the money and we knew that Uncle Sam wanted to raise much money for the war, we decided to let him have all our savings. We know that it is a safe investment, and we don't consider that we have been particularly patriotic in lending this amount to the government.

"We talked it over and we decided that we owed this country something—yes, everything—and we felt the least we could do would be to lend money to the government.

"'Tony' is in the draft and probably will go to one of the cantonments on the next call for soldiers. He is glad to go and fight for his country. We—Stavros and myself—are glad to have him go, and if we are called, we, too, will be glad to go.

"We don't consider that we are entitled to be known as patriots for lending our money to the government. The security is so good, the interest is so high, the investment is so excellent in every way, that we would have been glad to take advantage of the opportunity even if the best country in the world had not been at war and in need of money.

"In the sixteen years we have lived here we have prospered. We know that America gives every industrious man a splendid opportunity. We want that opportunity continued. That is the reason we subscribed."

He Wants to Win This War. Do You?

A father here in a little Illinois town received a cablegram the other day from General Pershing, announcing the death of his two sons over there, "killed in action." He went out and sold his home and bought Liberty bonds. "I'm the only one left now and I'll rent a room for myself," was his only comment.

We Can't Starve Germany; Buy Bonds.

Whatever hopes we had that Germany could be starved into submission have been dispelled by the Russian debacle. Only the defeat of the German military machine on the west front can end this war. It is up to the United States. Support your government with your money, or we shall fail. Invest in Liberty bonds.

CITES SOLDIERS' PATRIOTISM.

Maj. Gen. Getty Points to Boys Who Subscribe for Liberty Bonds.

By BRIG. GEN. ROBERT N. GETTY, [Commandant at Camp Dodge, Iowa.]

What does the real soldier of today think of the Liberty loan? Just as he thinks of every other measure adopted by his government to put a spoke in the wheels of the machine that will carry him to victory. His enthusiasm can be explained best by depicting the manner in which he offered his pay down to the last few pennies to his government when the last Liberty loan was launched.

Many of the soldiers allotted so much of their pay that the war department found it necessary to authorize the discontinuance of some of these allotments that the soldier might have a small amount left for his personal use.

Our American soldier is the personification of patriotism. He is a living example of what his brothers back home would do well to imitate if their loudly proclaimed desires to help the cause for humanity's sake are sincere. He is giving up his family, his home interests, offering his life, and is now more than willing that his monthly pay should revert to the coffers of his country if it will materially assist in winning the war. He is giving his all, and willingly. He only asks for a chance to fight and that his brothers who cannot bear arms will stand back of him.

I am proud of these men and the fervor and spirit they display. It will be a great honor when that day arrives to lead them into battle, knowing they who have given everything will fight to the last man. It is to be regretted that many a soldier before induction into the service burdened himself with heavy financial obligations that his dependents might be provided for during his absence. I only wish that the small, abject faction of the civilian element that is bringing pressure to bear upon the already overburdened soldier and his family because of these same obligations could but become imbued with some of the spirit of self-sacrifice and patriotism evinced by the men on the firing line.

Perenna took the card from the tray and read M. Desmalions' name. He went to the window, opened it and, with the aid of the overhead mirror, looked into the Place du Palais-Bourbon. Half a dozen men were walking about. He recognized them. They were his usual watchers, those whom he had got rid of on the evening before and who had come to resume their observation.

"No others?" he said to himself. "Come, we have nothing to fear, and the prefect of police has none but the best intentions toward me. It was what I expected; and I think that I was well advised to save his life."

M. Desmalions entered without a word. All that he did was to bend his head slightly, with a movement that might be taken for a bow. As for Weber, who was with him, he did not even give himself the trouble to disguise his feelings toward such a man as Perenna.

Don Luis took no direct notice of this attitude, but, in revenge, ostentatiously omitted to push forward more than one chair. M. Desmalions, however, preferred to walk about the room, with his hands behind his back, as if to continue his reflections before speaking.

The silence was prolonged. Don Luis waited patiently. Then, suddenly, the prefect stopped and said:

"When you left the Boulevard Richard-Wallace, monsieur, did you go straight home?"

Don Luis did not demur to this cross examining manner and answered:

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Here, to your study?"

"Here, to my study."

M. Desmalions paused and then went on:

"I left 30 or 40 minutes after you and drove to the police office in my car. There I received this express letter. Read it. You will see that it was handed in at the Bourse at 9:30."

Don Luis took the letter and read the following words, written in capital letters:

This is to inform you that Gaston Sauverand, after making his escape, rejoined his accomplice Perenna, who, as you know, is none other than Arsene Lupin. Arsene Lupin gave you Sauverand's address in order to get rid of him and to receive the Mornington inheritance. They were reconciled this morning, and Arsene Lupin suggested a safe hiding place to Sauverand. It is easy to prove their meeting and their complicity. Sauverand handed Lupin the half of the walking stick which he had carried away unawares. You will find it under the cushions of a sofa standing between the two windows of Perenna's study.

Don Luis shrugged his shoulders. The letter was absurd; for he had not once left his study. He folded it up quietly and handed it to the prefect of police without comment. He was resolved to let M. Desmalions take the initiative in the conversation.

The prefect asked:

"What is your reply to the accusation?"

"None, Monsieur le Prefet."

"Still, it is quite plain and easy to prove or disprove."

"Very easy, indede, Monsieur le Prefet; the sofa is there, between the windows."

M. Desmalions waited two or three seconds and then walked to the sofa and moved the cushions. Under one of them lay the handle end of the walking stick.

Don Luis could not repress a gesture of amazement and anger. He had not for a second contemplated the possibility of such a miracle; and it took him unawares. However, he mastered himself. After all, there was nothing to prove that this half of a walking stick was really that which had been seen in Gaston Sauverand's hands and which Sauverand had carried away by mistake.

"I have the other half on me," said the prefect of police, replying to the unspoken objection. "Deputy Chief Weber himself picked it up on the Boulevard Richard-Wallace. Here it is."

He produced it from the inside pocket of his overcoat and tried it. The ends of the two pieces fitted exactly.

There was a fresh pause. Perenna was confused, as were those, invariably, upon whom he himself used to inflict this kind of defeat and humiliation. He could not get over it. By what prodigy had Gaston Sauverand managed, in that short space of 20 minutes, to enter the house and make his way into this room? Even the theory of an accomplice living in the house did not do much to make the phenomenon easier to understand.

"It upsets all my calculations," he thought, "and I shall have to go through the mill this time. I was able to baffle Mme. Fauville's accusation and to foil the trick of the turquoise. But M. Desmalions will never admit that this is a similar attempt and that Gaston Sauverand has tried, as Marie Fauville did, to get me out of the way by compromising me and procuring my arrest."

"Well," exclaimed M. Desmalions impatiently, "answer! Defend yourself!"

"No, Monsieur le Prefet, it is not for me to defend myself."

M. Desmalions stamped his foot and growled:

"In that case * * * in that case * * * since you confess * * * since——"

He put his hand on the latch of the window, ready to open it. A whistle and the detectives would burst in and all would be over.

"Shall I have your inspectors called, Monsieur le Prefet?" asked Don Luis.

M. Desmalions did not reply. He let go the window latch and started walking about the room again. And, suddenly, while Perenna was wondering why he still hesitated, for the second time the prefect planted himself in front of him, and said:

"And suppose I looked upon the incident of the walking stick as not having occurred, or, rather, as an incident which, while doubtless proving the treachery of your servants, is not able to compromise yourself? Suppose I took only the services which you have already rendered us into consideration? In a word, suppose I left you free?"

Perenna could not help smiling. Notwithstanding the affair of the walking stick and though appearances were all against him, at the moment when everything seemed to be going wrong, things were taking the course which he had phophesied from the start, and which he had mentioned to Mazeroux during the inquiry on the Boulevard Suchet. They wanted him.

"Free?" he asked. "No more supervision? Nobody shadowing my movements?"

"Nobody."

"And what if the press campaign around my name continues, if the papers succeed, by means of certain pieces of tittle tattle, of certain coincidences, in creating a public outery, if they call for measures against me?"

"Those measures shall not be taken."

"Then I have nothing to fear?"

"Nothing."

"Will M. Weber abandon his prejudices against me?"

"At any rate, he will act as though he did, won't you, Weber?"

The deputy chief uttered a few grunts which might be taken as an expression of assent; and Don Luis at once exclaimed:

"In that case, Monsieur le Prefet, I am sure of gaining the victory and of gaining it in accordance with the wishes and requirements of the authorities."

And so, by a sudden change in the situation, after a series of exceptional circumstances, the police themselves, bowing before Don Luis Perenna's superior qualities of mind, acknowledging all that he had already done and foreseeing all that he would be able to do, decided to back him up, begging for his assistance, and offering him, so to speak, the command of affairs.

It was a flattering compliment. Was it addressed only to Don Luis Perenna? And had Lupin, the terrible, undaunted Lupin, no right to claim his share? Was it possible to believe that M. Desmalions, in his heart of hearts, did not admit the identity of the two persons?

Nothing in the prefect's attitude gave any clue to his secret thoughts. He was suggesting to Don Luis Perenna one of those compacts which the police are often obliged to conclude in order to gain their ends. The compact was concluded, and no more was said upon the subject.

"Do you want any particulars of me?" asked the prefect of police.

"Yes, Monsieur le Prefet. The papers spoke of a notebook found in poor Inspector Verot's pocket. Did the notebook contain a clue of any kind?"

"No. Personal notes, lists of disbursements, that's all. Wait, I was forgetting, there was a photograph of a woman, about which I have not yet been able to obtain the least information. Besides, I don't suppose that it bears upon the case and I have not sent it to the newspapers. Look, here it is."

Perenna took the photograph which the prefect handed him and gave a start that did not escape M. Desmalions' eye.

"Do you know the lady?"

"No. No, Monsieur le Prefet. I thought I did; but no, there's merely a resemblance—a family likeness, which I will verify if you can leave the photograph with me till this evening."

"Till this evening, yes. When you have done with it, give it back to Sergeant Mazeroux, whom I will order to work in concert with you in everything that relates to the Mornington case."

The interview was now over. The prefect went away. Don Luis saw him to the door. As M. Desmalions was about to go down the steps, he turned and said simply:

"You saved my life this morning. But for you, that scoundrel Sauverand——"

"Oh, Monsieur le Prefet!" said Don Luis, modestly protesting.

"Yes, I know, you are in the habit of doing that sort of thing. All the same, you must accept my thanks."

And the prefect of police made a bow such as he would really have made to Don Luis Perenna, the Spanish noble, the hero of the Foreign legion. As for Weber, he put his two hands in his pockets, walked past with the look of a muzzled mastiff, and gave his enemy a glance of fierce hatred.

"By Jupiter!" thought Don Luis. "There's a fellow who won't miss me when he gets a chance to shoot!"

Looking through a window, he saw M. Desmalion's motor car drive off. The detectives fell in behind the deputy chief and left the Place du Palais-Bourbon. The siege was raised.

"And now to work!" said Don Luis. "My hands are free, and we shall make things hum."

He called the butler.

"Serve lunch; and ask Mlle. Levasseur to come and speak to me immediately after."

He went to the dining room and sat down, placing on the table the photograph which M. Desmalions had left behind; and, bending over it, he examined it atentively. It was a little faded, a little worn, as photographs have a tendency to become when they lie about in pocket books or among papers; but the picture was quite clear. It was the radiant picture of a young woman in evening dress, with bare arms and shoulders, with flowers and leaves in her hair and a smile upon her face.

"Mlle. Levasseur, Mlle. Levasseur," he said. "Is it possible!"

In a corner was a half obliterated and hardly visible signature. He made out, "Florence," the girl's name, no doubt. And he repeated:

"Mlle. Levasseur, Florence Levasseur. How did her photograph come to be in Inspector Verot's pocketbook? And what is the connection between this adventure and the reader of the Hungarian count from whom I took over the house?"

He remembered the incident of the iron curtain. He remembered the article in the Echo de France, an article aimed against him, of which he had found the rough draft in his own courtyard. And, above all, he thought of the problem of that broken walking stick conveyed into his study.

And, while his mind was striving to read these events clearly, while he tried to settle the part played by Mlle. Levasseur, his eyes remained fixed upon the photograph and he gazed absent mindedly at the pretty lines of the mouth, the charming smile, the graceful curve of the neck, the admirable sweep of the shoulders.

The door opened suddenly and Mlle. Levasseur burst into the room. Perenna, who had dismissed the butler, was raising to his lips a glass of water which he had just filled for himself. She sprang forward, seized his arm, snatched the glass from him and flung it on the carpet, where it smashed to pieces.

"Have you drunk any of it? Have you drunk any of it?" she gasped, in a choking voice.

He replied:

"No, not yet. Why?"

She stammered:

"The water in that bottle * * * the water in that bottle——"

"Well?"

"It's poisoned!"

He leapt from his chair, and, in his turn, gripped her arm fiercely:

"What's that? Poisoned! Are you certain? Speak!"

In spite of his usual self control, he was this time thoroughly alarmed. Knowing the terrible effects of the poison employed by the miscreants whom he was attacking, recalling the corpse of Inspector Verot, the corpses of Hippolyte Fauville and his son, he know that, trained though he was to resist comparatively large doses of poison, he could not have escaped the deadly action of this. It was a poison that did not forgive, that killed, surely and fatally.

The girl was silent. He raised his voice in command:

"Answer me! Are you certain?"

"No * * * It was an idea that entered my head—a presentiment * * * certain coincidences——"

It was as though she regretted her words and now tried to withdraw them.

"Come, come," he cried, "I want to know the truth: You're not certain that the water in this bottle is poisoned?"

"No * * * it's possible——"

"Still, just now——"

"I thought so. But no * * * no!"

"It's easy to make sure," said Perenna, putting out his hand for the water bottle.

She was quicker than he, seized it and, with one blow, broke it against the table.

"What are you doing?" he said agrily.

"I made a mistake. And so there is no need to attach any importance——"

Don Luis hurriedly left the dining room. By his orders, the water which he drank was drawn from a filter that stood in a pantry at the end of the passage leading from the dining room to the kitchens and beyond. He ran to it and took from a shelf a bowl which he filled with water from the filter. Then, continuing to follow the passage, which at this spot branched off toward the yard, he called Mirza, the puppy, who was playing by the stables.

"Here," he said, putting the bowl in front of her.

The puppy began to drink. But she stopped almost at once and stood motionless, with her paws tense and stiff. A shiver passed through the little body. The dog gave a hoarse groan, spun round two or three times, and fell.

"She's dead," he said, after touching the animal.

Mlle. Levasseur had joined him. He turned to her and rapped out.

"You were right about the poison—and you knew it. How did you know it?"

All out of breath, she checked the beating of her heart and answered:

"I saw the other puppy drinking in the pantry. She's dead. I told the coachman and the chauffeur. They're over there, in the stable. And I ran to warn you."

"In that case, there was no doubt about it. Why did you say that you were not certain that the water was poisoned, when——"

The chauffeur and the coachman were coming out of the stables. Leading the girl away, Perenna said:

"We must talk about this. We will go to your rooms."

They went back to the bend in the passage. Near the pantry where the filter was, another passage ran, ending in a flight of three steps, with a door at the top of the steps. Perenna opened this door. It was the entrance to the rooms occupied by Mlle. Levasseur. They went into a sitting room.

Don Luis closed the entrance door and the door of the sitting room.

"And now," he said, in a resolute tone, "you and I will have an explanation."

Preparing For a Harvest.

From the Youth's Companion.

The Pitsburgh Dispatch tells a story with a moral that should be considered by every young woman who is in the habit of choosing that particularly unfortunate kind of hat that the young woman in the street car wore. The hat was trimmed with artificial oats, which nodded and trembled, persistently tickling the ear of the man seated next to her. He stood it in silence for some time; then he ostentatiously took a huge pocketknife out of his pocket and began to sharpen it on the sole of his boot.

"Whatever are you g-going to d-d-do?" cried the girl.

"Don't worry, miss!" said the man, testing the blade on his thumb. "But the next time as them oats gets in my ear there's going to be a harvest."

EXPLODES THEORY OF WISDOM OF ANTS

Stockholm, (by mail.)—The ant has been greatly overrated, in the opinion of Rich Ege, a Swedish naturalist. Solomon set the fashion with his famous admonition to the sluggard, and the ant has been living under false pretenses ever since. For, as a matter of fact, she is a hopeless chucklehead, and to consider her ways is no way to become wise.

Mark Twain arrived at this conclusion many years ago, and science now joins hands with him in the person of Mr. Ege, who publishes the results of a series of experiments with ants. He disposes first of the insect's supposed uncanny power to recognise other tenants of its own anthill. Mr. Ege washed ants in ether, dipped them in liquid gained by pressing a number of ants from another hill, and put them back among their own friends, who promptly fell upon them and ejected them. He took ants 50 times larger than the inhabitants of a certain antuill, washed them and treated them in a liquid pressed from ants of that hill, and then placed them in it. The Lilliputian insects did not recognise the giants as invaders. Mr. Ege concludes, therefore, that the supposed remarkably sharp recognitional powers of the insects are simply a matter of scent and inherited reflexes.

Ants removed from familiar paths blunder blindly along, with nonsense of distance or direction, until they strike a trial made by themselves or other ants. In many tests made by Mr. Ege the insects disclosed "no more intelligence than is to be found in the digestive processes of human beings." In other words, he found nearly all their acts are but movements by reflexes, unconnected with intelligence.

Qualifications For a Good Husband.

From the London Telegraph.

What sort of people will you choose for your friends, at what will you draw the line when it comes to choosing a husband, what are faults which in your family are to be anathema, by what standards will you bring up your boys and girls to judge their world, their friends and arrange their marriages—everybody consciously to make some sort of system of allowances.

You remember that when criticism was being passed on Scott's heroes, Thackeray stood up for them with the declaration that they were just such young men as any father would like his daughters to marry. Here is a useful illustration. The hero in a Waverly novel, a sturdy, honest, but rather colorless ineffectual young fellow, would you rather encourage him than a more erratic, more brilliant type? Probably you would. It is at least a defensible choice. But if you have gone through the world with your eyes open you will agree that these steady going, blameless young men are not as husbands or anything else all that is admirable. They will never commit any very dreadful offense, it is agreed, but it is too likely they will become rather dull, rather cold, rather hard and for all you can tell rather mean and rather vulgar. The scapegrace, to be sure, may be all that and worse. But is it merely a sentimental weakness that makes us think kindly of the lad who is not always correct and respectable? The most rigid moralist ought to allow that there is more hope of salvation for a man who sometimes loses his head in a generous impulse or sometimes risks his fortunes on an off chance than for one who always plays for safety.

The good mother naturally replies that she would rather her son made a friend and her daughter a husband of the safe man. They may not be magnificently happy in the choice, but at least they will not be ruined. There speaks the wisdom of age, or at least of middle age, but it is not necessarily right. We all think we know what is best for other people. But we were just as sure of that at 20 as now we are at 50 and perhaps we were as right then as now. Obviously there is no general rule in the matter. Some folks are born to be happiest when nothing happens to them. Some will be miserable unless they have an exciting career. The moralist rightly deplores the old nonsense about everybody sowing wild oats and reformed rakes making the best husbands But perhaps the worldly wise when they make the addendum that people who never go wrong can never go right are not merely amusing themselves.

War.

From Milestones.

The young officer was very cocky in his new uniform, so much so that he failed to see the chair in his path. His wife came running in to find him nursing a bruised shin.

"Oh, George," she cried. "That's just too bad. Does it hurt terribly?"

"Go away, woman," he insisted, grandly "What do you know of war?"

No Lawyer Needed.

From the Oregon Journal.

An Atlanta lawyer tells of a newly qualified judge in one of the towns of the south who was trying one of his first criminal cases. The prisoner was an old negro charged with robbing a hencoop. He had been in court before on a similar charge and was then acquitted.

"Well, Henry," observed the judge, "I see you're in trouble again."

"Yessuh," replied the negro. "De las' time, Jedge, you rec-lect, you was mah lawyuh."

"Where is your lawyer this time?"

"I ain't got no lawyer dis time," said Henry. "Ah's gwine to tell de troof."

Whom the Gods Love.

"The Flower of England Perished."
Shall we then downcast fare with mournful eyes,
Wear veils of Cyprus, swathe ourselves in black,
Because those high hearted venturers came not back
To homely solace, from their great emprise?
Shall we, made small by sorrow, send regret
To dog their radiant court, who now are sped
On errands of immortality and fled
Beyond our finitude of toil and fret?

Shall we not rather, knowing them so far
From all that racks us—safe from grief and time's
Intolerable familiarities
With the shuddering flesh and spirit—like a star
Of gladness set their memory that sublimes
All sorrow, in our night of agonies.

For could they choose, be sure they'd not return!
Nor love, nor fame could lure them who have known
The ravishment of the spirit gladly blown
By winds of perilous purpose to the bourne
Of wild, exultant, ultimate escape,
From beggaring Life and Death's largess have taken,
In glory of youth, in splendor of wills unshaken,
These rode down time and left Old Age a-gape.

Think you they would come back, they who have wrung
The honey and gall from life in one great hour?
Who have been given the Freedom of God's City?
Triumphant be their dirge who were the flower
Of mourning England—shame them not with pity.
Whom the Gods love die young!—die young!—die young!—die young!

BEAUTIFUL GRAVES OF LUSITANIA V

Cunard Steamboat Co Keeps Them in Condition To Erect Monument

Queenstown, (by mail).—We have just finished a month's tidying up the Lusitania cemetery where 147 of the Lusitania dead are buried. They have converted the mounds of earth which mark the graves of the victims into the neat and best kept part of the village ing ground at the top of the cli

A neat sign placed over the of the three trench graves visitors that the improvements made at the direction of the Steamship company, and that company has engaged a Cork firm of deners permanently to keep and trees trimmed and the watered.

The failure of the town c care for the graves made it for the Cunard company to do time ago the Associated Press pondent visited the spot and prised to find grass a foot high the cemetery. His account of dent led a high official of the line to make an inspection He to his headquarters in Liverpool firming the account of the n the graves. The company acted and the result is that, while two ago it was almost impossible casual visitor to distinguish the tania graves from any others, arrest immediate attention.

The earth around the graves banked up two feet above the the ground and carefully sodded teen pine trees have been planted the edges, and a space in the c adorned with beds of hardy flow gardner from Cork makes a visit to the graves.

After the war it is proposed t a monument on the site. This done by the steamship company operation with the British gov and a plot of ground has been r for this purpose.

There are three trenches, the of which contains 70 bodies, the 50 and the third 27. The plot memorial is between the secon third trenches. A few small stones, sent by relatives of the tims, now form the only memor be found about the spot

The graves are seldonm vi the villagers. They say they shun because they recall the terrible enacted nearly three years ago. of the latest visitors was the A can consul here, Charles M. Hath jr., who escorted a group of Am naval officers now on duty in adj waters.

The town hall in Queenstown, was used as a morgue for the vi was for two years afterwards de by the villagers who had, for ge tions before used it as a market It was said to be "haunted" a good luck was expected from transaction completed there. D the last few weeks the villagers begun to use it again, but only af squad of painters and decorators transformed its gloomy interior such a cheerful place that the chants, despite their superstitions coaxed back.

Animals' Ears.

From Our Dumb Animals.

If you ever see a rabbit running its ears and you will see that they laid back flat on its neck That a chance position, nor is it due weight of the ears; it is a provis nature for the little animal's prote It is one of the hunted, you see, one of the hunters.

It is different with the fox and wolf; their ears as they run are sharply forward, for they are of hunters. As the rabbit must run to escape danger, its enemies are behind it, and therefore nature has en it large ears to catch every sound the habit of throwing them back, be its danger comes from that direction the fox and the wolf must run after prey, nature has given them the ha thrusting their ears forward

Just how careful nature is in these ters and how she suits conditions to roundings may be seen in the jack of the western prairies. It is the na prey of the wolf, and, as it is in danger than our rabbits are, its ears been made a good deal larger and to the better to hear the sounds ma its enemy.

"What was the narrowest escape ever had?" the beautiful girl asked she and the bronzed colonel were together.

"I don't suppose you'll believe it I you," he replied.

"Of course I will.—Why shouldn't I'm dying to hear all about it. W while you were stationed in the P pines?"

WARSAW SLAVE MARKET.

From the Chicago Post.

There appeared recently on the walls of Warsaw the following proclamation:

"The government suggests that mothers having children should send them to Germany to be brought up and educated. Mothers who are willing to make this arrangement will receive the sum of 150 marks for a boy and 100 marks for a girl. No other aid will be given."

The proclamation was signed by Governor General Von Beseler.

Germany is suffering a huge drainage in population. The death rate far exceeds the birth rate, the former having risen tremendously and the latter declined in alarming proportion. This explains the brutal bid to Polish motherhood for its children.

A boy is worth 50 marks more than a girl to Germany, because a boy can be made a soldier in time, while a girl can be only a mother. The cool commercialism of this discrimination in price stamps the plan for what it is—a shameless traffic in human flesh. Our only wonder is that a flat rate should be offered rather than one based on weight, physical condition and age.

Note the cruel lash of the final sentence: "No other aid will be given." In plain words, "If you will not sell your children, then you and they may starve to death."

This is Germany.

High Cattle Prices Accompany High Beef Prices

If consumers are to pay less for beef, live-stock raisers naturally will receive less for cattle.

If farmers are paid more for live stock, consumers will necessarily pay more for meat.

Swift & Company pays for cattle approximately 90 per cent of the price received for beef and by-products. The remaining 10 per cent pays for dressing, freight to market, operation of distributing houses, and in most cases, delivery to the retailer. Net profits also have to come out of this 10 per cent.

This margin cannot be squeezed arbitrarily without danger of crippling the only effective means of performing the complex service of converting cattle into meat and distributing this meat to the fighting forces and to consumers.

Swift & Company's net profit on beef during 1917 was only ¼ of a cent per pound. On all products, it was a little less than four cents on each dollar of sales. Complete elimination of these profits would not affect appreciably retail prices of meat, or farm prices of live stock.

Swift & Company will be glad to co-operate in devising methods that will improve conditions in the meat and live stock industry.

FEW TYPES OF "WOBBLIES" ON TRIAL.

Above—"Red" Doran (left) and "Big Bill" Haywood. Center—Carl Ahlteen. Below—Ben Fletcher (left) and James Keenan.

These sketches show types of the 112 members of the I. W. W. recently haled before Judge Landis of Chicago on charges of disloyalty. Many other kindred indictments have been brought against them. "Big Bill" Haywood is the recognized brains of the organization and the leader of all the "Wobblies." Carl Athleen is the ex-editor of the suppressed "alarm," and "Red" Doran as the Prophet in Overalls," is a journeyman evangelist. Fletcher is the only negro of the "Wobblies" on trial and James Keenan is a type of the many defendants

Germany's View of Slavs.

George Bernard, in the Berlin Vossische Zeitung.

We still hold to the view that there can be no question of permanent chaos and dissolution in Russia. The correctness of this view finds support in the fact that the Ukrainians also do not believe in such a development Despite all the recent rumors spread in Germany, the Ukrainians are still firm in their resolve to form a federal republic with the rest of Russia after the fall of bolshevist regime. If this hope is fulfilled then all the other Russian republics which have been formed during the bolshevist era will crystallize round this kernel Thus there will be a large and powerful Russia for all time. Those who accept this view must reach the logical conclusion not to impose any conditions for future peace such as might permanently cloud the relation between the new Russia and Germany. One may submit to the necessity of military guarantees, but one must unhesitatingly reject any forcible accession of territory in excess of this.

It is, of course, quite another matter if we adopt the view of many people in Germany who believe in the permanent breakup of Russia. Then arises the danger of independent frontier states, with which Germany must establish close contact, especially if one believes in the possibility of their being influenced by England. In all this, it is true, one must never overlook the fact that the future fate of Russia, and also the relation of Japan to Russia and Germany, lie in our hands. This becomes very clear when we consider the general peace congress and the role which England will play there. Germany may find very considerable surprises there unless she secures the alliance of the future Russian government at the green table against England. What enters the congress hall we shall know, but who shall prophesy what will finally come out of it?

Would Use Niagara Power.

Charles P Steinmetz, in the Electrical World.

The unprecedented and acute shortage of power which now confronts us and threatens seriously to interfere with the efficient prosecution of the war again turns our eyes to Niagara, where water capable of producing millions of kilowatts rushes uselessly over the cliffs.

In the dicussion of the development of Niagara's power versus the preservation of the natural beauty of the falls two features have to be recognized.

The falls are doomed in any case, and sooner or later, with the increasing power demand of modern civilization and increasing shortness of power, self preservation will force us to use Niagara to the fullest extent that is, let the falls run dry

It is too late to preserve the natural beauty of the falls. That could have been done 100 years ago, but not now, when there is no place at or around the cataract where one's sense for Nature's wild beauty is not offended by the sight of some ugly modern hotel, some tower or steel bridge

Suppose we permit the complete development of Niagara's 10,000,000 kilowatts more or less, for electrical purposes, let the falls run dry, but on every holiday and Sunday have the power houses shut down, the power consumption reduced to the minimum possible—say 10 per cent of the full capacity—and so have the falls running again in their ancient grandeur We could thus satisfy the demands of modern industry and at the same time satisfy the lovers of nature, and, more than that, we would then see a sight which can be seen nowhere else in the world—the starting of the falls, when on Sunday morning the water would first begin to trickle over the bare cliffs and then gradually rise to be the giant falls of old.

Soiled Germany.

From the New York Volkszeitung

"Let us become honest again!" calls in an article the "Deutsche Zeitung" (Berlin). The paper says that German bureaucracy of all ranks is in danger of losing its reputation and honor You cannot post a trunk without the apprehension that it will be robbed. The German imperial post office is a very unsafe depository, there is hardly an honest commercial class in existence in Germany. Profiteering flourishes worse than ever. Every German is compelled to become a contrabandist and hoarder. It further says: "The whole German people is from top to bottom soiled with dishonesty to such an extent that the judges in the courts refuse to administer justice because they themselves are conscious of being culpable."

To this the Volksblatt, our party organ in Halle, remarks: "The Deutsche Zeitung' asks how all this has been made possible, and demands that we become honest again. It is a pity it does not indicate in what way this can be done so long as the war lasts."

Contest of Supermen.

Ellery C Stowell, in the Century Magazine.

A day, now far removed, may come when the embattled hosts of rival nations will give place to a wager of battle to decide the conflict. The battle will then be confined to the combatants alone without violent interference with the peaceful pursuits of non-combatants or destruction of their property.

First, however, we must evolve great engines of destruction, so perfect that a few skilled heroes will direct each one of them. These war machines will be so costly that only a few great powers will have the resources to construct and maintain them. Wise legislation and skillful systems of taxation will be necessary to organize the whole people for their support. A chosen few, picked from the whole nation, will man them, men in the full vigor of their strength, physically perfect to endure the terrible strain, and powerful of brain to meet and surmount every intricacy of mechanics and every difficulty of strategy.

Above all, these hero supermen must be of such unswerving character that they will, day in and day out, without surcease, devote their unflagging zeal to the great task of defending the civilization for which they contend. This evolution and the increasing economic burden of maintenance of this machinery will make war the luxury of the most powerful states and will cause the area of war constantly to recede. Small nations will no longer be able to maintain military establishments, and eventually the millions of men now battling upon the wild of honor will have been replaced by a contest among a few men in control of stupendous machinery

German Plans Against India.

From the London Times.

Sir Francis Younghusband, K. C. I. E., speaking at Hall Luncheon club recently, said that when the war broke out the chief ruler of Tibet wrote to the viceroy of India saying that they were praying for the success of the British arms, and that he had offered 600 Tibetans to fight for us. The Germans expected the conquest of India and sent German officers to Afghanistan. The Germans were to be backed by the Turks, the Turks by the Afghans, and the Afghans by the frontier tribes. The German officers, after staying one year with the amir, carried with them letters to the great chiefs in India. There had also been a conspiracy to proclaim a republic in India February 21, 1915. The Germans did not want India for its surplus population, but for the raw material it produced. For 60 or 60 years the Germans had gone into India as freely as the English had.

Hajji Wilhelm and the Persians.

A. C. Edwards, in the Yale Review.

I was told by an American missionary doctor who was in Kurdistan at the time that the German agent issued frequent handbills announcing German victories, although he confessed to the doctor that he had been entirely cut off from news from Germany for months. In these communiques, the kaiser was referred to as "Hajji Wilhelm, emperor of Germany." By bribing the chiefs and paying a monthly stipend, the German agents succeeded in raising several armies of these lawless freebooters, who were ordered to stand ready to fight for the German cause when the time came. Fortunately, when the time did come, these armies did not prove very formidable, and were a great anxiety and disappointment to their organizers. The Persian tribesman is ready to fight for any cause if there is sufficient prospect of plunder; but once he has secured as much as his horse will carry, his one thought is to sneak off and get home with his booty.

By Gosh!

Miriam Field is just past seven, but she knows there are "bad words" which little girls do not use However, she can make her meaning clear without them.

A few days ago her mother sent her to the grocery and she returned all excited. "Oh, mother, I got into an awful row," she said. "Mr. Smith, the grocer, was awful mad about the food laws," continued the young narrator. "Do you want me to tell you exactly what he said?" with expectation of using a naughty word by permission. "Well, no, you need not tell the exact language," said her mother. "Well, he said that word in 'Long Boy,'" concluded Miriam, which was just as effective as the dash that is substituted for swear words in polite print.

But will Mr. Herschell look over 'Long Boy" again and see what "bad words" he has been using, for "you bet, by gosh, he'll soon find out."—Indianapolis News.

Satan, Hohenzollern & Co.

It is significant that the obituaries of Abdul Hamid have been much more restrained than would have been the case if the Red Sultan had departed this life a few years ago. The reason is not that the issues of the war have swamped interest in the decease of a deposed despot, but that Abdul Hamid strikes us today as a rather inferior kind of monster. At the time of his death he was, so to speak, only the "Co." in the firm of Satan, Hohenzollern & Co. And, if American advices are to be credited, the senior member of the partnership has resigned in favor of Wilhelm, whose modern methods he is unable to rival.—London Globe.

From Experience.

The meeting was in full swing, and the suffragist speaker was holding forth in a valiant manner on behalf of her cause.

"Yes," she cried, "women have been wronged for ages. They have suffered in a thousand ways."

"There is one way in which they have never suffered," said the neighborly looking man standing in the rear.

"What way is that?" demanded the suffragist.

"They have never suffered in silence?" was the sad reply.

...HAT ABOUT A BAND?

...aven't heard anybody murmur ... band for this summer. Isn't ... time we got busy? The band ...ney to conduct concerts. The greatest proposition the band is up against at this time is a good cornet player. In our opinion the best that can be done is to hire a good cornet leader for the summer. The services of such a man can be procured for about $10 a night, which is a very reasonable amount. After the concerts in the evening an hour could be spent with the leader in working over music for the next concert. But in order to have a band for this summer it is necessary that a leader be procured at once and work begun on concert music. The cost is only a trifle, a dollar a week from each business man will more than pay the expenses of a good leader, will buy new music for the band and will put a little sum in the band treasury for next season. Other towns in our vicinity have their bands organized for the summer season and are ready to begin their concerts the first of June. Let's not fall out of the race. We want people to come to Klemme. They will come if we have something to offer them each week in the way of free entertainment. A band is the best and also the least expensive entertainment a town can offer. Let's start the ball rolling.

"WE-UNS GOES FISHING"

Last Friday a number of Klemme nimrods caught the fishing fever and presently off towards Twin Sisters Lakes goes a couple of cars laden with the aforesaid fishers, poles, angleworms and the rest of the paraphernalia necessary to a successful fishing trip. The fishers included Chas. Busch, E. C. Ford, Art McElmurray, Roy McElmurray, Chris Gram and Ye Editor—(some bunch!). Fishing was fine that day—only they wouldn't bite, but between Chas. Busch, Art McElmurray and Ye Editor they succeeded in landing forty-six bull heads, all of which were nice (?) BIG (???) natives of the finny tribe. Ford and Roy McElmurray saw more fun in kidding the other members of the crowd and so did not capture any fish. Well it takes an artist to catch fish and they were "not there." On ... home the bunch stopped at ... for a lunch and in the meantime some practical jokers at Goodell stole the fish, which were not noticed by the fishers unti they arrived in Klemme. Needless to say the air was blue for a few minutes when the vision of a fine fish dinner vanished away in the dim past. What a relief next morning when Busch went to the depot and paid twenty-seven cents for express and found that the Goodell boys had returned the fish (minus one string of bull heads). Any way we had fish for dinner after all. The joke was on us, but mostly on Ford as he did not want his wife to know he went fishing. Alas! The Goodell boys had sent him the string of bull heads by express to Garner—nuff said. Ask Ford what his wife done to him when the fish arrived. "We-uns sure went fishun."

IDLE HOUR

Monday, May 13. Be There!

As time goes on, the scope of the work of the Red Cross in Europe will increase that the organizetion may meet the demands that will be made of it. It must receive the hearty support of the American people. The Red Cross is an emblem typifying human mercy and sympathy. It's mission to relieve physical pain and minister to mind and body, has given it a place deep in the hearts of al our people. For those dear ones in places of danger it is a comfort to know that the American Red Cross is performing more effective service on a larger scale than ever before. In addition to serving our enlisted forces, the Red Cross is assisting in the work of civil relief among our Allies whose soil has been devastated by the fighting. Workers everywhere may safely turn all their attention to the needs of their chapter and leave it to the Red Cross to see that no man is neglected. We want everyone to know Klemme's Red Cross work room is open "every Tuesday." Plan your work to be there. You have a right to be there. This is not "my war"—it is "our war" and "our boys" that are fighting.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH
J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

Methodism Mobilizes for Service! A million dollars for Methodism's part in helping win the war. Methodist boys are on the fire steps of France They are drilling at home. We must stand by them. Methodism has churches in the war zones whose pastors plead for help. Our Methodist chaplains at the front and in the camps have great opportunity for service. They must be efficiently equipped to meet them. Methodism must help to care for the heart-and-body-broken orphans of France, and to succor the wounded and dying soldiers of Italy. They have suffered for us. Already the blood of our own sons is staining the soil of France. Methodism, therefore, is called to action. The Plan—An every member canvass, May 13-19, for a sacrificial offering. This will not only include the membership, but the constituency of the church. Surely if we at home with our families and loved ones about us need the comfort of the church, and care of pastors, our Boys yonder away from all loved ones and old friends need shepherds. Let us give till it hurts just a little, to help comfort the boys who are laying down their lives for us.

Sunday is Mother's Day. Preaching service at 10:30 o'clock. Instead of Sunday School at 11:30 o'clock the Class in the Corner will render a Mother's Day program. We hope to make this a very splendid hour. All ought to remember and respect the Mothers in a special way at this time as Mothers are giving of their blood to the country.

THIEVES STEAL PORKERS IN GARNER STOCK YARDS

Thieves In Auto Steal Two Pigs, Killing One In Stock Yards And Then Make Get-a-way In Car

Last Friday night some parties supplied with a car and a lot of nerve, entered the stock yards at Garner and stole two fine pigs belonging to Jas. Carr, the stock buyer at Garner. The bandits butchered one hog in the yard but evidently lost their nerve for they pulled out of town, later butchering the other hog east of Garner about a mile, where the blood was seen the following morning. The loss of the hogs was discovered by Mr. Carr on Saturday morning when he went to the yards. He saw a pool of fresh blood and investigated the matter and after counting the hogs found there were two missing. The parties who committed this crime had a lot of nerve and perhaps would not hesitate to committ a more serious act. If they can be caught they will undoubtedly receive a number of years at light (?) occupation in the "pen" where they won't be able to steal porkers.

PUBLICITY MATTER FROM THE GREATER IOWA ASSOCIATION

"Over the Top" is a corking good slogan for Liberty Loan, Red Cross funds, and War Savings Stamps—and Iowa has lived up to the slogan—and more.

During May and June, every loyal Iowan is called upon to adopt a new slogan—"Into the Bin."

The Greater Iowa Association, having completed its work in connection with the Third Liberty Loan, has taken hold of the campaign to put Iowa coal into Iowa bins during the months of May and June, and every member of the organization has been called on to act as a personal agent and campaign manager,

Iow's normal production is about seven million tons of coal but the United States Government has set aside certain territory which, in order to be adequately supplied means Iowa's production must jump this year to nine million tons. The Association points out that this is a physical impossibility unless every loyal Iowan considers the appeal personally and immediately orders his supply of coal for next winter.

"Into the Bin" is the slogan.

At the present moment, Iowa's coal miners are not working full time and some of them are not working at all. A few miners already have left the state because there is a greater demand in other states and the mines are running on better time.

The only way in which the consumers of coal in Iowa can help in this important task is to place their orders at once for their next winter's needs and thus enable the mines of Iowa immediately to work to full capacity. If this is done, the miners will be better off, the consumers will avoid a very probable coal famine next winter—the railroad equipment will be used at a time when it is most available and will be released when it is needed for the movement of crops in the fall.

Therefore, it is a duty to your state as well as a patriotic duty to your nation—whether you be in the business of farming, or in the business of merchandising, or manufacturing, or any other business—to immediately communicate with your local coal dealer and place your order for the coal you will need in your business or in your home or both, during the next twelve months.

Get your own coal "Into the Bin,"—quick.

Mr. Chas. Terwilliger, of Garner, was in Klemme Tuesday afternoon interviewing the voters. Mr. Terwilliger is running for Supervisor on the Republican ticket. He is a man well known throughout the county and has resided in the county for quite a number of years. He is connected with the Mason City Sugar Beet Corporation as Field Manager in this county and is doing a lot of work among the farmers.

The despised mud dauber," a well-known species of wasp, is credited with saving a fine crop of tomatoes and other vegetables on the farm of Thomas Egler a local farmer, according to the New Orleans Picayune. Observation showed that only overripe fruit was punctured by the insect and that the wasp kept the plants clear of every insect and caterpillar pest during a trying season. The inherent tendency of the wasp to transfer real estate to the kitchen and parlor ceiling was thwarted by screening the windows, and the success was such that Mr. Egler intends to consult the department of entomology as to the best means of encouraging the highly useful but unappreciated insect.

CHARGE THAT UNDUE INFLUENCE WAS USED

Ida County Court Has Task of Straightening Out Affairs of Former Well Know Woman.

Ida Grove, Ia., May 4.—Was undue influence used in having Mrs. Sarah Poolman, deceased, destroy a deed in which she had placed in escrow two lots and a residence in Ida Grove for Thomas Crane, is the issue being argued to Judge M. E. Hutchinson this week. Mrs. Poolman was a widow, and prior to making the deed several months her son had died. The son and Crane were chums and the latter had on many occasions brought meats and other country produce to the Poolhome. Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Kephart were neighbors of Mrs. Poolman for some time after the death of the son, and Mrs. Kephart assisted in the care of the home, and for two months prior to the widow's death had taken her into her home, where she died. Before being taken so seriously ill she visited the bank where she had left the Crane deed, and in the presence of the banker tore it up, saying that Mr. Crane had not been visiting her since her son's death and she was not going to give him the property, and afterwards issued a deed to Mr. and Mrs. Kephart. She also had nearly $3,000 in cash in a local bank, and by will she devised and bequeath this, share and share alike, to Mr. and Mrs. Kephart, and this will has been admitted to probate. The plaintiff is endeavoring to show that undue influence was used in getting this property away from him. The deceased Ida county lady left a half sister and one brother, but as they had never expressed a willingness to take care of her in her old age, she willed them $1.

IOWA CHILDREN GIVE IDEA OF PATRIOTISM

London, (by mail).—If little American girls are good barometers, there's a furious hurricane being uncorked for the kaiser in the United States. A wild storm of feeling is told of in letters that continue to arrive from all parts of the middle west for Sheila Maxwell Davis, 13 years old, the young Londoner who wrote the tribute to Yank fighters, entitled, "Sons of America," sent across the ocean by the Reciprocal News Service.

"I wish I were a boy so I might go and fight," declares Ruth DeLean, Lewis, Ia. You can see the sparks fly in the handwriting of Eva McKisick, Rock Rapids, Ia., as she snaps: "I am a good American and I hate the name of German. If I had that old kaiser I would torture him till he would die."

More than half of the letters express deep sympathy for London because of the air raids. Little Marjorie Dickson, daughter of Judge R. R. Dickson of the Fifteenth Judicial District Court, O'Neill Neb., after telling of her horror at the bare thought of night bombing, writes that General Pershing is from Lincoln, the capital of our state, and has a little boy going to school there."

Ruth Gardiner Steamboat Rock, Ia., gives a bit of interesting history. She writes My papers of English descent His ancestor, Lion Gardiner, came to the United States in 1664 and settled on the Isle of Wright off the coast of Rhode Island, which was given him by King George. This island is now called Gardiner's Island."

"Everybody in my neighborhood is so anxious to see if you will answer my letter I hope you will," writes Vivian Yowell, 102 Schiller avenue, Little Rock, Ark. Sheila will Every family and store gave something, ranging from a rag doll to a buffalo. The buffalo brought $3,000 just for the meat. He was offered $300 for the hide, $200 for the head and $100 for the tail. They sold the meat as high as $20 a pound, then some was not so high, only $2.25. We had some and it tasted like real good beefsteak."

AGED RESIDENT OF GRANVILLE IS DEAD.

Granville, Ia., May 4.—Jacob Fische, for many years postmaster at this this place, and at one time a door keeper in the legislature at Des Moines, died at his home here the afternoon of May 1. Mr. Fisch was 83 years old He was born in Alsace, France, but since 1871 a part of Germany. Mr. Fisch was a first class American citizen, industrious, thrifty and capable. He raised a large family here, was interested in all public questions and devoted himself to every duty For many years he was put forward as the representative citizen of Granville, was a delegate to many conventions and an ardent politician, a follower of Senator Cummins and a supporter of all progressive legislation. No man in northern Iowa was more widely known, and he will be generally mourned.

IOWA MAN BECOMES SMALL ARMS INSTRUCTOR

Des Moines, Ia., May 4.—Major Smith W. Brookhart, of Washington, Ia., trainer of many winning national guard teams in rifle contests, has won new recognition for his ability along this line. He is to be head instructor at a small arms firing school to open at Camp Perry, Ohio, May 25. Lieut. Col Morton C. Mumma formerly military instructor at Iowa City, will be the commandant at Camp Perry.

FLOUR HOARDER GIVEN HUNDRED DOLLAR FINE

Exira Ia., May 4.—William Toepfer, sr., a wealthy farmer living near here, who was caught concealing seven sacks of flour in an iron box under the hay in his barn, paid a $100 fine for the offense. He was called before Food Administrator J. B. J. Lohner at Exira, and given the alternative of donating $100 to the Red Cross or being taken before J F. Deems, federal food administrator at Burlington He chose to give the $100 to the Red Cross.

Toepfer tried to lay the blame for the hiding of the flour on the shoulders of other members of his family. He also tried to get Mr Lohner to reduce the amount of the penalty Lohner would listen to nothing short of the payment of $100.

IOWA TO WELCOME BOYS FROM TRENCHES

Des Moines, Ia., May 4.—Plans for a rousing welcome when Sergeant Hawkins, of Red Oak; Corporal Skinner, of Ottumwa, and Private Montgomery, of Stuart, arrive in the city Sunday or Monday, are being made These three Iowans have returned from trenches to explain to Iowa how it seems to go over the top, to be bombed, shelled and gassed. They will probably tour Iowa. Governor Harding, Mayor Fairweather, and commercial organizations are in charge of the proposed observance.

SCHOOL FIGHT AT CEDAR FALLS BITTER

Teachers Who Opposed Board's Action in Employing Students Not Reelected.

Waterloo, Ia., May 3.—With the failure of the Cedar Falls school board to reappoint three veteran teachers for the term 1918-1919, a tempest among certain school patrons of Cedar Falls has again risen and the student teacher feud has started anew.

The three teachers: Miss Mary Murphy, employed in the Jefferson school for 10 years; Mrs. Anna Young, principal of the Jefferson school, for six years, and employed in the Cedar Falls schools for eight years, and Miss Hazel Bouder, employed at the Miner school for five years, were witnesses at the student-teacher trial in district court last fall. The patrons brought suit against the school board for employing of teachers who were pupils at the Iowa State Teachers' college. These three teachers gave damaging testimony against the school board.

The district court found in favor of the school patrons and ordered through an injunction, that student teachers be ousted. The school board appealed to the supreme court and secured a restraining order against the enforcement of the injunction, pending the appeal.

A recent school board election was held and two factions were represented, the two school board members seeking reelection, but were defeated by the opponents of the student teacher system.

These two new members, LeClaire Martin and J. B. Clay, protested against the failure to reappoint the three teachers and a lively tilt and a near fight ensued, but the three old board members "stood pat" and voted to have the three teachers not appointed on the grounds they had not proven loyal to the old board.

An indignation meeting was held Monday night protesting against "what is termed prejudicial action" and another one is scheduled for tonight. However, the old board members are said to be obdurate and assert these three teachers shall not be reappointed as long as they retain their offices as school board members.

GOVERNOR ISUES W. S. S. PROCLAMATION TO PEOPLE

Des Moines, Ia., May 3.—Gov. W. L. Harding has issued a proclamation setting apart the week beginning May 4 and ending May 11 as Thrift Pledge week.

Every man, woman and child in the state will be asked to purchase at least $20 worth of the stamps to help Iowa buy its quota of $43,000,00 worth of stamps before January 1, 1919.

The proclamation follows

To the People of Iowa

By virtue of authority in me vested, and in harmony with the great national movement to assist the federal government in financing the war by saving and investing in war savings and thrift stamps, I hereby set apart the week beginning May 4 and ending May 11 as Thrift Pledge week.

Under the rules and regulations no one person can buy more than $1,000 worth of war savings stamps. These bear 4 per cent interest, compounded quarterly, and are always redeemable at par.

Iowa has been asked to purchase $43,000,000 worth of these securities during the year ending December 31, 1918. Up to this time only $6,000,000 worth have been purchased. In order to meet the request of the government and complete our quota, every man, woman and child in the state must purchase at least $20 worth of these stamps. This week, beginning May 4 and ending May 11, is set apart so that our people may complete their pledges and that the government will be assured that the money will be forthcoming. Payments can be made from time to time as late as December 31, 1918.

These war savings and thrift stamps are not designed solely for children and those of small means. They are for everyone—for you. These stamps are a liquid security for the accommodation of the public. As a financial investment the war savings stamp is, if possible, more desirable than a Liberty bond.

The money derived from the sale of savings and thrift stamps goes into the federal treasury and is used to feed, clothe and furnish guns and ammunition for the men who are fighting our battles in the trenches and on the sea. If the government should not have the money at hand when needed and you have not loaned to the government up to your ability, the day of victory will be retarded and you will have to answer.

God has prospered us in a marvelous way, and for a purpose. This is our opportunity as individuals and as a state to serve the world by furnishing the money which we have in abundance to keep the torch of civilization burning.

I call upon all our people to assist those in authority locally to make this campaign a success. Individually you owe it to our fighting forces to see to it that everyone in your community pledges either the limit or up to their full ability as they have been prospered.

Let every minister devote one service on Sunday, May 5, to this cause.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the state.

Done at Des Moines this 26th day of April, 1918.

W. L. Harding, Governor.

W. S. Allen, Secretary of State

ALLIED CONFERENCE OPENS AT VERSAILLES

Versailles, May 1.—An important conference of the allied nations opens here today and will be carried over tomorrow The participants comprise premiers Lloyd George, Clemenceau and Orlando, of Great Britain, France and Italy, respectively, and representatives of France, Great Britain, Italy and the United States in the supreme war council.

DYNAMITE DISCOVERED IN SIGNAL TOWER BASE

El Paso, Tex., May 1.—Four sticks of dynamite, 30 feet of coiled copper wire and detonating caps were discovered late yesterday buried under the base of the steel wireless tower at Fort Bliss. The explosive was found by an officer who was training his men in entrenchment work near the tower.

A telegraph transmitter has been invented which will send over a grounded wire, 6,000 words a minute.

CATHOLICS OF BRITAIN PROTEST TO VATICAN

London, May 1.—The Catholic Union of Great Britain, an influential organization, whose membership includes many titled persons and other prominent Catholics, has sent to Cardinal Gasparri, the papal secretary of state, for submission to Pope Benedict, a series of resolutions passed by it regretting the action of the Catholic hierarchy in Ireland in opposing Irish conscription "thereby apparently supporting organized resistance to law."

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Ida Grove Man and Family Sustain No Worse Than Broken Bones.

Ida Grove, Ia., May 2.—Howard Lynch and family had a narrow escape from being killed on their way home from the patriotic celebration here. In passing another vehicle Mr. Lynch missed the grade on a steep hill and his automobile turned over twice, throwing Mrs. Lynch out and fracturing her hip and breaking her collar bone. Mr. Lynch was badly bruised but escaped serious injury. Their little 2-year-old son was found lying on the running board of the machine, it having turned over the second time in an upright condition

FRATERNAL INSURANCE MEN ARE INTERRESTED

Marshalltown, Ia., May 2.—Ruling on a permanent injunction asked by local members of the Modern Brotherhood of America, will be awaited with interest by 10,000 members in Iowa, and similarly large numbers in other states. Judge B. F. Cummings, in the district court here, yesterday granted a temporary injunction against the fraternal insurance organization, as sought by local policy holders who are now at an age where the company can no longer afford to carry their risks at the premiums current when they became members.

The court's temporary injunction prevents the company from collecting today "reserve deficiency assessments" from members of the organization, which, in some cases, amount to several hundreds of dollars. In the event they are not paid, the brotherhood has notified the members that the amounts will stand as a lien against their insurance policies, and may be deducted therefrom in the vent of their deaths.

The Modern Brotherhood, like all other fraternal insurance companies, finds itself against a staggering proposition in the insurance issued years ago at a rate which can not carry it now with a heavier morality rate. The situation is the same in every lodge in the country, and the the members are wanting the decision of the highest tribunal in order to determine the status of their insurance.

The injunction runs against the Modern Brotherhood of America and its supreme officers and directors The officers are T. B. Hanley, Des Moines supreme president, E. L. Balz, Mason City, supreme secretary, and A. H Gale, Mason City, supreme treasurer. The headquarters office of the brotherhood is at Mason City

CHIEF OF POLICE GOES IN HIDING OR EXILE

Mason City Ia., May 2 A warrant for the arrest of Max A Gorman, chief of police of Mason City, charging assault and battery on Nels Oliver Overson, selected man, who started for Camp Dodge yesterday, was issued but officers armed with the warrant had been unable to find Gorman

The trouble started when Gorman took Overson as the band started to play "The Star Spangled Banner" Overson was embracing his mother goodby and probably did not hear the music, for he failed to remove his hat He was struck in the mouth by Gorman.

The crowd of 2,000 persons became angry at once and Gorman was escorted to town surrounded by his own policemen and deputy sheriffs. It was said that he had started for Minnesota.

GERMAN TEXT BOOKS MYSTERIOUSLY DISAPPEAR

Correctionville, Ia., May 2 —On the assembling of one of the classes in the high school a few days ago it was discovered that the German text books had disappeared and but few of them could be located. Where or how they disappeared could not be learned and no one seemed to care. It is taken for granted that the study of German in the schools is a thing of the past It is probable French or Spanish will be substituted at the beginning of the new year next fall.

GEORGE EXPERIENCES A BUILDING BOOM

George, Ia., May 2.—George will have considerable building operations this year. The new sewerage system is to be installed within a few months and there are 15 to 20 new residences to go up between now and fall. The new Presbyterian church, just completed, will be dedicated May 12

FORBID USE OF THE GERMAN LANGUAGE

Little Rock, Ia., May 2.—The council of defense has posted signs forbidding all languages except English in public places and over telephone lines running out of the town into the country.

DAKOTA STATE NEWS

LEAD—The Lead branch of the American Red Cross is making a great record for continued and vigorous activity Large shipments of articles from the three departments have been made during the past week to division headquarters at Minneapolis. The total of the articles contained in the three shipments numbered 10,053. The articles shipped covered the entire list of things necessary for the care of the American wounded and their comfort.

DOLAND—Joseph Kuhn, a farmer of this vicinity, is doing more than his "bit" in producing foodstuffs. A few days ago he marketed two carloads of hogs, which brought him $6,566.10. He has 60 head left, all having been raised in 1917 He also sold recently 1,000 bushels of barley, which swelled his receipts an additional $1,500. With sales of poultry, produce, etc., to these will increase his income for the year to about $9,000.

CROWDER TO ROUND UP BULLET DODGERS

Will Check Up "Skilled Farmers and All Other "Indispensible" Workers.

Washington, D. C., May 3.—A nation wide roundup of draft registrants escaping military service through unjust classification has been ordered by Provost Marshal General Crowder

The number of men who have suddenly became "skilled farmers" or "indispensable government workers" has drawn the searching eye of the war department to the situation.

Every unfair case found will be immediately reclassified and if the registrant has escaped military service will be sent to Camp, General Crowder said.

A large majority of the "experts" draft age in government work could easily be replaced by men outside draft age and by women, General Crowder believes, despite the fact that cabinet officers have asked exemption for many.

Charge Missuse of Funds In Airplane Department

Senate Considers Making an Investigation of Criminal Phases of Situation—"Somebody Ought to Be Shot" Says Senator King—Reveal Extravagance.

Washington, D. C., May 3.—Investigation of the army aviation situation with a view to criminal prosecutions was urged today in the Senate. Gross extravagance and misuse of appropriations for the aviation program were suggested and in spirited speeches several senators declared further investigation should be made as to any criminal or civil liability of those responsible.

Senator Brandegee, of Connecticut republican, who recently referred to suppression of the aviation report made to President Wilson by Gutzon Borglum, the sculptor, brought up the subject and suggested that the Senate military committee should continue its inquiry with a view of determining if criminal prosecutions should be brought. Senator King, of Utah democrat, also urged criminal investigation. Senator Hitchcock, of Nebraska acting chairman of the Senate military committee, said the committee was ready to act, but contended that the department of justice should make the criminal inquiry.

"Somebody Ought to be Shot"

Presenting a telegram from Mr Borglum denying statements in recent Senate debates that he was "not entirely a disinterested witness." Senator Brandegee said the military committee should hear witnesses proposed by Mr Borglum regarding possible criminal aspects of the delay in aviation production. Mr. Borglum's telegram denied that he is financially interested in the manufacture of planes.

The report of H. Snowden Marshall's special aviation committee also should be considered, Senator Brandegee said.

Senator King said he considered it the committee's "sacred duty to make further investigation and "fasten responsibility for its failure" of aviation production. He had heard it said he added, that "somebody ought to be shot" in connection with the delayed production.

Senator Poindexter of Washington referred to the criminal law against accessories to crimes and to statements regarding air craft production made by Secretary Baker, asked:

Is not the secretary of war the man himself that ought to be reached by the committee if it is seeking to hold some one responsible?"

Hitchcock Defends Baker.

"I believe the secretary was as completely deceived by officials in charge as was the committee," Senator Hitchcock replied, adding that the secretary had reorganized the aviation personnel and thus indicated his lack of confidence in those displaced.

Senator Knox of Pennsylvania, republican suggested that civil as well as criminal responsibility in expenditure of the aircraft appropriations also should be fixed.

"There are charge of conspiracy," he said "that indicate misuse or of obtainment of hundreds of millions of dollars of the people's money."

Senator Hitchcock said the recent written reports of a majority of the military committee have given the country the facts after the committee and the country had for weeks been misinformed and misled by members of the aircraft production board and by official orders.

The aircraft board was charged by Senator Hitchcock not only with "misleading the committee for weeks," but with playing a gigantic confidence game on the whole country by giving the impression that the Liberty motor resulted from a conference of engineers in a Washington hotel. As a fact, the Liberty motor the Nebraska senator said is the Packard motor, which has taken the Packard company three years to develop but now we are going to pay that company between $500,000 and $1,000,000 for three years experimentation and that matter is now being adjusted.

68 KNOWN DEAD KNIGHTS USURP IN SHIP CRASH STATE'S COURTS

Steamer City of Athens and French Cruiser Collide Off East Coast—Many Are Rescued.

By United Press.

New York, May 3. Sixty-eight dead was the estimate today of lives lost in the sinking of the coast liner City of Athens rammed by a French cruiser off the Jersey coast early yesterday morning.

The City of Athens was enroute to Savannah, Ga. In a thick fog the French warship crashed into it. Survivors here today declared the ship went down in seven minutes. Two lifeboats were launched. Many persons leaped overboard.

The missing include ten civilians two women one child 14 French sailors, eight United States marines and 34 officers and crew of the steamer. There were 155 passengers and crew aboard.

Although the accident occurred about 1 o'clock a. m. yesterday, no word of it was known here until the arrival of survivors. They told many stories of heroism. Dr. E. L. Brooks, Atlanta, declared that one of the wireless operators stuck to his post and went down with the ship. Quick work on the part of the French cruiser's officers, who rushed life boats overside and played searchlights over the dark waters, prevented an even heavier toll of life. Most of the City of Athens crew casualties were among the stewards, who were crushed to death when the war vessel's steel prow cut into their quarters. Survivors said the ropes of one life boat snapped throwing several persons into the sea.

Two of the French sailors saved had hands cut off by tackle while desperately trying to launch life boats. The loss of 14 French sailors out of a party of 20 on the liner was a story of self-sacrifice.

RURALITES LEAD IN BUYING WAR BONDS

McAdoo Calls on People of Large Cities and Towns to Do Their Share.

New York, May 3.—Calling on the people of the large cities and towns to bring their subscriptions up to those of rural districts, Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo made what he said was his final statement for the third Liberty loan today. Residents of country sections, he asserted had over subscribed their allotments.

"BAD BILL" WILL MARRY DAUGHTER OF RANCHER

Los Angeles, Cal., May 3.—The engagement of William S. Hart, portrayer of "Bad Man" roles on the movie screen, and Miss Margaret Evans, daughter of a wealthy rancher, was announced here today by the film actor. The romance is one that began through correspondence. When Hart was in Butte, Mont., recently, he met the young woman and was a guest at her father's house.

FAVORABLE REPORT ON ANTI-SEDITION BILL

Washington, D. C., May 3.—Legislation aimed at the Industrial Workers of the World and similar organizations advocating force and violence to bring about government, social and industrial changes, was approved today by the Senate judiciary committee. The measure comprising features of anti I. W. W. bills introduced by Senators King of Utah, and Walsh of Montana, was ordered favorably reported.

White Robed Bands Seize and "Try" Pro-German Suspects and Give Them Coats of Tar and Feathers.

San Jose, Cal., May 3.—George Koetzer, alleged pro-German was in jail here today for his own protection, after he had been tarred and feathered, and chained to a cannon in a park early today by an organization known as the Knights of Liberty.

A member of the knights early today notified newspapers and the police by telephone that Koetzer had been given a fair trial and had been found guilty of making disloyal utterances.

A rope was placed around his neck but we decided not to hang him," the knight said, as Koetzer refused to confess that he had made disloyal remarks.

This [illegible] was arrested [illegible] last week [illegible] in San Francisco and Santa Rosa, Palo Alto and other places. The knight said on the telephone "We are going to stamp out disloyalty, but give a fair and impartial trial. On the evidence warrants, we turn the men over to the military or civil authorities."

Richmond, Cal., May 3.—Guido Poenisch of German descent was taken from his home here last night by 50 white robed unknown persons rushed to the municipal wharf where he was tried for disloyalty and then tarred and feathered. He was "found" not to have bought a Liberty bond and to have made disloyal remarks.

Poenisch defended himself by saying he had served in the coast artillery and had taken out first citizenship papers. He promised he would buy $100 worth of Liberty bonds and would join the Red Cross before his captors released him.

Poenisch came here about 10 years ago from Germany.

ITALIANS RECRUIT BOHEMIAN TROOPS

Aus'ria Fears Effect Their Appearance May Have on Own Forces.

By Associated Press.

Fighting for democracy and for freedom of their home land, Bohemian and Slav detachments are now facing Austro-Hungarian troops along the sectors in northern Italy. Apparently these units have been recruited from former residents of the dual monarchy and from deserters from the enemy ranks. Austro-Hungarian commanders who have many thousands of Czechs and Slavs in their units, are said to be fearful of the effect this movement may have on their own troops. This and the fact that the Czechs at Prague and elsewhere and the Slavs in Carinola and southward have become openly hostile to the Austrian government may explain why the enemy offensive against Italy has been delayed. Berlin has heralded and urged an offensive, but Austro-Hungarian attacks have not yet developed.

'RAH FOR THE SHAH!

By United Press.

Washington, D. C., May 2.—To show his heart is in the right place, though his country is a hotbed of German intrigue, his majesty, the sham of Persia, today cabled the state department for $100,000 worth of Liberty bonds.

The order will be promptly filled.

OUTLINES SABOTAGE AIMS OF "WOBBLIES"

Prosecutor Declares I. W. W Organization Plans Overthrow of Society.

Chicago, Ill., May 2.—The government's first wholesale prosecution of alleged war obstructors was finally to get under way here today with special prosecutor Frank N. Nebeker's opening statement to the jury in the trial of 112 I W W leaders charged with sedition and sabotage.

The defendants "were continually stirring labor troubles, obstructing government war measures and biding their time to overthrow existing society and place themselves in power," Nebeker's prepared opening statement declares.

Nebeker planned to read the I. W. W jargon from their publications and songs. Reference to sabotage and its methods as "direct action" and "milk for the kitty" according to Nebeker, disclosed the organization's plans. "Kitty" is I W W. code for sabotry he stated.

The prisoners ranging from Windsor-Tied writers and agitators to huge stolid laborers, were again marched handcuffed through the crowded streets to the federal building. Nebeker planned to spray their ranks in the court room with verbal bombs for several hours. From tones of evidence he had selected I W W communications alleged to be orders for commitment of sabotage. Many of their acts had the effect of obstructing war plans he claimed in his opening statement.

The called themselves conscientious objectors" said Nebeker today.

They called themselves conscientious objectors" said Nebeker today. "They threatened sabotage if compelled to enter army or navy and if necessary they planned to tie up the industries of the country to prevent munitions manufacture."

GERMAN SOLDIERS EAT HORSES SLAIN BY FOES

By United Press.

With the French Armies in the Field, May 1.—Hundreds of horses killed by the French artillery are eaten by the German soldiers, according to letters found on prisoners.

The Germans, unable to obtain other food because of the terrific, incessant bombardmen, cut up dead horses on the battlefields during the night for the day's meals.

Here is a sample of one of these letters:

"We think we will capture Amiens soon. We have been outdoors 15 days and nights and are dead tired, starving, unwashed, uncombed, encased in mud to the neck and soaked to the bones. Neither food nor ammunition is arriving, but they are always promised 'tomorrow.' I have only four cartridges left.

"There are more than 500 dead horses in our vicinity. During the night we carve off quarters for steaks. Our hunger hurts but we cannot go to the village, where there is something to eat, because it is bombarded too heavily."

REFUSE TO GIVE FACTS ABOUT AMERICAN ARMY

Paris, May 2.—The German war office is finding it increasingly difficult to hide from the reichstag and people the true extent of American participation in the war, according to reports received here today.

"Vague replies," were all that committee from the reichstag, headed by Deputy Noske, received when they sought information at the war office. The result was that many complaints were made by reichstag members.

The reichstag committee then demanded that a representative of the general headquarters appear and give the body true information as to how many Americans were fighting on the west front. The request was refused.

NEWS PIRATING CASE BEFORE HIGH COURT

Washington, D. C., May 2.—The case of The Associated Press against the International News service or Hearst service to enjoin the latter from pirating Associated Press news dispatches, was up for argument today in the supreme court. Lower federal courts have granted injunctions stopping the Hearst service from taking Associated Press dispatches and distributing them as its own and the case came upon appeal from those decisions.

Frederick W. Lehmann, of St. Louis, made the argument for The Associated Press, contending for the right of property in news.

RUMANIANS TO FIGHT UNDER ITALIAN FLAG

Paris, May 2.—Eighteen thousand soldiers of Rumanian origin who were captured by Italians while fighting under the Austrian flag have asked permission to go to the front against Austria. The request has been granted and organization of these troops is under way.

With the entrance of this force into the field, three armies composed of former subjects of the central empires will be fighting on the side of the allies. Czech troops are already under arms on the Italian front and there is a Polish army on the French front.

DEFEATS IN MESOPOTAMIA MAY FORCE TURKS TO QUIT

BY J. W. T. MASON,
United Press War Expert.

New York, May 3.—A separate peace with the reluctant consent of Germany may be forced on Turkey by the renewal of highly important operations north and northwest of Bagdad by the British expeditionary forces in Mesopotamia.

North of Bagdad the British are within less than 100 miles of Mosul and northwest of Bagdad a second British column is following the Euphrates to Aleppo, which is less than 300 miles from the present resting place of the invading expedition. Both of these objectives are major Turkish bases. The capture of Mosul would give to the British possession of the most important center of communications in northern Mesopotamia and a further advance of 125 miles westward would place the British in possession of Nisibin, the terminus of the completed part of the Bagdad railway running to Constantinople.

If at the same time the British troops were to occupy Aleppo the whole of that part of the Bagdad railway supplying northern Mesopotamia would fall a prize to British armies. Simultaneously the Turkish armies in Palestine would be forced to surrender because all of their supplies are received by way of Aleppo.

A catastrophe of this magnitude would be the severest blow that could be inflicted on the pan-Germans. Their major ambition is to dominate in future years the entire area now being won by the British Mesopotamian troops. Rather than see the total collapse of the Turks and the capture of the Bagdad railway by Great Britain, the kaiser might well advise the sultan to surrender in the hope that a part, at least, of the territory could be saved for future German exploitation.

The British advance toward Mosul and Aleppo is being made principally by Sudian troops. These soldiers have not proven good material for the nerve racking trench warfare in western Europe. Their use against the Turks, therefore, does not decrease the strength of the allies along the west front at this critical time.

ALLIES IGNORE TALK OF PEACE

"Whispering Offensive" Now Going on Designed to Slacken Fighting Spirit of Kaiser's Enemies.

BY ROBERT J. BENDER.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Washington, D. C., May 3.—Germany's expected "peace offensive" against allied morale seems to have begun.

In view of authorities here today the sudden and widespread launching of rumors, printed reports and whispered confidences reaching Washington and involving likelihood of peace proffers from the pope, Emperor Charles of Austria, King Alfonso of Spain and even the kaiser, is merely Germany's game old game to slacken the fighting spirit of her enemies.

Wilson Not Concerned.

And it may be stated that President Wilson is not concerned in this latest war development. There is nothing to indicate the frank and open negotiations he demands before peace steps may be taken.

It is significant that most of the reports have had their origin in Teuton newspapers or Teutonic quarters in neutral countries. There is nothing to indicate officially that the pope has changed from his recently known opposition to further peace attempts now. The source and persistence of rumors of a new papal peace effort led to general belief here that Teutonic hope was wns father to the thought.

However, it is recalled that the pope's last proposal was heralded in neutral countries before it was officially launched. And it was about 10 days ago that the Munich Neuste Nachrichten announced the pope would again appeal—this time to the "universal conscience"—to end the war.

This report has been followed by stories emanating from German and Swiss sources that the kaiser was "deeply moved" by the scenes of suffering and horror on the battle front and he was quoted generously as expressing grief that his efforts "to prevent the tragedy" had failed. The foundation for the peace offensive had been carefully laid.

Kaiser Has Good Reasons.

The reasons for the kaiser's desire for peace may be found, it is believed, not only in his advantageous position to discuss terms now, but also in growing uneasiness "back home."

Germany's hope of immediate wheat supplies from the Ukraine and considerable iron and maganese from elsewhere in Russia has proven a will-o-the-wisp, according to official diplomatic messages here today.

As for the vital iron ore and manganese, the dispatches said, the turmoil had prevented the mining of them.

The sloop Cowslip was torpedoed and sunk April 25; and five officers and one man are missing, and torpedo boat number 90 foundered and from her one officer and 12 men are missing.

HUNS' RESERVES EQUAL TO LOSS

Germany Still Capable of Duplicating Great Offensive, But Allies Are Gaining Superiority.

BY HENRY WOOD.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the French Armies in the Field, May 1.—Although Germany has engaged 2,500,000 men in the present offensive to date, conservative calculations show she is still capable of duplicating this offensive effort.

The allies, however, with their new unity of command and superiority in fresh reserves, coupled with the inability of the Germans again to effect a surprise, hold the trump card.

The fatal consumption of German effectives is indicated by the fact that while the enemy began March 21 with 500,000 men in the front line, they have been obliged since to engage five times that number.

The allies have identified on the west front 206 divisions (2,472,000 men), out of the Germans' entire total of 242, including those on other fronts. To date, the Germans have engaged 140 separate divisions in the present battles—many two or three times—making a total value of 186 divisions engaged. This leaves 66 unengaged, of which 10 are Landsturm and Landwehr, incapable of offensive work.

This prodigal use of effectives, together with General Foch's conservative use of allied reserves, gives the later more unengaged, fresh divisions than the Germans.

The most conservative estimates of the German losses are 350,000 men. It is known, however, that there are still 650,000 men in depots with which to replace these losses, without even calling on the class of 1920, which ordinarily will not be mobilized until October.

Consequently, Germany can still duplicate her offensive effort to date. But once her losses exceed the above reserves, she is without resource, while the daily arrival of British, American and Italian divisions is assuring the allies an incontestable superiority, and final victory.

HOME RULE BILL IS ORDERED WITHHELD

Government Meeting With New Difficulties In Drafting Measure.

London, May 2.—Andrew Bonar Law, chancellor of the exchequer, and government spokesman, declared in the house of commons Wednesday that he could not say when an Irish home rule bill would be introduced.

This, according to some lobby correspondents of the morning newspapers, covers the fact that the introduction of the bill has been deferred and hope of its presentation next week has been abandoned.

The Daily News says the government has met with serious difficulties in its Irish policy and cannot find a successor to Baron Wimborne, who has resigned the lord lieutenancy, while the committee appointed to draft a bill up to this time has settled virtually nothing except the preamble.

YANKS REPEL BOCHE DRIVE NEAR AMIENS

BY HENRY WOOD.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the French Armies in the Field, May 1.—An American regiment, amalgamated with the French on the Amiens battle front, after being violently bombarded for two hours Tuesday night, was attacked by approximately three battalions of German infantry.

The Americans after a violent combat repulsed the Germans, who left the field covered with dead. The Americans took five prisoners.

The battle occurred south of Grivesnes, between Cantigny and Fontaine Sous Montdidier.

Despite serious losses, the Americans made a valiant defense.

Fontaine Sous Montdidier is two miles west and slightly north of the important town of Montdidier. Cantigny is a mile and a half west of Fontaine Sous Montdidier. The line between the two towns forms the northern half of a sharp salient into the German front.

Cantigny is 14 miles south of Villers-Bretonneux, where the British and French lines are supposed to converge, and is 17 miles south and east of Amiens.

Americans are thus fighting in at least two distinct points on the Amiens front, as a French official communique issued April 22 referred to "Franco-American positions" behind Hangard-En-Santerre and Hailles. These towns are 11 miles north of Cantigny and Fontaine Sous Montdidier.

SET TRAPS FOR YANKEES.
By United Press.

With the American Army in Lorraine, May 1.—Further details of the Seicheprey engagement show that the Germans have a new system of grenade attacks. They work in two-man teams, one directly behind the other. The first throws with both hands, the second carrying the grenades in pouches and supplying them over the shoulder on the first.

A new type of grenade is used, ignited by a string attachment, which enables the grenadier to use both hands.

Many fiendish traps have been set for the Americans in this sector. One is a system of hidden wires which set off hurled bombs when touched. Another is the attaching of helmets, bayonets and other "souvenirs" to bombs by means of hidden wires. So far, the Yankees haven't been fooled.

All American sectors in this region are quiet.

MIKE WRITES TO KLEMME RED CROSS

Charleston, S. C.
April 27th, 1918

Dear Ladies and Friends:—

I suspect you will think that I am a dandy for not acknowledging the receiving of that uncomparable comfort kit sooner, but I honestly have been extremely busy practically ever since receiving it and wanted to write some kind of an acceptable letter of appreciaion for a gift of that kind is certainly deserving of more than a few lines. I am not exaggerating one bit when I say that it is absolutely the most elaborate and complete kit in the entire camp and you good Klemme people need not fear that I will ever forget your gratefulness. When I wrote for a kit I was not expecting on trying to impose on your generosity for anything as complete, but it makes a fellow feel good to think that he has a few friends at home who are willing to do their share and then some to make things comfortable and create a feeling that he is not forgotten and that our sacrifices are appreciated.

While I am not complaining in the least and the life is not as bad as some of the "mamma" boys must write home about, as some of them do so much kicking around here, that they must write some harrowing tales back home, but at that it is a life that I would not care to lead in peace time. I enjoy the drilling that we receive very much although we have not received any aviation work nor will not until we are transferred to some other point, in all probability Pensacola, Florida. This may seem strong, but we are rated as the best drilled cmpany in the entire training camp. This is how it came about: Last Wednesday we were called for drill and told we were going to be whipped into shape for a Liberty parade to be held down town yesterday, Friday, April 26th, but were not told that it was to be a competitive affair. Certain companies were picked out from each regiment and 40 companies in all were put out for drill practice. Imagine our surprise when after the officers review Thursday afternoon when the commanding officer came up in front of our company after the review and said: "What regiment and company is this?" and when he was told, he replied: "Boys, you made by far the best showing of any company in the entire parade and deserving of first place, and will be one of the 4 companies to represent the camp in the Liberty parade tomorrow. You even did better than the regular guard company who have been stationed here for over a year." Those are not the exact words, but are pretty near it, and you might know that it made us all feel very good and made us strive all the harder to execute our commands right yesterday. I have been a company commander ever since the second week in camp, but for this special drill a special commander was sent from headquarters and I acted as lieutenant. I am not claiming any honor but my boys and I are proud of it. Every one of them have been patting me on the back and telling me that I deserve as much credit as the regimental man, but I won't believe it, but nevertheless the Officer of the Day asked me this morning if I would consider staying here as one of the training commanders and I told him no, as that would take me away from my new made friends and also would not get to see any real naval service hanging around a joint like this, and I want to go "Over There." I am relating the above for the friends who I know would like to see me make good and also for the "doubting Thomases" who know I won't, but Lord knows I have been striving hard to make good and as I did not know but very little about military drill before I came here, I feel that I am doing fairly well. I am also a coxwain in the boat drill. That is pretty work and I like it very well. We also have been pressed into service loading transports and I have learned something about the life of a stevedore, but about all that it requires is a strong back and a weak mind. Of course we are now out of detention and have liberty three or four times a week and have had an opportunity to see what Charleston looks like, and it would not make a very big book to describe it, but will not attempt to do so as it is nothing but an old southern city. But the people on the other hand are all hospitality and very fine to meet. I have had the pleasure of being out on two "Y" bunch parties and could not ask for better treatment or to feel more at home than if I should be asked to some friend's home right in Klemme, and once you meet a family you have a standing invitation to call on them any time, but a person does not like to ride a free horse to death. There are perhaps a number of things of interest I could tell you if I only would, but if there is anything that you would like to know and I can tell you, I'll gladly do so.

I have seen ots of things new to me and probably never would have seen them if I had not enlisted, and I am not a bit sorry that I did and hope I can do something of real service for Uncle Sam before I come back. I have seen most every kind of a boat from a tug to a transport, cruiser, dreadnaught, torpedo boat, subchaser, submarine and Dewey's old flag ship, the Olympia. Well friends, I think I have done very well for this time, but will be glad to hear from anyone up that way who would care to write and I'll try and find time some how to answer. There is one thing that I have not ever received and that is some home made candy, and as some of the boys have received a number of packages, and as the rules of this life is to always whack up, I am commencing to feel ashamed to "dip in." This is not asking for anything like that of course, but I know a few people in Klemme who make candy a little better than any I have yet tasted down here and they can consider it a hint if they wish.

I again wish to thank everyone for their kindness in sending me the comfort kit and assure you that the kindness will never be forgotten. Hoping this will find everyone in Klemme and vicinity well, happy and prosperous, and to hear from anyone who cares to write, I remain,

Your friend,

There was quite a serious auto smash up a mile west of Ventura on Sunday evening when a Ford going east and a Maxwell going west ran into each other on a narrow grade, locking the front wheels and ditching both cars. The occupants of the cars were badly injured and three or four were rushed to the Mason City hospital. The cars were badly smashed and almost a total wreck. It is reported that the cars were traveling at a high rate of speed when the accident occured.

The introduction of improved dairy stock in Iowa is rapidly increasing through the organization of dairy calf clubs. This work was started by the Iowa State Dairy Association a year ago and has already been responsible for bringing in a large number of high grade heifer calves of the leading dairy breeds. Many clubs ranging in size from 40 to 200 members have been organized in various parts of the state.

The purpose of this movement is two-fold: The first idea is to interest the boys and girls who are the future farmers in the dairy cow and the dairy business. The second idea is to replace the "so-called" dairy cows now being milked with high grade dairy cows of the leading dairy breeds

No one thing can attract and hold a child's interest so much as to really own some animal or article—something over which they have entire charge, the payment for which they are held responsible, the sale of which must be upon their own decision, and the care and management of which is their daily task. It is when the boy and girl really own a commodity, when they are truly in business for themselves that their interest is fully aroused. It has for years been a common practice for a farmer to give his boy some runt pig. The lad takes good care of it and it develops into a large hog—it is turned in with the other hogs to fatten and is soon forgotten and sold. The idea of "boy's pig but Dad's hog" has been the cause of too many boys leaving the farm. Give him an interest in the livestock and he will be only too glad to stay by it.

In this organization work, every precaution is taken to safeguard the members. The calves are sold to the boys and girls at the actual purchase price plus the price of insurance against any possible loss by death for the period of the club which usually terminates in one year.

The calves introduced are from the four leading dairy breeds, viz: Holstein, Jersey, Guernsey and Ayrshire. These come from high grade herds in Wisconsin and are shipped into the community by express. They are from four to six weeks of age and the approximate cost is $25 per head. Each boy or girl who becomes a member signs an application blank and agrees to give a note for the purchase price of the calf, countersigned by the parent or guardian. The note gives the boy or girl an idea of business and impresses upon them their responsibility of payment.

In order to make the club a success, the State Dairy Association cooperates with the creamery wherever such an institution is in operation and also with the banks. The creamery officers are always ready to lend any assistance they can to promote the club, because it means more dairy herds in their vicinity and consequently a larger production of butter.

Such a club has been proposed for this community and representatives of the Iowa State Dairy Association have been here to confer with the officers of the creamery and representatives of the banks. Announcement will soon be made as to the further arrangements and it is hoped to organize a strong club and have the calves in this vicinity not later than June 15th.

THE RED CROSS DOLLAR

Just for a moment
Let's close our eyes
And hold one dollar
In our hand
And take a journey
Over wintry seas
To where our boy
Is billeted
Somewhere in France
And then
Let's follow him
Through winter storms
And muddy roads
And sodden fields
And sleepless nights
And thoughts of home.
Let's stand with him
Behind the lines
And listen
To the noise of war
That cries its way
And whines its lust
For human life.
Let's go with him
On that dread day
On which he goes
Beyond the line
Into the strife
Where humans sing
And bullets sing
Their "song of hate."
And somewhere
As we travel on
Along the way
That he has gone
There comes a chance
That he may fall
While we are there
And then
We'll open up your hand
And hold our dollar
High above
And cry for help
And none will come.
And that's the dream
I'd have you dream
Back here at home
And then awake
And put one dollar
In your hand
And take it
To a Red Cross place
And turn it in
And then
Some day
Somewhere in France
A surgeon
Or a Red Cross nurse
May stand
Upon the very spot
You stood upon
While in your dream
An idle coin
That you had held
They'll hold
In what it bought
At home
Of life
And comfort
For your soldier boy.
I thank you.

LEARN TO LIKE GOOD MUSIC

Soldiers in Paris Lose Their Fancy for Ragtime by Frequent Attendance at Opera.

It is curious to think that the government is sending American soldiers to Europe to get a musical education, according to Samuel Lellouche, lance corporal of the Three Hundred and Twenty-eighth infantry, army of France, who is in New York on sick leave, says the New York Herald.

The orchestra had just played the overture from "I Pagliacci," and the corporal had listened to it with rapt attention.

"Ah, but I love that kind of music," he said. "I never cared for it much before I left my home in West Haven, Conn., about three years ago and joined the French army, but there in France I heard nothing else. I grew to love fine music, and now I detest the other kind—ragtime and all that sort of thing. It will be so with the American soldiers in France. You see, they admit the American soldiers free to the opera there, and they soon learn to love it. I saw how it was before I left Paris. The musical taste of the boys was being improved rapidly, and the longer they stay over there the more critical they will become, so that eventually it will help music in this country when they get back to their homes, for they will insist upon having what is good."

TERRIBLE, TERRIBLE.

"The demands for money nowadays are simply enormous."

"Terrible, terrible! Here's the government wanting $2,000,000,000, and only this morning Jones asked me to lend him a V."

MAIN RESULT.

"I heard Billy had a bad smash-up when he took his fiancee out in his automobile for a joy ride."

CHAPTER VII

SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS, VOL. VIII

Two lodges, belonging to the same old time period as the house itself, stood at the extreme right and left of the low wall that separated the front courtyard from the Place du Palais-Bourbon. These lodges were joined to the main building, situated at the back of the courtyard, by a series of outhouses. On one side were the coach stables, stables, harness rooms, and garage, with the porter's lodge at the end; on the other side, the wash houses, kitchens and offices, ending in the lodge occupied by Mlle. Levasseur.

This lodge had only a ground floor, consisting of a dark entrance hall and one large room, most of which served as a sitting room, while the rest, arranged as a bedroom, was really only a sort of alcove. A curtain hid the bed and wash hand stand. There were two windows looking out on the Place du Palais-Bourbon.

It was the first time that Don Luis had set foot in Mlle. Levasseur's room. Engrossed though he was with other matters, he felt its charm. It was very simply furnished: some old mahogany chairs and armchairs, a plain empire writing table, a round table with one heavy, massive leg, and some book shelves. But the bright color of the linen curtains enlivened the room. On the walls hung reproductions of famous pictures, drawings of sunny buildings and landscapes, Italian villas, Sicilian temples. * * *

The girl remained standing. She had resumed her composure, and her face had taken on the enigmatical expression so difficult to fathom, especially as she had assumed a deliberate air of dejection, which Perenna guessed was intended to hide her excitement and alertness, together with the tumultuous feelings which even she had great difficulty in controlling.

Her eyes looked at him rather defiant. It really seemed as though she had nothing to fear from the explanation.

Don Luis kept silent for some little time. It was strange and it annoyed him to feel it, but he experienced a certain embarrassment in the presence of this woman, against whom he was inwardly bringing the most serious charges. And, not daring to put them into words, not daring to say plainly what he thought, he began:

"You know what happened in this house this morning?

"This morning?"

"Yes, when I had finished speaking on the telephone."

"I know now. I heard it from the servants, from the butler."

"Not before?"

"How could I have know earlier?"

She was lying. It was impossible that she should be speaking the truth. And yet in what a calm voice she had replied!

He went on:

"I will tell you, in a few words, what happened. I was leaving the telephone box, when the iron curtain, concealed in the upper part of the wall, fell in front of me. After making sure that there was nothing to be done, I simply resolved, as I had the telephone by me, to call in the assistance of one of my friends. I rang up Major d'Astrignac. He came at once and, with the help of the butler, let me out. Is that what you heard?"

"Yes, monsieur. I had gone to my room, which explains why I knew nothing of the incident or of Major d'Astrignac's visit."

"Very well. It appears, however, from what I learned when I was released, that the butler and, for that matter, everybody in the house, including yourself, knew of the existence of that iron curtain."

"Certainly."

"And how did you know it?"

"Through Baron Malonyi. He told me that, during the revolution, his great grandmother, on the mother's side, who then occupied this house and whose husband was guillotined, remained hidden in that recess for 13 months. At that time the curtain was covered with woodwork similar to that of the room."

"It's a pity that I wasn't informed of it, after all, I was very nearly crushed to death."

This possibility did not seem to move the girl. She said:

"It would be a good thing to look at the mechanism and see why it became unfastened. It's all very old and works badly."

"The mechanism works perfectly. I tested it. An accident is not enough to account for it."

"Who could have done it, if it was not accident?"

"Some enemy whom I am unable to name."

"He would have been seen."

"There was only one person who could have seen him—yourself. You happened to pass through my study as I was telephoning and I heard your exclamation of fright at the news about Mme. Fauville."

"Yes, it gave me a shock. I pity the woman so very much, whether she is guilty or not."

"And, as you were close to the arch, with your hand within reach of the spring, the presence of an evildoer would not have escaped your notice."

She did not lower her eyes. A slight flush overspread her face, and she said:

"Yes, I should at least have met him, for, from what I gather, I went out a few seconds before the accident."

"Quite so," he said. "But what is so curious and unlikely is that you did not hear the loud noise of the curtain falling, nor my shouts and all the uproar I created."

"I must have closed the door of the study by that time. I heard nothing."

"Then I am bound to presume that there was some one hidden in my study at that moment, and that this person is a confederate of the ruffians who committed the two murders on the Boulevard Suchet, for the prefect of police has just discovered under the cushions of my sofa the half of a walking stick belonging to one of those ruffians."

She wore an air of great surprise. This new incident seemed really to be quite unknown to her. He came nearer and, looking her straight in the eyes, said:

"You must at least admit that it's strange."

"What's strange?"

"This series of events, all directed against me. Yesterday, that draft of a letter which I found in the courtyard—the draft of the article published in the Echo de France. This morning, first the crash of the iron curtain just as I was passing under it, next, the discovery of that walking stick, and then, a moment ago, the poisoned water bottle——"

She nodded her head and murmured:

"Yes, yes—there is an array of facts——"

"An array of facts so significant," he said, completing her sentence meaningly, "as to remove the least shadow of doubt. I can feel absolutely certain of the immediate intervention of my most ruthless and daring enemy. His presence here is proved. He is ready to act at any moment. His object is plain," explained Don Luis. "By means of the anonymous article, by means of that half of the walking stick, he meant to compromise me and have me arrested. By the fall of the curtain he meant to kill me or at least to keep me imprisoned for some hours. And now it's poison, the cowardly poison which kills by stealth, which they put in my water today and which they will put in my food tomorrow. And next it will be the dagger and then the revolver and then the rope, no matter which, so long as I disappear; for that is what they want: to get rid of me.

"I am the adversary, I am the man they're afraid of, the man who will discover the secret one day and pocket the millions which they're after. I am the interloper. I stand mounting guard over the Mornington inheritance. It's my turn to suffer. Four victims are dead already. I shall be the fifth. So Gaston Sauverand has decided: Gaston Sauverand or some one else who's managing the business."

Perenna's eyes narrowed.

"The accomplice is here, in this house, in the midst of everything, by my side. He is lying in wait for me. He is following every step I take. He is living in my shadow. He is waiting for the time and place to strike me. Well, I have had enough of it. I want to know, I will know, and I shall know. Who is he?"

The girl had moved back a little way and was leaning against the round table. He took another step forward and, with his eyes still fixed on hers, looking in that immobile face for a quivering sign of fear or anxiety, he repeated, with greater violence:

"Who is the accomplice? Who in the house has sworn to take my life?"

"I don't know," she said; "I don't know. Perhaps there is no plot, as you think, but just a series of chance coincidences——"

He felt inclined to say to her, with his habit of adopting a familiar tone toward those whom he regarded as his adversaries:

"You're lying, dearie, you're lying. The accomplice is yourself, my beauty. You alone overheard my conversation on the telephone with Mazeroux, you alone can have gone to Gaston Sauverand's assistance, waited for him in a motor at the corner of the boulevard, and arranged with him to bring the top half of the walking stick here. You're the beauty that wants to kill me, for some reason which I do not know. The hand that strikes me in the dark is yours, sweetheart."

But it was impossible for him to treat her in this fashion; and he was so much exasperated at not being able to proclaim his certainty in words of anger and indignation that he took her fingers and twisted them violently, while his look and his whole attitude accused the girl even more forcibly than the bitterest words.

He mastered himself and released his grip. The girl freed herself with a quick movement, indicating repulsion and hatred. Don Luis said:

"Very well. I will question the servants. If necessary I shall dismiss any whom I suspect."

"No, don't do that," she said eagerly. "You mustn't. I know them all."

Was she going to defend them? Was she yielding to a scruple of conscience at the moment when her obstinacy and duplicity were on the point of causing her to sacrifice a set of servants whose conduct she knew to be beyond reproach. Don Luis received the impression that the glance which she threw at him contained an appeal for pity. But pity for whom? For the others? Or for herself?

They were silent for a long time. Don Luis, standing a few steps away from her, thought of the photograph, and was surprised to find in the real woman all the beauty of the portrait, all that beauty which he had not observed hitherto, but which now struck him as a revelation. The golden hair shone with a brilliancy unknown to him. The mouth wore a less happy expression, perhaps, a rather bitter expression, but one which nevertheless retained the shape of the smile. The curve of the chin, the grace of the neck revealed above the dip of the linen collar, the line of the shoulders, the position of the arms, and of the hands resting on her knees: all this was charming and very gentle and, in a manner, very seemly and reassuring. Was it possible that this woman should be a murderess, a poisoner?

He said:

"I forget what you told me that your Christian name was. But the name you gave me was not the right one."

"Yes, it was," she said.

"Your name is Florence. Florence Levasseur."

She started.

"What? Who told you? Florence? How do you know?"

"Here is your photograph, with your name on it almost illegible."

"Oh!" she said, amazed at seeing the picture. "I can't believe it! Where does it come from? Where did you get it from?" And suddenly, "It was the prefect of police who gave it to you, was it not? Yes, it was he, I'm sure of it. I am sure that this photograph is to identify me and that they are looking for me, for me, too. And it's you again, it's you again——"

"Have no fear," he said. "The print only wants a few touches to alter the face beyond recognition. I will make them. Have no fear."

She was no longer listening to him. She gazed at the photograph with all her concentrated attention and murmured:

"I was 20 years old. * * * I was living in Italy. Dear me, how happy I was on the day when it was taken! And how happy I was when I saw my portrait! * * * I used to think myself pretty in those days. * * * And then it disappeared. * * * It was stolen from me like other things that had already been stolen from me, at that time——"

And sinking her voice still lower, speaking her name as if she were addressing some other woman, some unhappy friend, she repeated:

"Florence. * * * Florence——"

Tears streamed down her cheeks.

"She is not one of those who kill," thought Don Luis. "I can't believe that she is an accomplice. And yet—and yet——"

He moved away from her and, walked across the room, from the window to the door. The drawings of Italian landscapes on the wall attracted his attention. Next he read the titles of the books on the shelves. They represented French and foreign works, novels, plays, essays, volumes of poetry, pointing to a really cultivated and varied taste.

He saw Racine next to Dante, Stendhal near Edgar Allen Poe, Montaigne between Goeth and Virgil. And suddenly, with that extraordinary faculty which enabled him, in any collection of objects, to perceive details which he did not at once take in, he noticed that one of the volumes of an English edition of Shakespeare's works did not look exactly like the others. There was something peculiar about the red morocco back, something stiff, without the cracks and creases which show that a book has been used.

It was the eighth volume. He took it out, taking care not to be heard.

He was not mistaken. The volume was a sham, a mere set of boards surrounding a hollow space that formed a box and thus provided a regular hiding place; and, inside this book, he caught sight of plain note paper, envelopes of different kinds, and some sheets of ordinary ruled paper, all of the same size and looking as if they had been taken from a writing pad.

And the appearance of these ruled sheets struck him at once. He remembered the look of the paper on which the article for the Echo de France had been drafted. The ruling was identical, and the shape and size appeared to be the same.

On lifting the sheets one after the other, he saw, on the last but one, a series of lines consisting of words and figures in pencil, like notes hurriedly jotted down.

He read:

House on the Boulevard Suchet
First letter Night of 15 April
Second Night of 25th
Third and four Nights of 5 and 15 May
Fifth and following Night of 25 May

And, while noting first that the date of the first night was that of the actual day, and next that all these dates followed one another at intervals of 10 days, he remarked the resemblance between the writing and the writing of the rough draft.

The draft was in a notebook in his pocket. He was therefore in a position to verify the similarity of the two handwritings and of the two ruled sheets of paper. He took his notebook and opened it. The draft was not there.

"Gad," he snarled, "but this is a bit too thick!"

And, at the same time, he remembered clearly that, when he was telephoning to Mazeroux in the morning, the notebook was in the pocket of his overcoat and that he had left his overcoat on a chair near the telephone box. Now, at that moment, Mlle. Levasseur, for no reason, was roaming about the study. What was she doing there?

"Oh, the play actress!" thought Perenna, raging within himself. "She was humbugging me. Her tears, her air of frankness, her tender memories: all bunkum! She belongs to the same stock and the same gang as Marie Fauville and Gaston Sauverand. Like them, she is an accomplished liar and actress from her slightest gesture down to the least inflection of her innocent voice."

He was on the point of having it all out with her and confounding her. This time, the proof was undeniable. Dreading an inquiry which might have brought the facts home to her, she had been unwilling to leave the draft of the article in the adversary's hands.

How could he doubt, from this moment, that she was the accomplice employed by the people who were working the Mornington affair and trying to get rid of him? Had he not every right to suppose that she was directing the sinister gang, and that, commanding the others with her audacity and her intelligence, she was leading them toward the obscure goal at which they were aiming?

MADE IMMORTAL BY GOETHE

Leipzig Tavern in Which Poet Located Scene in "Faust," Was Well-known Gathering-Place.

Auerbach's cellar was a tavern at Leipzig which disappeared in 1912. It owed its chief fame to Goethe, who in this place located the scene in "Faust," wherein Mephistopheles, standing upon a wine cask, takes his flight into space with Doctor Faust, to the stupefaction of the guests drinking at the tables. The old building to which the cellar belonged was built by Doctor Stromer d'Auerbach at about 1520, the worthy doctor there storing the wine intended for his own use. Later, as the wine was good, he conceived the idea of selling it. In this way was established the tavern to which his name has been attached ever since. From the earliest years of the seventeenth century legend has placed in this cellar the famous adventure of Faust and Mephistopheles. Goethe, studying at Leipzig university from 1765 to 1768, frequented that cellar almost nightly and there talked with his friends of art, literature and politics, and thus he heard of that legend which he turned to such excellent account, at the same time so very greatly enriching the literature of his country.

They were all sitting round a log fire roasting chestnuts, and the host had been moralizing generally. At last he remarked:

"No, take my advice; never put off till tomorrow what you can do today."

"Hear, hear," said a handsome young man from the other side of the hearth, with a glance at his host's pretty daughter. "I once did that—and next day you took the mistletoe down!"

To drive a tank, handle the guns, sweep over the enemy trenches, you need strong nerves, good rich blood, a strong stomach, liver and kidneys. When the time comes, the man with red blood in his veins "is up and at it." He has the nerves for hardships—an interest in work grips him. That's the way you feel when you have taken a blood and nerve tonic, made up of Blood Root, Golden Seal root, Stone root, Queen's bark, and rolled into a sugar-coated tablet and sold in sixty-cent vials by almost all druggists for past fifty years as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This tonic, in liquid or tablet form, is just what you need this spring to give you vim, vigor and vitality. After the fag end of a hard winter, no matter if you feel "run-down," blue, out of sorts, try this "Medical Discovery" of Dr. Pierce's. Don't wait. To-day is the day to begin! A little "pep," and then laugh and live.

The best means to oil the machinery of the body, put tone into the stomach, kidneys and circulatory system, is to first practice a good house-cleaning. I know of nothing better as a laxative than a vegetable pill made up of May apple, leaves of aloe and jalap, as is commonly sold by all druggists as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. One should be taken at least once a week to clear the twenty-five feet of intestines. You will thus clean the system—expel the poisons and keep well. Now is the time to clean house. Give your liver a spring house cleaning.—Adv.

U-BOAT CREWS JEER AND LOOT

Logs of British Vessels Attacked by Submarines, Reveal Methods of Modern Pirates.

London, (by mail) The admiralty has afforded representatives of the press an opportunity of reading the logs of a number of vessels which have been sunk or attacked by enemy submarines and the information derived from these logs will enable the public to judge more practically than has yet been the case of the splendid services which have been uncomplainingly rendered to the associated nations by the mercantile marine. The official records of seafaring captains who have been the victims of submarine attacks show that our sailors have been shot at, jeered at and left to the mercy of the waves, and that their ships have been "looted" before being sunk. At the same time, the logs reveal the fact, in one or two instances, that submarine crews have shown a dislike for their nefarious work, and that help has been given to sailors who were struggling for their lives in the open sea.

In the case of one ship, on which there were 47 hands, the boatswain was standing abreast of the main mast when he saw the wake of a torpedo as it approached, and he had no time to report before the vessel was struck. After the explosion all hands were seen on deck. The ship sank stern first. There was no time to lower the boats, and practically the whole crew had lifeboats on when thrown into the water. When the submarine came to the surface a line was thrown to a raft which the crew had managed to launch, and it was hauled alongside the enemy vessel. A colored man was ordered on board, and as soon as he stepped on the submarine both his wrists were seized, and he was firmly held while being interrogated. The enemy took a photograph of him and also of a man on the raft. When the interrogation was completed the colored sailor dived from the submarine and swam to the raft. As the ship was singing the master dived off the bridge, he was not seen later. A number of men were rescued after being in the water for four hours.

Robbery was reported in connection with another attack. After the vessel had been shelled many times, the master and crew abandoned the ship, lowered the lifeboat, and rowed towards the submarine. Eight shots were fired at the lifeboat, followed by four revolver shots. It was only then that the crew saw the submarine, which was about 500 yards away. The captain and his men were taken on board and the commander of the submarine boarded the vessel, removed the chart, provisions, and papers, and left two men on board which afterwards blew her up. The master was searched, and his money watch and chain were taken from him. The commander of the enemy vessel said that there was no food left in the submarine which had been six weeks out, and he also mentioned that food in Germany was very short. During the night the crew were picked up by a destroyer.

"Torpedoed, and on her beam ends but not actually seen to sink," is the description given by a captain of an attack on his vessel. She was struck between the stokehold and No. 2 hold, both of which were blown up. The crew had time to take to the boats. The German captain, speaking in perfect English, asked the name of the ship and her tonnage, and verified the particulars given to him by reference to Lloyd's register. The master's boat with 23 men, reached shore the following day, and the mate's boat, with the remainder of the crew, was picked up. It was reported by the master that the officers and men of the submarine were "quite friendly and polite."

Jeered at Men.

One night a vessel was struck by a torpedo. The engines were stopped and all hands went to the boat stations. The port boat was lowered safely but within three minutes the ship sank and the davit caught it and capsized it, all hands being thrown into the water. The second officer went down with the ship, but seized hold of the capsized boat and climbed on top of it. The boatswain also was taken down, and he, as well as a seaman, got on the boat. After they had been on the upturned boat for some minutes a submarine appeared and hailed them to come on board. They explained that it was impossible. The submarine went ahead, and about a quarter of an hour later returned, and the men were again asked, in a rough voice, to come on board. The same answer was given, whereupon the submarine again went ahead, putting her helm over, and the whole of the men were thrown into the water. Those on the submarine must have known that there was a man under the boat, as they could easily have heard him knocking. His comrades however, pulled out the plug and gave him air, and eventually the boat was righted and he was rescued.

One of a group of other ships was torpedoed and the crew took to the boats, one of which capsized, and seven of the men managed to reach the life boat. The submarine came close, flashed her searchlight on the boat and on the men in the water, and after jeering at them made off. The survivors were picked up by a French torpedo boat next morning.

Attacked by a U-boat which fired two shots, the master got out the boats left the ship, and pulled towards the enemy vessel. The commander took four or five of his own men in the ship's boat and put some bombs on board. As these failed to explode he went back for more explosives, taking with him everything out of the ship that could be carried food clothing compass, and all the metal that the enemy could lay hands on. The vessel was then blown up. The crew in the meantime being on the deck of the submarine. They were treated very badly their clothes being thrown out of the boat into the sea. Only one coat was left them five having been flung overboard. The master begged for another, but he could not get any more.

"Looting" of Drink.

Two submarines were sighted at a distance of about six miles attacking a barque. The master of the observing vessel altered his course and lit a smoke bowl to screen his ship, but it was not very effective. Shortly afterwards he was attacked by one of the submarines. Being armed the vessel opened fire, but the U-boat was not within range, and a shot from the submarine struck the ship. Orders were given to haul down the ensign and ships were taken to abandon her. The boats were lowered and the ship was abandoned, the enemy still firing. When the submarine came up the vessel was "generally looted," everything the enemy could lay their hands on being taken, including the spirits in the forecastle room. Some of the Germans were seen drinking on the bridge. The enemy were alongside for about an hour, and treated our men fairly, even returning some of their personal kit which they had looted."

WONDER HOW GERMANS GET WEATHER KNOWLEDGE

London, Oct. 1.—How do the German officers get the accurate knowledge, which they appear to possess, of weather conditions in England, is often asked here. The knowledge is essential for them in their air raids, and captured documents show that their meteorological reports are fairly complete despite the fact that no publication of weather data or forecasts is permitted in English newspapers.

An English meteorological expert declares that the answer to the question is not through any system of spies and land wireless, but that the data is derived from observations taken by submarines.

The important point for the Germans, he says, is to know the weather conditions off the northwest coast of Ireland and he thinks that a submarine working at that place is detailed to send weather reports to Germany by relays through the wireless apparatus working around the British Isles.

Children on Food Shortage.

The Liverpool food intelligence committee offered prizes of war savings certificates to children in the elementary schools for essays on "The Causes of the Present Food Shortage and Why the Resulting Difficulty Must be Loyally and Cheerfully Endured by All." Here are some extracts from the essays, taken from the Liverpool Post and Mercury:

"Sitting down and grumbling," writes one, "is useless. It seems a mockery to go to church and sing 'God Save the King' and then come home and, because there is a stew instead of a sirloin, abuse the king and country."

A boy of 14 is particularly strong upon the hoarders. He says: "Hoarders are traitors, therefore buy your goods at one shop only. To eat less and win the war is better than to gorge and lose it. Do this with a smiling face, as discontent leads to riot."

The following is certainly philosophical: "The food is not very palatable, but if we are cheerful we shall keep healthier."

Originality and force in introduction has been aimed at successfully by one boy of 12. "This is the way to Grumbletown. Are you going?" Certainly not! There is no room there for the true Britisher."

According to one youngster, the British have achieved the impossible. He says: "Though we shall miss our favorite dishes the thought that Jack and Tommy are provided for will help us to buckle in and show the enemy that, though it could not be done, we have done it."

BOGUS PATRIOTISM.

From the Spokane Spokesman-Review.

In one day's news budget is a report of an Ohio mob dragging suspected pro-Germans from their beds, while a Texas mob publicly whipped a man who was said to have made unpatriotic utterances.

It is a cheap sort of patriotism that leads men to such acts. If their victims are guilty the courts and the law are always in readiness to deal with them. If they are innocent, as may well be the case, they are victims of a cruel wrong.

Mobs almost invariably are moved by passion and act on impulse, and justice is improbable where these evils have sway.

The men composing these mobs could have rendered better service to their country by laying orderly complaints before the officers of the law. Their violent actions discredit popular government. Every time an American mob shows its contempt for law it helps to perpetuate the kaiser's autocracy in Germany.

CITY'S GLORY LONG DEPARTED

Ruins Testify to Existence of Once Mighty Metropolis in Southeastern Africa.

In a far-off corner of southeastern Africa are hidden the ruins of a once mighty city, called in present times the Zimbabwe, or buildings of stones. The more fanciful of the scientists declare that the time of Moses may have seen the building of these crumbling walls, but the weight of evidence seems to prove that the city is only about ten centuries old. Whatever the true dates of the city's history, certainly its ruins today are in appearance very old, very moss hung and very picturesque.

There is nothing sad about the slipping away of these relics of the past, so gradually they have sunk into the soil and broken down with the pressure of time and weather. Their day of glory and prosperity was over some centuries ago, and they rest dreamily in the sunshine. Bright flowers deck the walls as of trying to hold the remaining stones together; and tall trees spread their branches wide to temper the heat of the midday sun and shelter the stones from the chill of the evening.

Says Fish Have Brains.

Stephen Decatur Bridges of Verona, near Bangor, who is known as the salmon and alewife king of the Penobscot is as positive not only that fish have brains, but that fish reason and form dislikes and likes and tell their opinions to each other.

Bridges explains the disappearance of salmon from the Penobscot in two ways: either "salmon tell other salmon how dirty its waters are and how it is not fit for any respectable salmon to live in," or "the fish resent it because of the hatchery in East Orland they are taken from the water and stripped of their eggs."

"The fish resent that because it is against nature," Mr. Bridges asserts. They decide they are not being treated right and stay away."—Boston Herald.

Millions Saved— Get Your Share

Improved methods of building cars, that build them better and save millions of dollars to the public, is one of the substantial advantages you get in this Overland Model 90.

The time to save money is when you select your car, because afterwards you cannot make it any more economical than it is built to be.

Select this Model 90 and you save money in the first cost and in the maintenance cost. You cannot get complete satisfaction from less advantages than it gives—

And you cannot get as much value in any other car for the low price of this Model 90.

It has a powerful, fuel-saving motor; narrow turning radius; rear cantilever springs; 106-inch wheelbase; 31 x 4 tires, non-skid rear. Auto-Lite starting and lighting and vacuum fuel system.

It is as desirable as it is adequate, comfortable and easy-to-handle.

With it a salesman can double his value; a housewife gains time for Red Cross work, and business and professional men save time and multiply their activities.

It coins time and money for more than 80,000 others. Why not for you?

TWO MORE KLEMME BOYS ENLIST

Monday Arthur McElmurray and Walter Lewis went over to Mason City to enlist in the Navy. They will probably leave for the training station at Great Lakes Station some time this month. Both of these young men are giving up good positions. Art has been the proprietor of the Sanitary Barber Shop for about three years and Werner has devoted most of his time to farming. We understand Art has employed the services of a good barber to run his shop while he himself is helping Uncle Sam win the war. Both of the young men have promised to "get the Kaiser," needless to say that such despised fiend will get a severe trimming if these young huskies ever get him. We wish the boys good luck.

Chas Letch, editor of the Goodell Herald, has enlisted as a printer. The Klemme Democrat will publish the Goodell Globe during his absence. Judgment in Public Affairs.

THE KAISER GETS ANOTHER WALLOP FROM KLEMME!

Monday night the ladies of the local Red Cross gave a moving picture benefit to raise funds for Our Boys who leave for service. The picture was "The Man Without A Country." The Idle Hour was packed to full capacity for both shows, standing room was at a premium. The proceeds of the picture will be used as a fund for purchasing remembrances for the boys who leave Klemme for service with Uncle Sam. The remembrances will perhaps be in the form of comfort kits, or other useful gifts that the boys may need. This fund is entirely independent of the Red Cross fund. The ladies are to be highly complimented on their thoughtfulness and for the time they have spent in raising this fund. We also want to call the attention of the people to the liberality of Dr. Parsons, who is cooperating along with the Red Cross in furnishing them the pictures and the hall at cost, or even less. Without his aid along these lines such beneficial work could not be accomplished. The Klemme Red Cross are doing a lot toward a swat at the Kaiser. They are doing their part to help win the war.

RED CROSS CARD OF THANKS

The ladies of the Red Cross wish to thank those who took part in making the Boys' Benefit a success. They also want to thank the people of Klemme and vicinity for their liberal patronage to the movie.

DYNAMIC RED CROSS MONEY

By FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior.

OUT of the $100,000,000 given last June by the American people to the Red Cross, nearly one-half ($45,000,000) has gone to help the ugees, the orphaned children, the repatriates and unded of the French, Belgian, Italian, Serbian, umanian and other peoples.

The Red Cross has spent more than $30,000,- in France alone in the establishment of canteens the poilus, the reconstruction of devasted dis- ts, the care of homeless children, the housing of ugees, the sending of food, clothes and supplies the sorely burdened civilian population. More n $2,000,000 has been spent in fighting tubercu- s, one of the worst of war's by-products; $1,149,- has been expended for the shelter of war orphans. 709,736 has been appropriated for the reconstruc- n of villages and general relief work in the dev- d areas.

In Italy a great work of relief was organized r the Austro-German drive of last fall, and the usands of refugees that came pouring over the and the Piave were aided by a business-like and reaching supply and canteen service, improvised of the existing organization. More than 00,000 was thus spent for Italy.

American funds will soon make the plain of nastir fertile once more through the importation eds and agricultural implements. In this section erbia more than fifty thousand refugees have on the verge of starvation for nearly two years. It should be a source of daily pride to every erican that our own Red Cross is adding new es to the American Name in the Mother ntinent. Our full support is essential if its pres- mighty work of succor and human brotherhood o be continued on an ever inereasing scale.

U. S. Must Cut Use Of Wheat by One-Half

America Consumed 42,000,000 Bushels Monthly. From Now Until Harvest Must Use Only 21,000,000.

RATION PER PERSON IS 1½ POUNDS OF WHEAT PRODUCTS WEEKLY

Military Necessity Calls for Greater Sacrifice Here—Allied War Bread Must Be Maintained—Our Soldiers and Sailors to Have Full Allowance.

If we are to furnish the Allies with the necessary proportion of wheat to maintain their war bread from now until the next harvest, and this is a military necessity, we must reduce our monthly consumption to 21,000,000 bushels a month, as against our normal consumption of about 42,000,000 bushels, or 50 per cent. of our normal consumption. This is the situation as set forth by the U. S. Food Administration at Washington. Reserving a margin for distribution to the army and for special cases, leaves for general consumption approximately 1½ pounds of wheat products weekly per person. The Food Administration's statement continues: Many of our consumers are dependent upon bakers' bread. Such bread must be durable and therefore, requires a larger proportion of wheat products than cereal breads baked in the household. Our army and navy require a full allowance. The well-to-do in our population can make greater sacrifices in the consumption of wheat products than can the poor. In addition, our population in the agricultural districts, where the other cereals are abundant, are more skilled in the preparation of breads from these other cereals than the crowded city and industrial populations.

With improved transportation conditions we now have available a surplus of potatoes. We also have in the spring months a surplus of milk, and we have ample corn and oats for human consumption. The drain on rye and barley, as substitutes, has already greatly exhausted the supply of these grains.

To effect the needed saving of wheat we are wholly dependent upon the voluntary assistance of the American people and We ask that the following rules shall be observed:

1. Householders to use not to exceed a total of 1½ pounds per week of wheat products per person. This means not more than 1¾ pounds of Victory bread containing the required percentage of substitutes and one-half pound of cooking flour, macaroni, crackers, pastry, pies, cakes, wheat breakfast cereals, all combined.

2. Public eating places and clubs to observe two wheatless days per week, Monday and Wednesday, as at present. In addition thereto, not to serve to any one guest at any one meal an aggregate of breadstuffs, macaroni, crackers, pastry, pies, cakes, wheat breakfast cereals, containing a total of more than two ounces of wheat flour. No wheat products to be served unless specially ordered. Public eating establishments not to buy more than six pounds of wheat products for each ninety meals served, thus conforming with the limitations requested of the householders.

3. Retailers to sell not more than one-eighth of a barrel of flour to any town customer at any one time and not more than one-quarter of a barrel to any country customer at any one time, and in no case to sell wheat products without the sale of an equal weight of other cereals.

4. We ask the bakers and grocers to reduce the volume of Victory bread sold, by delivery of the three-quarter pound loaf where one pound was sold before, and corresponding proportions in other weights. We also ask bakers not to increase the amount of their wheat flour purchases beyond 70 per cent. of the average monthly amount purchased in the four months prior to March 1.

5. Manufacturers using wheat products for non-food purposes should cease such use entirely.

6. There is no limit upon the use of other cereals, flours, and meals, corn, barley, buckwheat, potato flour, et ceteras.

Many thousand families throughout the land are now using no wheat products whatever, except a very small amount for cooking purposes, and are doing so in perfect health and satisfaction. There is no reason why all of the American people who are able to cook in their own households cannot subsist perfectly well with the use of less wheat products than one and one-half pounds a week, and we specially ask the well-to-do households in the country to follow this additional programme in order that we may provide the necessary marginal supplies for those parts of the community less able to adapt themselves to so large a proportion of substitutes.

In order that we shall be able to make the wheat exports that are absolutely demanded of us to maintain the civil population and soldiers of the allies and our own army, we propose to supplement the voluntary co-operation of the public by a further limitation of distribution, and we shall place at once restrictions on distribution which will be adjusted from time to time to secure as nearly equitable distribution as possible. With the arrival of harvest we should be able to relax such restrictions. Until then we ask for the necessary patience, sacrifice and co-operation of the distributing trades.

RED CROSS NEWS

The great financial Red Cross Fund drive starts May 20th. This money is not for local use. It is a call from Washington. I understand we get 25 per cent of what is raised in our quota to help support our chapter and branches. The money paid in to this fund does not make you a member as this is not a membership drive, but you can pay an extra dollar along with the money you donate to the Red Cross War Fund and you will become a member of our branch. The quota for Klemme and Ell township is $500 and German township's quota is $400. Everybody respond cheerfully as we do no twant our quota wanting, but let it be full and running over. Here are some of the things which we might think and do:

Think of what you can afford. Give, then double it—a life may depend on it.

While someone gives his life what are you giving?

Think a minute.

If your day's pay would save a life would you give one day a month?

A little starving child brought back to life because you went without some little enjoyment.

This is war fund—give until it hurts, and then a little more.

Help the Red Cross along all you can as it is the greatest mother to our Boys "over there."

Let each member try to give just two hours a week at our rooms or do as Mrs. Walter Ross does. She lives on a farm several miles in the country and when she can not come she donates a dollar every now and then. Her mind and heart are with the Red Cross and so is her funds and help. We can all do as much. Try.

Since the Klemme Times has printed the new telephone books March first, sixteen new telephones have been installed on the Koerner Telephone System. That is a good record, there will be more added.

Mr. Koerner is giving the people of Klemme and vicinity excellent service and that fact perhaps is the main cause for the installing of so many new phones. Elsewhere in this issue will be found a list of new phones for this week. Copy them in the back of your book for future reference.

KLEMME, IOWA

The Japanese have many curious superstitions about animals, the chief among which is their belief in the supernatural power of foxes. There are, in fact, numberless shrines in Japan which are dedicated to foxes. The badger is another animal feared by the superstitious Japanese mind. It is believed to have power to annoy people, and to be able to turn into a priest at will. The crying of weasles and the baying of dogs are considered evil omens, and such insignificant happenings send a shudder through the believers. In Japan a light colored mouse in the house is a sign of happiness. If a spider falls from the ceiling in the morning it brings pleasure, but if at night it is thought to be very unlucky.

The publishing house of Thomas Nelson & Sons, of Edinburgh, Scotland, has an important project under way for manufacturing paper from bamboo in Trinidad. About 1,000 acres of land near St. Joseph (seven miles from the capital at Port of Spain), has been planted in bamboo, and a concession has been obtained giving the firm the right to cut bamboo from the government forests.

Perfumes entered largely into the temple service, as shown in the bible in the two forms of incense and ointment (Exodus xxx, 22-38). In private life they were applied both to the person and to garments (Psalms xiv, 8; Canticles iv, 11), and to articles of furniture, such as beds (Proverbs vii, 17).

Mrs. Mary Olson, of Big Rapids, Mich., recently received $21 from the government as a soldier's dependent, but returned it with the patriotic request that it be used by the Red Cross. Her son is a corporal in France. Mrs. Olson had obtained employment and found the $21 unneeded.

It is not often that a man talks himself out of $1,000, but City Clerk Richard Lindsay, of Detroit, entered such strong objections to raising the minimum pay for city clerk and treasurer from $5,000 to $6,000 a year, that the commissioners decided not to make the change.

Coal reserves in the south are supposed to amount to 530,000,000,000 tons. West Virginia is said to have a greater coal area than Great Britain and Germany combined, and it is thought that Kentucky has coal enough to supply the whole world for several generations.

Houses are so scarce in Bath, Me., that Fred Knightly, of Waterford, who is now employed in Bath shipyards, decided to move his house from Waterford to Bath. It was taken down in sections and shipped from Norway to Bath, where it is being reconstructed.

MERRILL, IA., WOMAN IS FATALLY BURNED

Was Heating Linseed Oil on Gasoline Stove When an Explosion Occurred.

Merrill, Ia., May 11.—Mrs. Herman Epling is dead as a result from burns received while a quntity of linseed oil and paint she was warming up on a gasoline stove exploded, throwing the burning liquid over her.

Mrs. Epling's screams brought neighbors to her aid, but too late to save her from receiving the burns that caused her death. The oil ignited her clothing from her shoulders to her feet. Wet blankets were thrown over her to quench the flames. The blaze was smothered, but not before her clothing was entirely burned from her body.

Mr. Epling was not at home at the time the accident occurred and did not learn of it until several hours afterward. Mrs. Epling was 70 years old. She lived only a few hours after the accident.

IOWAN IS INJURED IN AIRPLANE ACCIDENT

San Antonio, Tex., May 11.—Lieut. James D. May, of New York, was killed and Lieut. Milo H. Miller, of Waterloo, Ia., was seriously injured last night when the airplane in which they were flying fell six miles northwest of this city. Both men were pinned under the machine when it fell. They were taken to the base hospital at Fort Sam Houston, where May died shortly afterward.

Miller's father is Herman Miller, of Waterloo, Ia.

The men were flying low when the accident occurred. Both men, it is said were scheduled to leave Kelly field here today, having completed their instruction. The death of May is the 15th fatality among flyers at Kelly field.

HOLLANDER'S SCHOOL IS CLOSED FOR THE WAR

Sully, Ia., May 11.—The Christian school at Sully, a Holland school, is now taking a temporary vacation and will probably not be opened again until after the war. The school has been keeping up its daily school work until this week, when it was ordered closed by the Jasper county council of defense.

John Stock, president of the board of trustees controlling the Holland school, said that the school would open again in September. However, the council of defense says that unless the war is over, the school will remain closed.

Storm Lake, Ia., May 10.—Bishop E. S. Johnson gave the address at the dedication of the Masonic service flag on which were placed 17 stars. The dedicatory service was arranged by Joseph E. Marcombe and were conceded to be the most beautiful and impressive in the city. Knights Templars attended in full uniform.

PREACHER FEARED HE MIGHT NOT FARE WELL

Storm Lake, Ia., May 10.—Because he feared that an infuriated community would do him great bodily injury, Rev. Mr. Benson, pastor of the Swedish Lutheran church of Albert City, this county, is said to have taken French leave.

Rev. Mr. Benson refused to allow the I. O. O. F. lodge to attend the funeral services of Godfried Bengston, a Camp Dodge soldier, or permit any flowers to be placed in the church, it is alleged. That night his house, the church and his automobile were decorated with the yellow and black. Sheriff Skeels was called and five men were arrested, but no evidence was found against them. The minister is a young man in draft age and it is reported that he left to join the army.

Washington, May 10.—In announcing today arrangements for converting first and second Liberty loan bonds into bonds of the third loan bearing 4¼ per cent interest, Secretary McAdoo explained that the new conversion bonds would not be ready for delivery until July 1, and requested bondholders not to ask conversion before that date, although legally bonds may be converted any time from today to next November 9.

N. W. IOWA DOCTORS TO RAISE THEIR FEES

Members of Associations In Four Counties Have Committee Making Up Schedule.

George, Ia., May 11.—The doctors of northwestern Iowa belonging to the medical association of the four counties have decided to hike their fee bill upwards and a committee made up of Drs. Winkler, of Sibley, chairman; Dr. Rawleigh, of Little Rock, Dr. Avery, of Primghar, and Dr. Meyers, of Hawarden, is now making up the new schedule of fees to be charged and as soon as this committee reports and the report is adopted the physicians' organization will announce the increased rates through the newspapers of the four counties.

BUTTER FAT NEEDED BY HUMAN BODY

Ames, Ia., May 11—"In the long run it will be false economy for Iowa housewives to use substitutes in place of butter," says M. Mortensen, head of the dairy department at Iowa State college.

"There is no real substitute for butter fat as a food and as a builder of human health and strength," says Mr. Mortensen. "Dr. E. V. McCollum, of Johns Hopkins university, who is in Iowa this week on a speaking tour, has proved that butter fat contains an element which he calls 'Soluble A', which is necessary for human growth and health. This substance, he also says, is not found in the fats from which oleomargarine is made. Children who are deprived of butter fat become afflicted with eye troubles and otherwise show that they are not being supplied with an important food material. Housewives who exclude butter from their tables are taking serious chances, especially with growing boys and girls."

FORMER BREWER LOSES SUIT FOR WIFE'S DEATH

Council Bluffs, Ia., May 11—Judge O. D. Wheeler took a $10,000 personal injury damage case from the jury and ordered a verdict for the defendant.

The case was that of Arthur C. Storz, former Omaha brewer, against the Rock Island Railroad company for the death of his wife, who with another woman was killed in an automobile which was hit by a Rock Island train in this city about a year ago. Contributory negligence was alleged by the defense, which asked for a directed verdict.

These men are to be white and physically qualified to enter military service. They will entrain May 20.

LONG TIME RESIDENT OF LEMARS IS DEAD

LeMars, Ia., May 11.—Mrs. Thomas Stokes, for nearly a half century a resident of Plymouth county, is dead. She was 79 years old. Mr. and Mrs. Stokes settled on a homestead south of LeMars in 1870. She was widely known for her hospitality. She was the mother of 11 children, nine of whom survive her. One son, A. T. Stokes, represented Plymouth county in the state legislature for two terms. He was succeeded in office by J. W. Wormley, the incumbent.

WOULD FORCE PUPILS TO BUY GERMAN BOOKS

Des Moines, Ia., May 9.—Efforts of A. R. Morrow, superintendent of schools at Orange City, to compel pupils to buy German text books to replace those destroyed by fire, will come to naught, so far as the state council of defense is concerned. Garret Klay, chairman of the Sioux county defense council, has been instructed to notify Superintendent Morrow that it is not necessary for the pupils to study German longer to get credits at the state university.

LEMARS—Little interest is shown in local politics and few have filed nomination papers for offices in Plymouth county. Republicans who have filed are F. W. Stamp, auditor; Daisy Murtha, recorder; Jobe Kennedy, treasurer, Roy Root, clerk; H. Maxwell, sheriff, and A. Barnette, coroner. All of these except J. Kennedy are incumbents. A. Langhout for treasurer and Thomas Swain for sheriff are democrats who have filed nomination papers.

DAVENPORT—Twenty-seven teachers were thrown out of employment when, at a special meeting of the school board, the complete elimination of the German language was ordered in all the Davenport schools. Some time ago the board ordered the suspension of its instruction in the lower grades. The new order covers both grade and high schools. The order becomes effective immediately.

WISHED ALL AMERICANS WOULD BE KILLED

Fort Dodge, Ia., May 10.—D. Thomas Merris 60 years old, was held to the grand jury under $1,000 bonds after a hearing before Police Judge S. N. Magowan, for making disloyal remarks.

Merris is alleged to have said to his fellow workmen at the Quaker Oats mill this morning, "I wish that every one of the American soldiers would be killed as soon as they land in France." Merris is not German nor of German descent.

KEENAN IS APPOINTED COUNTY ATTORNEY

LeMars, Ia., May 10.—At a meeting of the board of supervisors the resignation of Clarence D. Roseberry was received and accepted and John T. Keenan was appointed to the position to fill out the unexpired term. Mr. Roseburry's resignation was caused by his wishing to enter the army.

Mr. Keenan was county attorney three terms before Mr. Roseberry was elected and is not new to the job.

However, he will not be a candidate for the position at the June primaries.

COUNTY APPROPRIATS FOR THE RED CROSS

Aberdeen, S. D., May 10.—The county commissioners of Brown county, on petition of officers and members of the Red Cross and many leading citizens, voted an appropriation of $75,000, to be raised by a tax levy, to be used in the financial support of the Brown county chapter of the Red Cross. Such action by county commissioners is authorized by a law passed at the recent special session of the state legislature.

BLUFFS DISCARDS THE GERMAN LANGUAGE

Council Bluffs, Ia., May 10.—The study of German was ordered discontinued and compulsory military training was adopted in the local high school by the school board last night. Motion to have the books burned by a delegation from the board was deferred to prepare a list of the volumns.

LIGHTNING CAUSE OF DISASTROUS FIRE

Fort Dodge, Ia., May 10.—The postoffice and general store at Judd, eight miles from here, operated by B. Baughman, was totally destroyed by fire at 4 o'clock this morning, having been struck by lightning. Mr. Baughman and his daughter, Miss Nellie, suffered burns received in their efforts to put out the fire.

FREDERICKSBURG—While Mr. and Mrs. Meier were in the barn doing the chores the house caught fire and their two little children, a boy 3 years old and a baby girl, were in the burning house when it was discovered. The father rushed to the house and succeeded in reaching the children. The room was a mass of flames and he was forced to leap from the window with a child in each arm. He was severely burned and the children are in a serious condition.

DECORAH—Jack O'Brien, a teamster was drowned in the upper Iowa river. He waded in beyond his depth while fishing.

NEVADA—Grace White, 23 years old, and Frank Jurlick, foreman of a section gang, have been arrested on a charge of violating the Mann act. The woman said she was the victim of a gang working out of Chicago. It is alleged Jurlick paid her expenses to come here from Illinois. The two were arrested in a bunk car at Ontario.

DECORAH—Returning from a golden wedding anniversary celebration, Hans Teslow, of this city, was instantly killed when his automobile plunged from the road into a creek near here. His son suffered a fractured skull and his wife was seriously injured.

IOWA STATE NEWS.

APPEALS TO IOWANS IN W. S. S. CAMPAIGN

Des Moines, Ia., April 9.—A last hour appeal to the war savings workers and citizens of the state to do all in their power to make the big W. S. S. drive a success has been sent out by Homer A. Miller, state director of the campaign. The statement follows:

"I have just returned from a meeting in Chicago with Frank A. Vanderlip, national director of the War Savings Stamp campaign. At his suggestion I am again sending out an appeal to all district, county and city chairmen in the state urging again that each do his utmost to see that Iowa raise her quota during this drive.

"This is a critical time for the freedom of the world, the preservation of our homes, and all that is dear to us.

"The eyes of Washington and the rest of the nation are upon Iowa. We must put the state 'over the top' in pledges. The success of this drive is now out of my hands and entirely up to you. G[illegible] of yourselves to your government this week. Our soldiers are expecting this. In the name of God and humanity I appeal to you to make your country good."

KEPFORD SAYS WAR NOT SOON OVER

Jefferson, Ia., May 9.—Dr. A. E. Kepford, Iowa director of the American Red Cross, delivered a patriotic address at a union service in which all the churches of this city united. The occasion was a meeting arranged by the local chapter of the American Red Cross, the purpose of which was to stir still deeper patriotic interest in the activities of the war.

Dr. Kepford declared that an early peace was impossible, and that America should prepare for a long contest involving the sacrifice of thousands of men and untold financial resources; that any early peace talk should be suppressed, as generally it emanates from pro-German sources, and that this great question should be determined one and for all by the absolute overthrow of the war lords of Germany.

CHILD IS ATTACKED BY VICIOUS BULL DOG

Ogden, Ia., May 9.—A vicious bull dog attacked Mrs. Rose Garvin and daughter at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hackthorn, two miles north of Ogden.

The 7-year-old daughter, Ferral, received a badly lacerated scalp and other scratches about the face and body and Mrs. Garvin was bitten in the arm when she attempted to rescue her daughter. The dog was recently brought to the Hackthorn home from Council Bluffs, it having previously been the property of a relative. The dog was immediately killed.

FARM LAND VALUES CONTINUE TO SOAR

Primghar, Ia., May 9.—Quite a few transactions in land are taking place. In several cases land purchased last summer and fall has been sold at an advance of $25 per acre. Recent sales run from $212.50 to $305 an acre. A fair average of property reasonably well back from town and fairly well improved would be about $250 an acre. Land values are increasing rapidly. The high prices for farm products the past few years are carrying land up to unexpected prices.

IOWA MANUFACTURERS GETTING WAR CONTRACTS

Washington, D. C., May 9.—Iowa manufacturers are beginning to get war contracts. George Wrightman, of the Iowa Manufacturers' association, said today 200 concerns were in close touch with government requests for bids. Numerous small contracts are being let to Iowans and Mr. Wrightman thinks the number will increase. The Bettendorf company, of Davenport, recently got $1,000,000 contract for manufacture of certain war materials.

AGED DENNISON MAN KILLED BY A TRAIN

Denison, Ia., May 9.—Benjamin Crampton, 77 years old, was killed by a train Sunday morning. The accident took place one mile north of this city early in the morning on the tracks of the Illinois Central. The engineer reported that he gave warning when he saw a man on the track. In this case no heed was paid, the man walking right into the oncoming train as if courting death. The deceased was weak in mind from advancing years.

BOY'S NECK BROKEN IN AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT

Perry, Ia., May 9.—A 14-year-old boy named Stoner, the son of a prominent farmer living a short distance east of Granger, was instantly killed when the car in which he was driving turned over on the big hill near that town.

The lad had been to school and when he complained of being sick he was excused and started for his home. His neck was broken.

GOVERNOR HARDING NEARLY HIT BY AN AUTO

Duluth, Minn., May 9.—Gov. W. L. Harding, of Iowa, had a narrow escape yesterday afternoon when Mrs. Dr. Charles Hutchinson, lost control of an automobile she was attempting to park. The automobile crashed over the curb and sidewalk into the building wall. Governor Harding jumped just in time to save himself.

IOWA CITY—Wilbur Goetz pleaded guilty here to a charge of assault upon his father, Joseph Goetz. Joseph Goetz recently filed suit against his wife for divorce and obtained an injunction providing that he should not be molested in his farm work. When he went to the farm and began work his son undertook to drive him off. Goetz refusing, the son assaulted him.

COGGON—Henry Smith and Henry McGuire, of Coggon captured an old timber wolf with seven cubs near the Smith farm. The old wolf was shot by the captors, but the young ones were taken alive. The scalp of the old one and the cubs were taken to the auditor at Manchester for the bounty.

ODEBOLT—The contract has just been let to local contractors for the erection of a new Methodist Episcopal parsonage to cost $8,000. According to the specifications it is to be a two-story, 8-room dwelling, strictly modern.

INTERN 12 WOMEN.

Gloucester, N. J., May 7.—Twelve alien women were lodged in the detention camp in this city by agents of the Department of Justice from San Francisco, Cal. These are the first women to be interned in the camp since the outbreak of the war and a bad one at that.

OPEN FIGHT O[illegible] REVENUE ISS[illegible]

McAdoo's Request for [illegible] Revision of Existing L[illegible] Meets Opposition in Both Parties.

Washington, May 10. Secretary McAdoo's plans for immediate legislation by congress to increase war revenue, announced last night, met today with immediate and formidable opposition. After a conference today between Representative Kitchin majority leader of the House and Chairman of the ways and means committee, Chairman Simmons, and other members of the Senate finance committee it was stated that revenue revision before next December is "very doubtful."

Both democrats and republicans, it is said, are prepared to insist upon the administration's original program of deferring tax revison until the December session. Unless Secretary McAdoo in the statement of the country's financial situation he is preparing for submission to the Senate and House committee chairmen conclusively demonstrates that immediate action is imperatively necessary leaders of both branches of congress are prepared to insist upon postponement.

"If there is a bill," Representative Kitchin said, after his conference with senators today, "the fellows who are profiteering right and left on the war will feel it. The taxes on excess profits and incomes will be raised so high that there will be little or no profiteering left in the hands of those who are now getting rich off the war."

Will Await Statement.

Representative Kitchin said that Secretary McAdoo's statement is received he would withhold judgment as to the necessity for immediate legislation although he said, he was in favor of revenue revision at the present session of congress and only agreed to postpone action at the request of the administration.

Doubt was expressed by Mr. Kitchin that the huge war appropriation made the basis for Secretary McAdoo's opinion regarding immediate legislation would have any effect on the treasury. He believes that actual drafts under the appropriations could not begin before next January.

Similar views also were expressed by members of the finance committee at today's meeting, but sentiment was general that if Secretary McAdoo should submit a fiscal settlement making certain that more funds will be needed before congress could enact a bill next winter there will be no disposition to refuse action now.

"If we proceed to pass a bill," Representative Kitchin said, "it will have to be completed much before the November elections."

LORRAINE FORCES WORRYING BOCHE

Display Great Uneasiness & Increase Gunfire to Forestall Possible American Attack.

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Army in Lorraine, May 9.—The Germans opposite the American lines in Lorraine continue to show evidence of uneasiness. They are speeding up their machine gun and artillery fire and increasing their gas bombardments, evidently seeking to forestall any aggressive action by our men.

Despite the fact German officers tell their men that the Americans here are few in number—according to enemy prisoners—the boches have become absolutely unaggressive, so far as infantry combats are concerned. They retire from their front lines every night, our patrols have discovered. German deserters are continually coming into the American lines.

Companies I and L, of the Ninth Infantry received the French war cross. They beat off a German attack April 14, north of St. Mihiel, when enemy troops entered the American trenches under a barrage, dressed in French uniforms, and yelling "gas alarm" in French and English. The ruse failed and the attackers were driven off, leaving a number of prisoners and the dead.

Every doughboy and officer is writing to "mother" in observance of Mothers' day, May 12.

General Pershing sent the following message to the field commanders:

"I wish every officer and soldier of the American forces would write a letter on Mothers' day. This is a little thing, but the letters will carry back our courage and affection to the patriotic women whose love and prayers inspire us and cheer us on to victory."

GERMAN TEXTILE MILLS CLOSED; WORKERS SUFFER

Amsterdam, May 10.—Herr Kraetzig, a socialist member of the reichstag, asserted in Wednesday's debate on the appropriations for the imperial economic demand that four-fifths of the textile industries of Germany were completely paralyzed and that the position of the idle textile workers was rapidly growing desperate. He demanded that adequate provision be made for them so as to keep skilled textile workers in readiness for resumption of the industries after the war. At present, he said, they were being compelled to accept employment from the authorities at starvation wages.

EAST MEETS THE WEST; FALLS RIGHT INTO LINE

Detroit, Mich., May 10.—H. C. Hollister, a supply sergeant with the American expeditionary forces, in a letter to friends, says: "I guess the funniest thing I have seen was a Chinese coolie with hands dug, Yankee fashion, in his trousers pockets, walking down a boulevard whistling 'Ireland Must Be Heaven, 'Cause My Mother Came From There.' And he couldn't speak a word of English. He is still living. I haven't told any of our Irish boys about him.

Borglum Sought to Trade Pull at White House for Stock in Airplane Plant

Washington, D C May 11 The government is in possession of evidence that Gutson Borglum, the sculptor, was promoting a private airplane production company while carrying on his sensational probe of the aircraft production board, it was officially learned this afternoon

The government first came into possession of the evidence last February which explains the sudden difficulties Borglum had in carrying on his investigation and his resulting complaint to President Wilson

Henry Harrison Suplee, chief engineer of the Dodge Motor Car company, with whom Borglum was to be associated in the proposed new stock company, has presented evidence to the government alleging that Borglum used his acclaimed personal association with President Wilson and the aircraft board as a means to furthering his own interests with the company

Through his "influence" it is alleged he was to overthrow the existing personnel of the aircraft production board and the signal corps and bring about the appointment of individuals more friendly to him. Suplee had a conference today with Vice President Marshall and Senator Thomas relative to reading the content of his disclosures into the Congressional Record

Negotiations between Borglum Hugo Gibson, connected with the British war mission in the United States, and Kenyon Mix of the Dodge Manufacturing company of Wisconsin, began last December the documents show. A statement by Mix included in the documents tells how he withdrew after becoming suspicious of Borglum's activities and reported the affair to Howard Coffin then head of the aircraft production board

Facts Given to Senate.

The documents which have been supplied from the official files of the war department and are now in the hands of senators most intimately connected with the aircraft investigation, declare that Borglum continued his negotiations after President Wilson authorized him to make an inquiry into the aircraft situation

A summary of the negotiations signed by Henry Harrison Suplee, who participated as a consulting engineer for Mix, declared Borglum was to be represented in the corporation by a Mr. Harris and that Borglum's "sole asset in the transaction was to be first, his personal friendship and association with President Wilson, whom he stated, "he could do anything he wanted with."

"As a further asset," Suplee's statement declares, "Borglum gave every one concerned in this matter to understand that his position with the aircraft production board and the aerial section of the signal corps, U S A., was such that he could obtain for their use plans and technical details which this company could use and thus save considerably, both in time and money, in beginning operations"

Mix Turned Him Down.

This statement, the documents show, was made to Mix after Borglum had shown his presidential authority as investigator, and at this point the suspicions of Mix were aroused and he withdrew from the negotiations

The documents also declare Borglum told Mix that "through his friendship with the White House and acquaintance with Mr. Gibson, the engineer in the employ of the British ministry of munitions, he would have access to the best foreign and American designs and practices."

Suplee's statement further declares that Borglum gave him to understand that the personnel of the aircraft board was "highly distasteful to him" and that he proposed to change it "by virtue of his friendship with President Wilson" and asked Suplee to suggest men for the places

The statement by Suplee in the war department official files, is in part as follows:

"1—That in all the relations concerning the matter of promotion of stock company for the manufacture of airplanes, during which I was present at several conferences with the projectors of this enterprise, as consulting engineer, I desire to state that there was never any other understanding of this project, but that Mr. Borglum was to be represented in the corporation by Mr. Harris, and that his sole asset in the transaction was to be, first, his personal friendship and association with President Wilson, whom he stated he could do anything he wanted with.

"2—As a further asset in this commercial venture, Mr. Borglum stated and gave every one concerned in this matter to understand that his position with the aircraft production board and the aerial section of the signal corps, U. S. A., was such that he could obtain for their use plans and technical details which this company could use and thus save considerably, both in time and money, in beginning operations

3—That one of the partners of this concern was to have been Mr Hugo C. Gibson, who is connected with the British ministry of war in the United States, offices at 120 Broadway, New York city, who proposed that certain patents which he controlled would be used by this company and who also stated that he would be able to influence orders for airplanes in such a way that this company might receive the benefit therefrom.

A statement by Mix, made as was Suplee's to the army intelligence, takes up his story of the proposed aircraft corporation when he encountered on a train enroute to Washington on December 8, 1917, two men who later turned out to be Borglum and Gibson. He says he was attracted by their conversation as to the progress of the Dayton-Wright Aircraft company on government contracts and on getting into conversation with them himself later told of the desire of his own company, the Dodge Manufacturing company to enter the field of aircraft production.

Yesterday's Effort Intended to Be on Large Scale But Drive Was Broken Up By Allied Guns.

By Associated Press.

With the British Army in France, May 11 The operation by which the British regained in a counter assault the small portion of trench north of Albert which the Germans had captured yesterday, while a small one, was important The positions in question lay on high ground which had been hotly contested ever since the Germans stormed their way into Albert

By Associated Press

Latest reports indicate the German effort in the north was to have been in great strength, but that the British artillery on the east and a French infantry attack and barrage on the west broke up the enemy divisions waiting to join the attack As a result only two divisions attacked on the scant five miles between Voormezeele and Ledytte After much heavy fighting, these troops had gained nothing and had sustained heavy losses Berlin reports the capture of 675 Anglo-French troops in successful attacks.

The weather has improved in northern France. Probably the Germans have been waiting for this to launch another strong blow. Allied airmen, however, have taken advantage of the change from rainy conditions to drop many tons of bombs on important railway and concentration centers behind the German lines. In air fighting, British aviators have accounted for 29 German machines, 22 of which were destroyed One enemy airplane was brought down by rifle fire.

Rostov-on-the-Don, the largest city in the Don Cossack territory and near the mouth of the Don river, has been occupied by the Germans

With the Americans in Picardy, May 9.—Fierce bombardment of German positions by American artillery has demolished the church at Cantigny and several adjacent buildings, blown up machine gun emplacements and post command positions at Fontaine-Sous-Montdidier and Courtemanche, and started a fire at Mesnil-St. Georges. The church at Cantigny was being used for observation by the enemy.

The bombardment lasted all night The concussion of the heavy guns rocked the entire front. At the same time, the 75s poured in a hot, harassing fire.

Not a single American prisoner has yet been lost on this front.

Forty of the enemy attempted to rush a section of our trenches, throwing grenades as they advanced They were repulsed before they penetrated our entanglements, leaving two dead on the wire. Their other casualties are not known.

Later another attempt was made to capture one of our advanced posts but it, too, was repulsed.

An American sentry who shot a German dog found a note in the message box on its collar from an enemy officer, asking permission to change his post of command.

CLAIM LOCAL SUCCESSES.

Berlin (via London, Thursday), May 9.—Completely successful local attacks southwest of Ypres on Wednesday resulted in the capture of 675 prisoners, according to the official statement from German general headquarters today. German troops, it is added, took by storm strong fortified positions on a front of more than a mile.

RETAKE LOST TRENCH.

London, May 10.—British troops yesterday evening recaptured the small portion of a trench (150 yards) which the Germans took north of Albert in the morning, Field Marshal Haig reported today. Elsewhere there was only artillery activity.

"A small portion of a trench which the enemy gained northwest of Albert yesterday morning was recaptured in the evening," the report said. "We took a few prisoners.

"Hostile artillery was active last night between the Sommo and the Ancre (in Picardy) and at different points on the Lys battle front (in Flanders)."

NEW WAR INDUSTRIES WILL BE MOVED WEST

By United Press.

Washington, D. C., May 11.—Big war industries henceforth will go west. To speed war work, the government has determined to place a virtual embargo on new plant construction in the great war belt of the east. The action has been determined upon for three reasons:

1—Concentration of war industries in the east has produced a state of congestion seriously interfering with maximum war production.

2 The west offers new reservoirs of labor and much needed power

3 War industries expansion in the west will restore to an even keel the financial structure now overweighted in eastern territory because of most war contracts going to eastern concerns

Officials are now working on plans to curtail orders to plants in the Pennsylvania, New York and Atlantic coast districts where congestion is now making rapid production and movement of supplies impossible. New factories will be forbidden to locate in this district, according to present plans, and will be urged to go to the middle west.

The first step in this direction is to be the establishment of the great new ordnance factory at "some interior point" to demonstrate the advisability of war factories getting outside the present eastern belt.

It is stated that failure of ordnance manufacture to meet expectations is due to the fact that industries in this belt are overloaded with contracts and lack of power, lack of labor, and congested rail facilities has kept down production to only 75 per cent of what is actually needed.

Laborers can't find places to live and leave with their families. The United States employment service announced today it could use 10,000 mechanics in the eastern belt within 24 hours if they were available.

This labor lack in essential industries is developing a government campaign to switch skilled labor from relatively unimportant into vital war activities.

VICTORY BY LLOYD GEORGE LEAVES POLITICAL BREACH

BY ED L. KEEN,
United Press Correspondent.

London, May 11.—With Premier Lloyd George's victory, by a vote of 293 to 106, the General Maurice affair is seemingly closed in so far as it affects the government, adding another to the string of the premier's political triumphs. The chief feature outstanding is the evident appearance for the first time during the war of organized opposition to the government.

Some of the newspapers supporting Lloyd George declare it marks the turning point in the war relations of the parties. They think an open political war has been declared and see the whole affair as a political plot to oust the government. They regard the vote on Herbert Asquith's motion for the appointment of a parliamentary committee to investigate the charges against the premier and the chancellor of the exchequer as a rout for the former premier. The same note ran through Lloyd George's defense of himself and his ministry.

The opposition press asserts that Lloyd George evaded the issue, sidestepped an inquiry by withdrawal of the offer of a judicial investigating board and won a parliamentary victory by legerdemain on the floor of the house

The public is greatly interested in America's attitude regarding the Maurice affair. Long quotations from the American press are published in the London papers.

Immediately after the introduction of Mr. Asquith's motion the premier took the floor and spoke in defense of the government. He refuted the charges of General Maurice and declared that statements made in his recent speech to which Maurice's charges referred, were made on information received from General Maurice's department of the war office. He showed also by documentary evidence that the extension of the British line was made because of pressure exerted by France, and that the decision was taken on the advice of the military authorities in agreement with Field Marshal Haig, the war cabinet having interfered in no way in the matter, although it approved of the dispositions.

When the premier left the house he was loudly cheered.

"Lloyd George turned the accusations inside out," the Evening News said. "When he had finished there was not even a rag left. Asquith's performance was feeble."

PARIS IS PLEASED.

Paris, May 10.—"We rejoice that the unprecedented conspiracy against Premier Lloyd George failed," the Paris Matin declared editorially today.

SEVEN SOLDIERS KILLED IN WRECK

Car Wheel Breaks and Coaches Roll Over Trestle—More Than Score of Men Are Injured.

Columbia, S. C., May 11.—Five soldiers were killed, two were so badly injured that they died en route to the base hospital, four were seriously injured and 18 less seriously hurt when a wooden passenger coach loaded with soldiers of the 321st infantry and the 317th machine gun company, jumped a trestle at Camp Jackson today.

A wheel under one coach broke just as the train reached the trestle. This caused the car to drop, finally going over the trestle. It pulled over the other coaches, one old wooden coach and one steel. The trucks from the latter fell on top of the first coach which had fallen over and as it smashed in, the men inside were crushed. There were 65 men in this coach.

The men had just entrained for the army cantonment at Camp Sevier, at Greenville, S. C. Nearly all of the men in two wooden coaches either were killed or seriously injured, according to early reports reaching here.

Two wooden coaches jumped the track first and a steel coach followed and crushed them. It was reported no one in the steel coach was seriously hurt.

MAKE FRIENDS OF SOUTH AMERICANS

President of Brazil Says War Policy of United States Will Promote Pan-American Policy.

By ROY W. HOWARD,
President of United Press Associations.

Sao Paulo, Brazil, May 10.—"Brazil will follow the course of the United States to the end of the war. The change of administration will not alter our policy of backing up the leadership of the United States in the most friendly and genuine way."

The speaker was President-elect Rodriguez Alves, who will return to the presidential chair of Brazil for the second time on November 15. In a most convincing manner and without equivocation, the next chief executive in an interview Thursday, the first he has given since his election, outlined his war policy about which speculation has been rife.

Before making his statement, the president-elect read very carefully the original copy of President Wilson's letter of January 16 to the United Press, in which he outlined the aims of the United States. Speaking slowly and seriously, he said:

"The sentiment expressed in this letter is worthy of the best traditions of the United States. It carries the same conviction which has made the recognized spokesman of the allies a man whose genius was not suspected before the war crisis. The attention drawn by his commanding style and unquestionable sincerity, based on extreme prudence and patience before action, has enabled him to carry South American thinkers along with him in sentiment if not always in action. The self abnegation of the United States in offering themselves as sacrifices in the war, and in abandoning the pursuits of peace without selfish individual ambitions and without a single objective which is not guaranteed to all peoples, has given President Wilson unprecedented moral authority, and has raised the United States in universal estimation to a position from which it can accomplish the absolute solidarity of the democracies of the western hemisphere without inciting the slightest envy or suspicion.

Horses fed partly on an "alimentary seaweed" ration in France thrived, gained in weight and the lymphangitis from which they suffered at the beginning of the experiment disappeared.

Germany Must Have an Early Peace or Rebellion, He Says

Copenhagen, May 11.—"If Germany does not achieve peace, there will be a revolution."

This statement was made here today by a traveler who has just returned from a tour of the central empires.

"The German reichstag, however, will make an honest effort to bring about a peace founded on President Wilson's program," he continued.

"Austro-Hungary must have peace at any price.

"The Czechs, determined upon a southern republic of the Slav races, are more than ever opposed to the Hapsburgs.

"The one desire of the Poles in the dual monarchy is that the allies will win. Their cry is: 'Long live Wilson!'

"Strikes are frequent in Vienna and Prague.

"The huge losses on the west front, stated in parliamentary circles to reach 600,000, are carefully concealed."

RAID OSTEND; BOCHE NAVAL BASE CLOSED

British Sink Old Cruiser Filled With Concrete Across Mouth of Channel and Block the Harbor.

SUFFER SLIGHT LOSSES

Navy Duplicates Zeebrugge Feat, Adding to German Difficulty of Carrying on U-Boat War.

Dover, England, May 11.—Some of the participants of the naval raid on Ostend returned here this morning, and were greeted with the greatest enthusiasm. The engagement lasted from one minute after midnight until 3 a. m. The guns were plainly heard.

By United Press.

London, May 11.—British naval forces again raided the German naval base at Ostend, on the Belgium coast, blockading the entrance to the harbor by sinking the old cruiser Vindictive, which participated in the recent raid on Zeebrugge, it was announced today.

"The Ostend-Zeebrugge operation, designed to close the ports, was completed last night," the admiralty declared.

"The obsolete cruiser Vindictive was sunk between the piers across the entrance to Ostend harbor.

"Since the attack on Zeebrugge April 23, the Vindictive had been filled with concrete

"Our forces returned to their base with the loss of one motor launch. It was damaged and was then sunk to prevent it falling into the enemy's hands. Our casualties were light."

The previous raid which was carried out early on the morning of April 23 was conducted simultaneously against Ostend and Zeebrugge. The latter port is believed to have been completely blocked through the sinking of two concrete filled cruisers in the channels. The mole also was damaged by the blowing up of an old submarine filled with explosives, and through the planting of bombs by a boarding party.

The raid on Ostend, however, was frustrated when a high wind dispelled the smoke screen protecting the British ships and permitted the German shore batteries to sink the blockade ships before they gained their objective.

One British destroyer, two motor boats and two launches were lost at Zeebrugge and the casualties were exceedingly heavy.

Ostend is located on the North sea, eight miles east of West End, where the battle lines touch the coast. It is 61 miles from Dover and 115 miles from London. Zeebrugge is 13 miles from Ostend.

Both Ostend and Zeebrugge are connected with Bruges, the principal German submarine base in Belgium, by canals. Bruges is 13 miles directly east of Ostend. Unlike Zeebrugge, however, Ostend is not protected by a big armed mole such as defends the former city from the west and north. Two short jetties project out on both sides of the entrance to the channel.

The channel is about 100 meters wide and 500 meters long. At the point where it joins the canal there are several roomy basins on each side. The town, which has a population of about 45,000, lies on the west side of the canal.

The old cruiser Vindictive, which was sunk last night in the Ostend channel, was the "flagship" of the previous raid on Zeebrugge, and landed the boarding party in the mole. She was built in 1897 and had a displacement of 5,750 tons. She was 320 feet long, had three funnels and carried a complement of 480 men. Her main battery consisted of 10 pinch guns.

ZEEBRUGGE IS RAIDED.

Amsterdam, May 11.—Strong allied flying squadrons bombed the mole and the village of Zeebrugge, the German submarine base on the Belgian coast at noon and in the evening Thursday. No military damage was done according to the official statement issued in Berlin. Two of the hostile airplanes were shot down by German airmen.

EXPLOIT WAS SURPRISE.

Dover, England, May 11.—The decision to send the Vindictive to Ostend was made a few days after her return from the Zeebrugge raid and the task of filling her with concrete was begun immediately.

As in the joint raid on Zeebrugge and Ostend this latest British naval exploit was kept a well guarded secret.

SENATE PLANS TO KEEP TAB ON WAR

Military Affairs Committee May Become "Committee on Conduct of War" to Check Up All Expenditures.

BY L. C. MARTIN,
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Washington, D. C., May 11.—The Senate military committee is about to become the "committee on the conduct of the war."

Senate leaders, long believing that congress should have a war body to keep in direct touch with the work of executive departments in carrying out programs authorized by the legislative branch of the government have taken the first step to this end by enlarging the military committee.

Senator Hoke Smith, of Georgia, is the new democratic member, and Senator Knox, of Pennsylvania, probably will be the republican addition.

The second step is pending—in the form of a resolution now before the Senate empowering the military committee "or any subcommittee thereof," to investigate every phase of war department activity to sit while congress is not in session, to spend money, bring in witnesses and employ investigators.

Adoption of the resolution, introduced by Senator Chamberlain, will be followed by appointment of subcommittees on aircraft, quartermasters' department and other divisions. The ordnance subcommittee already has begun its work.

These subcommittees will not adjourn until the war ends. They will keep in constant touch with everything the department does.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH
J. M. Howdeshell, Pastor

Next Sunday, May 19th, is "Red Cross Sunday," and from May 20-27, is "Red Cross Week." During this time the American people are going to be asked to give to the American Red Cross a second hundred million dollars. There is nothing that takes the place of the Red Cross work among the sick, wounded and dying. The calls are coming thick and fast but we are still in health and prosperity. The red blood of true American patriotism is rushing through our veins, and the town of Klemme with its surrounding community belongs to the "Over the Top" crowd, and we are going over in this drive.

Preaching service at 10:30 o'clock in the morning.

Sunday School at 11:30 o'clock.

Epworth League at 8 o'clock in the evening. Topic—"The League Institution a Training Camp for Service." Leader, Mrs. J. M. Howdeshell.

The election of the Epworth League produced the following corps of officers in whom we have much confidence for a successful year in the League work. Our League is truly awake and yet there is much land to be possessed.

President—Miss Manilla Carlson
1st. Vice Pres.—Mr. Sylvan Johnson
2nd Vice Pres.—Mr. Elvin Stokesbary
3rd Vice Pres.—Mr. Clarence Waterman.
4th Vice Pres.—Miss Dana Baumgartner.
Secretary—Mr. Fred Bell
Treasurer—Mr. Ed. Ell.

Preaching service at 8:30 o'clock. At this hour we shall have with us Prof. Blezek who for a number of years has been president of Highland Park College of Des Moines, but is now in Army Y. M. C. A. work and will represent to us the Iowa Anti-Saloon League. He is a very interesting and forceful speaker and you do not want to miss his address.

Prayermeeting on each Thursday evening at 8:30 o'clock. Note the change from 8 to 8:30.

We want to say here that in the campaign last Sunday for the church in the camps and at the front we went over the top by a good sum and in behalf of Methodism we want to thank every donor.

The Win One Class will have their regular monthly social meeting at the home of Miss Manilla Carlson Tuesday evening, May 21st.

Rev. J. M. Kettle, the Methodist pastor of Garner, will deliver our Memorial sermon at 10:30 o'clock on Sunday morning May 26th. Do not fail to hear him. He is on fire with the topics of this day.

Definite arrangements were completed for the organization of a dairy calf club in the vicinity of Klemme, when a representative of the Iowa State Dairy Association was here. The officers of the Klemme Co-operative Creamery are very much interested in organizing a strong dairy calf club because of the increased interest in dairying it will arouse. The banks have also volunteered to finance the club and assist in making it one of the strongest in the state. The purpose of the dairy calf club is to introduce high grade heifer calves into the community. Boys and girls between the ages of 10 and 18 years are eligible to join the club and purchase one of these calves. Each member is required to take proper care of the calf secured, raise it, and develop it into a dairy cow to form a foundation for a future herd on the home farm.

The members are allowed their choice of the four leading dairy breeds, viz: Holstein, Guernsey, Jersey and Ayrshire. The calves cost approximately $25 each and come from high grade, heavy-producing, healthy herds. They are from four to six weeks of age and will be shipped direct from Wisconsin by express.

The club is a purely business enterprise. Those who wish to become members sign an application blank and upon the arrival of their calf, sign a note bearing a low rate of interest to cover the purchase price. These notes are made for a term of 12 months and can be secured at any of the home banks. The calves are insured against death by any cause for a perriod of one year, thus fully protecting the members in case of accident or sickness.

The members will be required to prepare an essay on the manner in which they have handled their calves at the end of the year and also to show their calf at a show which will be held in Klemme a year from the time the club membership has been completed. Pamphlets explaining the club in detail and application blanks for members to sign can be secured at the banks and at the creamery.

Last Friday morning Harry Smith met with quite a painful accident while he was working on the foundation of the George Gruetzmacher house. He was making some holes in the cribbing to drain the water off and was cleaning out some slivers in the boards with his finger when Mr. Gruetzmacher decided to help out by cutting off the splinters on the other side of the boards with a tiling spade. Just as Mr. Gruetzmacher jabbed the spade down along side of the cribbing Harry poked his finger through the hole. The result was that he was the loser of a part of a perfectly good portion of the end of he firs finger on his lef hand. He had the doctor trim off the rest of the finger to the first joint and is now getting along quite well but is experiencing some sharp pains along with it.

ARMY BARRACKS FOR NURSERIES

One of Them Houses More Than 800 Children Under Ten.

Within sound of the deep throated guns of the French firing line, guns that are ceaselessly telling the Germans "thou shalt not pass," live hundreds of happy, healthy children.

At the beginning of the war the buildings in which these kiddies now live and play and study were barracks for French boys training to be soldiers. Today these boys—those who are left of them—are veterans. These barracks are good modern buildings, and they are set amid beautiful scenery. There are several of these groups of barracks scattered throughout France, and all of them have been turned into homes for the nation's homeless children.

At one of the barrack-nurseries there are more than 800 children. Some are babies of a few days old, and the oldest is not over ten years. Most of these children are orphans. Some few of them have mothers who are working in fields and factories to help France win the war.

And these little folks are receiving the first intelligent care of their lives. Skilled American doctors are in charge of the kitchens, and experienced teachers are instructing those old enough to attend the barrack-school. The older girls and boys are being taught useful trades as well as the usual classroom lessons, and with it all these children are learning the joy in healthy play.

France laid upon us a sacred service in this care of its children. And how noble has been the response of our American Red Cross!

Out of No Man's Land

By HARRY IRVING GREENE

Father:

This wonderful letter that I am writing you—a miracle letter. I was hurt, badly, but I am going to get well. It happened like this—you know I am not allowed to name place or date.

No Man's Land! We were raiding it by night, three of us—scouting, prowling. It was as dark as the dungeons of inferno, but often they sent up signal shells—roseate, bursting things that bathed all that evil land in a blood-red light. When their glare flared over us we had to stand as we were caught, hand or foot upraised—moveless objects in the red glow until the light snuffed out and all was dark once more.

We reached the German entanglements and began cutting them with our oiled clippers. We were careful, very careful, but we were not careful enough. They heard us. Over came two bombs.

The three of us went down in a row. Jack and Tom never knew what hit them. I was hurt too badly to be able to get up.

I lay there—all night—groaning—calling for help. Twenty feet away I could hear the boches in their trench laughing at me, cursing me.

Morning! My last. I could endure it no more. I was dying—bleeding. I said my last prayer.

And then!

Since the dawn of time I do not believe the world has seen a more glorious thing. From the hill tops our artillery laid down a box barrage fire and under it, heads raised like emperors and shoulders squared, came six men, stretcher bearers. As though they had been on parade they came forth in broad daylight into the very teeth of the enemy and picked up what was left of Jack, Tom and me.

As though we had been their own brothers they bore us back, swiftly, gently. Then do you know what those Huns did?

Opened fire on us—the dead, the bearers of the dead and a man who lay quivering at the threshold of death.

Two of the six bearers went down. The other four brought them back along with what was left of Jack, Tom and me.

And when I awoke in the hospital after the operation, deathly sick but back from the nightmare-land and with the sunlight upon me, whom do you think I saw bending over me, the red cross upon her sleeve, babbling, laughing, crying, kissing me?

JANE!

And I had never known that she had come over! Had never got her letter.

And we are here together and I am going to get well. An hour ago she held out her hand, and upon one finger was still the little ring I gave her before I left. I am going to have a stone set in it—you know what that means. Though somewhat disfigured I am still in the ring.

And so is Jane.

LIKE MOTHER USED TO MAKE

Khaki Clad Boy With a Lump in Throat Welcomes Home Cooking.

Imagine your boy on a troop train bound for some United States seaport where a transport lies ready to take him and his regiment "over there." He never felt healthier in his life—in body. In mind? If he finds moments when his thoughts begin to race back toward you, wondering what you are doing, can you blame him if occasionally something lumps in his throat about as comfortable as a billiard ball?

And then the train grinds to a standstill. Some one yells, "Big eats; oh, boy!" as several Red Cross uniforms flash out in the crowd on the station platform. For here is a Red Cross emergency canteen. Here he can get coffee—good, hot coffee—sandwiches, candy, tobacco, fruit, postal cards and almost anything that he may have forgotten.

Does it help his spirits? Does it? Does it cheer him to get these snacks of good home tasting food served by women like those in his own family? Probably the most valuable part of the Red Cross canteen service work is the effect of the smile and cheer from the women who are in charge. Soldiers write frequently such messages as the following, indicating their appreciation of this branch of Red Cross work:

"The Red Cross of Chicago met us with coffee, sandwiches and post cards. I hope the Montana women are all doing the same. Chicago sure is a big city and plenty of pep. Join the Red Cross and help the boys who have volunteered their lives."

There are now more than 500 of these Red Cross canteens or refreshment units located at the important railroad centers in the United States. Every commander of a troop train has a list of these canteens, so that he can call upon the Red Cross for this service at these stations en route.

Women Give $36,000,000.

Thousands of patriotic women in all parts of the United States are freely giving their time to make surgical dressings, knit goods, hospital garments, comfort kits, socks and sweaters. The value of this labor given by American women is estimated at $36,000,000 a year.

The Red Cross operates in France a motor truck transportation service with 250 motor trucks.

Great Wheat Stocks Isolated.

It's the shortage in ships that is putting the Allies and the United States on wheat rations. Great stocks of wheat are isolated in India, and Australia. At great sacrifice in ship space and use the Allies are forced to secure some wheat from Argentina.

On January 1, Australia had stored 100,000,000 bushels of wheat that was ready for export—but there were no ships. Then came the new crop with an exportable surplus of 80,000,000 bushels. Now Australia has approximately 180,000,000 bushels waiting for ships.

India, at the same time, had 70,000,000 bushels of wheat stored for export. During April 50,000,000 bushels more out of the new crop will be added to the pile.

Argentina closed the last shipping season with 11,000,000 bushels of wheat left in the stock available for export. The new crop will add 135,000,000 to the left over.

It is not a problem that the wheat does not exist in the world—it is entirely a problem of shipping, which has thrown on America the obligation of dividing our stock with the Allies.

War and the Weather.

The Almighty makes the weather, not man, and if the weather doesn't suit us, we have to wait. The farmer knows what a day's rain will do in the way of upsetting plans. One can't plow in the mud and a cutting of hay or wheat may be damaged or ruined by one night's downpour.

The war department, too, is up against the weather in France. Three inches of rainfall may make the country impassable for half a million men and horses and motortrucks and ruin the chances of victory or bring defeat. When the war department has the weather to worry about, don't add to its worries by withholding money and, consequently, supplies. The purchase of Liberty bonds will help Pershing a lot this summer.

Germans Buy Bonds; Why Not You?

Germany's last loan was over-subscribed. The Germans are determined to win this war. We have more money than they, and we must spend it. Lend to your government by buying Liberty bonds. Crush Germany's armies under the weight of American dollars.

WOMAN'S NERVES MADE STRONG

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Winona, Minn.—"I suffered for more than a year from nervousness, and was so bad I could not rest at night—would lie awake and get so nervous I would have to get up and walk around and in the morning would be all tired out. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and thought I would try it. My nervousness soon left me. I sleep well and feel fine in the morning and able to do my work. I gladly recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to make weak nerves strong."—Mrs. ALBERT SULTZE, 608 Olmstead St., Winona, Minn.

How often do we hear the expression among women, "I am so nervous, I cannot sleep," or "it seems as though I should fly." Such women should profit by Mrs. Sultze's experience and give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial.

For forty years it has been overcoming such serious conditions as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, dizziness, and nervous prostration of women, and is now considered the standard remedy for such ailments.

SCORED HEAVILY ON SLACKER

Probably Dude Will Think Twice Before He Again Attempts to Have Fun With a Kiltie.

The following was overheard on a street car one very cold day in winter in a Canadian city. At a corner the car was boarded by a husky soldier in the picturesque Highland uniform—the kilts of which leave the knees bare. On the car was a young dude still in mufti, seated with his best girl. The girl cast admiring glances at the attractively uniformed "Kiltie" much to the displeasure of her slacker escort. So he endeavored to make fun of the uniform by remarking: "I think that outfit is most ridiculous. That fellow's knees look as if they were frozen."

The Kiltie overhearing the comment glanced contemptuously at the dude's civilian clothes, then scornfully replied:

"Well, young fellow, it is a sure thing my knees aren't as cold as your feet."

The slacker got off at the next stop.—Canadian.

Business Mind.

A prominent Indianapolis banker, thinking to practice a little conservation, took five Liberty loan colored posters home to his four-year-old son to use as playthings, telling him they were Liberty bonds. The boy, evidently inheriting some of his father's own business ability, started out in the neighborhood to sell the "bonds" for a nickel each. He succeeded promptly in selling all five, and brought the quarter to his father to buy a Thrift stamp.—Indianapolis News.

TRY A CUP!

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

BY

MAURICE LEBLANC

TRANSLATED BY

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

18

For, after all, she was free, entirely free in her actions and movements. The windows opening on the Place du Palais-Bourbon gave her every facility for leaving the house under cover of the darkness and coming in again unknown to anybody.

It was therefore quite possible that, on the night of the double crime, she was among the murderers of Hippolyte Fauville and his son. It was quite possible that she had taken part in the murders, and even that the poison had been injected into the victims by her hand, by that little, white, slender hand which he saw resting against the golden hair.

A shudder passed through him. He had softly put back the paper in the book, restored the book in its place, and moved nearer to the girl.

All of a sudden, he caught himself studying the lower part of her face, the shape of her jaw! Yes, that was what he was making every effort to guess, under the curve of the cheeks and behind the veil of the lips. Almost against his will with personal anguish mingled with torturing curiosity, he stared and stared, ready to force open those closed lips and to seek the reply to the terrifying problem that suggested itself to him.

Those teeth, those teeth which he did not see, were not they the teeth that had left the incriminating marks in the fruit? Which were the teeth of the tiger, the teeth of the wild beast: these, or the other woman's?

It was an absurd supposition, because the marks had been recognized as made by Marie Fauville. But was the absurdity of a supposition a sufficient reason for discarding it?

Himself astonished at the feelings that agitated him, fearing lest he should betray himself, he preferred to cut short the interview, and, going up to the girl, he said to her, in an imperious and aggressive tone:

"I wish all the servants in the house to be discharged. You will give them their wages, pay them such compensation as they ask for, and see that they leave today, definitely. Another staff of servants will arrive this evening. You will be here to receive them."

She made no reply. He went away, taking with him the uncomfortable impression that had lately marked his relations with Florence. The atmosphere between them always remained heavy and oppressive. Their words never seemed to express the private thoughts of either of them; and their actions did not correspond with the words spoken. Did not the circumstances logically demand the immediate dismissal of Florence Levasseur as well? Yet Don Luis did not so much as think of it.

Returning to his study, he at once rang up Mazeroux and, lowering his voice so as not to let it reach the next room, he said:

"Is that you, Mazeroux?"

"Yes."

"Has the prefect placed you at my disposal?"

"Yes."

"Well, tell him that I have sacked all my servants and that I have given you their names and instructed you to have an active watch kept on them. We must look among them for Sauverand's accomplice. Another thing: ask the prefect to give you and me permission to spend the night at Hippolyte Fauville's house."

"Nonsense! At the house on the Boulevard Suchet?"

"Yes, I have every reason to believe that something's going to happen there."

"What sort of thing?"

"I don't know. But something is bound to take place. And I insist on being at it. Is it arranged?"

"Right, chief. Unless you hear to the contrary, I'll meet you at 9 o'clock this evening on the Boulevard Suchet."

Perenna did not see Mlle. Levasseul again that day. He went out in the course of the afternoon, and called at the registry office, where he chose some servants: a chauffeur, a coachman, a footman, a cook, and so on. Then he went to a photographer, who made a new copy of Mlle. Levasseur's photograph. Don Luis had this touched up and faked it himself, so that the prefect of police should not perceive the substitution of one set of features for another.

He dined at a restaurant and, at 9 o'clock, joined Mazeroux on the Boulevard Suchet.

Since the Fauville murders the house had been left in the charge of the porter. All the rooms and all the locks had been sealed up, except the inner door of the workroom, of which the police kept the keys for the purposes of the inquiry.

The big study looked as it did before, though the papers had been removed and put away and there were no books and pamphlets left on the writing table. A layer of dust, clearly visible by the electric light, covered its black leather and the surrounding mahogany.

"Well, Alexandre, old man," cried Don Luis, when they had made themselves comfortable, "what do you say to this? It's rather impressive, being here again, what? But, this time, no barricading of doors, no bolts, eh? If anything's going to happen, on this night of the 15th of April, we will put nothing in our friend's way. They shall have full and entire liberty. It's up to them, this time."

Though joking, Don Luis was nevertheless singularly impressed, as he himself said, by the terrible recollection of the two crimes which he had been unable to prevent and by the haunting vision of the two dead bodies. And he also remembered with real emotion the implacable duel which he had fought with Mme. Fauville, the woman's despair and her arrest.

"Tell me about her," he said to Mazeroux. "So she tried to kill herself?"

"Yes," said Mazeroux, "a thoroughgoing attempt, though she had to make it in a manner which she must have hated. She hanged herself in strips of linen torn from her sheets and underclothing and twisted together. She had to be restored by artificial respiration. She is out of danger now, I believe, but she is never left alone, for she swore she would do it again."

"She has made no confession?"

"No. She persists in proclaiming her innocence."

"And what do they think at the public prosecutor's? At the prefect's?

"Why should they change their opinion, chief? The inquiries confirm every one of the charges brought against her; and, in particular, it has been proved beyond the possibility of dispute that she alone can have touched the apple and that she can have touched it only between 11 o'clock at night and 7 o'clock in the morning. Now the apple bears the undeniable marks of her teeth. Would you admit that there are two sets of paws in the world that leave the same identical imprint?"

"No, no," said Don Luis, who was thinking of Florence Levasseur. "No, the argument allows of no discussion. We have here a fact that is clear as daylight; and the imprint is almost tantamount to a discovery in the act. But then how, in the midst of all this, are we to explain the presence of——"

"Whom, chief?"

"Nobody. I had an idea worrying me. Besides, you see, in all this there are so many unnatural things, such queer coincidences and inconsistencies, that I dare not count on a certainty which the reality of tomorrow may destroy."

They went on talking for some time, in a low voice, studying the question in all its bearings.

At midnight they switched off the electric light in the chandelier and arranged that each should go to sleep in turn.

And the hours went by as they had done when the two sat up before, with the same sound of belated carriages and motor cars; the same railway whistles; the same silence.

The night passed without alarm or incident of any kind. At daybreak the life out of doors was resumed; and Don Luis, during his waking hours, had not heard a sound in the room except the monotonous snoring of his companion.

"Can I have been mistaken?" he wondered. "Did the clue in that volume of Shakespeare mean something else? Or did it refer to events of last year, events that took place on the dates set down?"

In spite of everything, he felt overcome by a strange uneasiness as the dawn began to glimmer through the half closed shutters. A fortnight before, nothing had happened either to warn him; and yet there were two victims lying near him when he woke.

At 7 o'clock he called out:

"Alexandre!"

"Eh? What is it, chief?"

"You're not dead?"

"What's that? Dead? No, chief; why should I be?"

"Quite sure?"

"Well, that's a good 'un! Why not you?"

"Oh, it'll be my turn soon! Considering the intelligence of those scoundrels, there's no reason why they should go on missing me."

They waited an hour longer. Then Perenna opened a window and threw back the shutter.

"I say, Alexandre, perhaps you are not dead, but you are certainly very green."

Mazerouy gave a wry laugh:

"Upon my word, chief, I confess that I had a bad time of it when I was keeping watch while you were asleep."

"Were you afraid?"

"To the roots of my hair. I kept on thinking that something was going to happen. But you, too, chief, don't look as if you had been enjoying yourself. Were you also——"

He interrupted himself, on seeing an expression of unbounded astonishment on Don Luis' face.

"What's the matter, chief?"

"Look! * * * on the table * * * that letter——"

He looked. There was a letter on the writing table, or, rather, a letter card, the edges of which had been torn along the perforation marks; and they saw the outside of it, with the address, the stamp, and the postmarks.

"Did you put that there, Alexandre?"

"You're joking, chief. You know it can only have been you."

"It can only have been I * * * and yet it was not I."

"But then——"

Don Luis took the letter card and, on examining it, found that the address and the postmarks had been scratched out so as to make it impossible to read the name of the addressee or where he lived, but that the place of posting was quite clear, as was the date: Paris, 4 January, 19—.

"So the letter is three and a half months old," said Don Luis.

He turned to the inside of the letter. It contained a dozen lines and he at once exclaimed:

"Hippolyte Fauville's signature!"

"And his handwriting," observed Mazeroux. "I can tell it at a glance. There's no mistake about that. What does it all mean? A letter written by Hippolyte Fauville three months before his death?"

Perenna read aloud:

My Dear Old Friend: I can only, alas, confirm what I wrote to you the other day: the plot is thickening around me! I do not yet know what their plan is and still less how they mean to put it into execution; but everything warns me that the end is at hand. I can see it in her eyes. How strangely she looks at me sometimes!

"Oh, the shame of it! Who would ever have thought her capable of it? I am a very unhappy man, my dear friend.

"And it's signed Hippolyte Fauville," Mazeroux continued, "and I declare to you that it's actually in his hand * * * written on the 4th of January of this year to a friend whose name we don't know, though we shall dig him out somehow, that I'll swear. And this friend will certainly give us the proofs we want."

Mazeroux was becoming excited.

"Proofs? Why, we don't need them! They're here. M. Fauville himself supplies them: 'The end is at hand. I can see it in her eyes.' 'Her' refers to his wife, to Marie Fauville, and the husband's evidence confirms all that we knew against her. What do you say, chief?"

"You're right," replied Perenna, absent mindedly, "you're right; the letter is final. Only——"

"Only what?"

"Who the devil can have brought it? Somebody must have entered the room last night while we were here. Is it possible? For, after all, we should have heard. That's what astounds me."

"It certainly looks like it."

"Just so. It was a queer enough job a fortnight ago. But, still, we were in the passage outside, while they were at work in here, whereas, this time, we were here, both of us, close to this very table. And, on this table, which had not the least scrap of paper on it last night, we find this letter in the morning."

A careful inspection of the place gave them no clue to put them on the track. They went through the house from top to bottom and ascertained for certain that there was no one there in hiding. Besides, supposing that any one was hiding there, how could he have made his way into the room without attracting their attention? There was no solving the problem.

"We won't look any more," said Perenna, "it's no use. In matters of this sort, some day or other the light enters by an unseen cranny and everything gradually become clear. Take the letter to the prefect of police, tell him how we spent the night, and ask his permission for both of us to come back on the night of the 25th of April. There's to be another surprise that night; and I'm dying to know if we shall receive a second letter through the agency of some Mahatma."

They closed the doors and left the house.

While they were walking to the right, toward La Muette, in order to take a taxi, Don Luis chanced to turn his head to the road as they reached the end of the Boulevard Suchet. A man rode past them on a bicycle. Don Luis just had time to see his clean shaven face and his glittering eyes fixed upon himself.

"Look out!" he shouted, pushing Mazeroux so suddenly that the sergeant lost his balance.

The man had stretched out his hand, armed with a revolver. A shot rang out. The bullet whistled past the ears of Don Luis, who had bobbed his head.

"After him!" he roared. "You'er not hurt, Mazeroux?"

"No, chief."

They both rushed in pursuit, shouting for assistance. But, at that early hour, there are never many people in the wide avenues of this part of the town. The man, who was making off swiftly, increased his distance, turned down the Rue Octave-Feuillett, and disappeared.

"All right, you scoundrel, I'll catch you yet!" snarled Don Luis, abandoning a vain pursuit.

"But you don't even know who he is, chief."

"Yes, I do: it's he."

"Who?"

"The man with the ebony stick. He's cut off his beard and shaved his face, but I knew him for all that. It was the man who was taking pot shots at us yesterday morning, from the top of his stairs on the Boulevard Richard-Wallace, the one who killed Inspector Ancenis. The blackguard! How did he know that I had spent the night at Fauville's? Have I been followed then and spied on? But by whom? And why? And how?"

Mazeroux reflected and said:

"Remember, chief, you telephoned to me in the afternoon to give me an appointment. For all you know, in spite of lowering your voice, you may have been heard by somebody at your place."

Don Luis did not answer. He thought of Florence.

That morning Don Luis' letters were not brought to him by Mlle. Levasseur, nor did he send for her. He caught sight of her several times giving orders to the new servants. She must afterward have gone back to her room, for he did not see her again.

In the afternoon he rangs for his car and drove to the house on the Boulevard Suchet, to pursue with Mazeroux by the prefect's instructions, a search that led to no result whatever.

It was 10 o'clock when he came in. The detective sergeant and he had some dinner together. Afterward, wishing also to examine the home of the man with the ebony stick, he got into his car again, still accompanied by Mazeroux, and told the man to drive to the Boulevard Richard-Wallace.

The car crossed the Seine and followed the right bank.

"Faster," he said to his new chauffeur, through the speaking tube. "I'm accustomed to go at a good pace."

"You'll have an upset one fine day, chief," said Mazeroux.

"No fear," replied Don Luis, "Motor accidents are reserved for fools."

They reached the Place de l'Alma. The car turned to the left.

"Straight ahead!" cried Don Luis. "Go by the Trocadero."

The car veered back again. But suddenly it gave three or four lurches in the road, took the pavement, ran into a tree and fell over on its side.

In a few seconds a dozen people were standing round. They broke one of the windows and opened the door. Don Luis was the first.

's Poor Economy to Endure a Bad Back

those days of rising prices, we need every ounce of strength and the ability to do a full day's work every day. The man or woman with weak kidneys is half crippled. Sore, aching back, lame, stiff back, headache, dizzy spells and a dull, tired feeling and urinary disorders are daily sources of distress. You can't afford to neglect kidney weakness and make it easy for gravel, dropsy or Bright's disease to take you. Get a box of Doan's Kidney Pills today. They have helped thousands. They should help you.

Personal Reports of Real Cases

AN IOWA CASE.

Mrs. S. J. Stump, Leon, Iowa, says: "My kidneys were weak for years and the trouble got such a hold on me that I lost all enjoyment in life. For a whole year I couldn't walk across the room unless I leaned on a chair and pushed it ahead of me. I was nearly frantic and grew miserable and despondent. Medicine failed to help me and finally I happened to read of Doan's Kidney Pills. They cured me and ever since then I have been in good health and able to do all my own housework. Whenever I do take cold it's they never fail to do good work."

A SOUTH DAKOTA CASE.

M. C. Fitzgerald, 520 E. 2d Ave., Mitchell, S. D., says: "I was all out of sorts from kidney trouble. I tired easily, had but little strength and suffered constantly from pains across my back. I slept poorly and often got up more tired than when I went to bed. I knew my kidneys weren't acting right and I took different kidney medicines. I wasn't helped until I used Doan's Kidney Pills. Before long they cured me and I am glad to say the cure has been permanent."

Both Ends Against The Middle

(Producer and Consumer)

(The Packer)

The consumer wants to pay a low price for meat.

The farmer wants to get a high price for cattle.

The packer stands between these conflicting demands, and finds it impossible to completely satisfy both.

The packer has no control over the prices of live stock or meat, and the most that can be expected of him is that he keep the difference between the two as low as possible. He does this successfully by converting animals into meat and distributing the meat at a minimum of expense, and at a profit too small to be noticeable in the farmer's returns for live stock or in the meat bill of the consumer.

Swift & Company's 1917 transactions in Cattle were as follows:

	Average Per Head
Sold Meat to Retailer for	$68.97
Sold By-products for	24.09
Total Receipts	93.06
Paid to Cattle Raiser	84.45
Balance (not paid to Cattle Raiser) Paid for labor and expenses at Packing House, Freight on Meat, and Cost of operating Branch distributing houses	8.61
Remaining in Packer's hands as Returns on investment	7.32
	$ 1.29

The net profit was $1.29 per head, or about one-fourth of a cent per pound of beef.

By what other method can the difference between cattle prices and beef prices be made smaller, and how can the conflicting demands of producer and consumer be better satisfied?

ARIZONA RANGER TO BECOME AN OFFICER

"Captain" Harry Wheeler Has Had Wide Experience With Outlaws.

Tombstone, Ariz.—Two silver bars on his shoulder straps will add nothing to Harry Wheeler's title in Cochise county and Arizona for he has been known as Captain Wheeler since the days he rode the lonesome trail along the border as captain of the Arizona territorial ranger force.

At present Wheeler is sheriff of this county, but is expected to resign to accept a commission as captain in the United States cavalry, a branch of the service in which he saw service as an enlisted man in the days when the Apaches and not Francisco Villa were making it necessary to keep a force of troops along the frontier. He was discharged from the cavalry because of injuries received when his cavalry horse kicked him. He located in souther Arizona and soon joined the territorial rangers which were formed to protect the border from the raids of Indians and lawless elements on both sides of the international line.

As captain of these rangers Sheriff Wheeler established his reputation as a peace officer. He arrested many outlaws, tracked them to their hiding places in the mountains and fought many battles with bandits in the Huachuca, the Whetstones and the Chiricahua mountains. He was wounded several times in these engagements and these wounds caused him to be rejected by medical officers when he applied for enlistment as a private soldier at the outbreak of the war.

One of Captain Wheeler's most famous feats was the killing of a man on the station platform at Benson, Ariz., after he had been shot and was on the ground. Wheeler went to the train to arrest the man who was wanted by the ranger captain on a criminal charge. As soon as the wanted man saw Wheeler he started firing and shot the ranger through the body. Raising himself from the platform on his elbow, Wheeler shot the man three times, killing him almost instantly.

Sheriff Wheeler's most recent experience was in rounding up and deporting 1200 miners from Bisbee on July 12, 1917. This deportation created a sensation throughout the country and was the cause of calling the attention of the east to the I. W. W. menace in the west and southwest. Sheriff Wheeler transferred his office temporarily to Bisbee, where he organized the posse of the men listed as undesirables and the committee in charge of the deportation. On the morning of July 12 the deputized citizens started rounding up the men on these lists. They were loaded into cattle cars and sent to Columbus, N. M., where they were held in camp for several days.

Just how many were killed during this roundup cannot be known. It was expected that at least 100 would be killed during the ride. Sheriff Wheeler said: An investigation was made of his part in the affair but no legal action was ever taken. After the deportation the sheriff established picket camps and had all of the roads entering Bisbee patrolled to prevent any of the undesirables returning. Those who did return were given 12 hours to leave camp and all complied with this order.

More recently Sheriff Wheeler led the man hunt after the Powers Sisson gang of outlaws who killed the sheriff and two deputy sheriffs in Graham county and started for Mexico. Wheeler rode the trails in the mountains night and day and finally located the trail which lead to Mexico, where the three outlaws were captured by United States cavalry troops.

Wheeler is a small man with a soft voice and a quick trigger finger. He was a Canadian and has made repeated efforts to enlist in the Canadian regiments going to France. Through his friends he succeeded in obtaining a commission as captain of cavalry and will join his command at Douglas, Ariz., which is near the scene of so many of his border adventures.

POPULATION OF GERMANY IS SHIFTED BY WAR

Amsterdam (by mail)—War has produced some remarkable changes in the population and relative importance of big German cities. The five principal centers of the munition industries have suddenly mounted to places among the nine largest cities in Germany. Before the war Munich was the third largest city in Germany, ranking immediately after Berlin and Hamburg. Munich has now dropped into seventh place, and Bochum, in Westphalian Prussia, has risen to third place.

Bochum is the seat of great coal iron and steel industries. In 1900 it had a scant 65,000 inhabitants. Now it boasts of more than 764,000.

Dresden and Breslau, which were formerly the fourth and fifth cities in Germany, has fallen well behind Dortmund and Essen.

The Surface of Liquids.

L. O. Winston in St. Nicholas.

The surface of a liquid is peculiar. It behaves as if it were a tough, elastic membrane stretched over the rest of the liquid. If you would like to prove this, take a tumbler of clean water and a sewing needle, and holding the needle horizontally between the thumb and forefinger, lay it carefully upon the surface of the water. The needle will float. This is remarkable, because steel is eight times as dense as water. If the needle breaks through the surface, however, it will immediately sink.

The reason for this is simple. Every particle of water in the glass attracts every other particle. The particles below the surface are attracted on every side, hence the attraction is not apparent; but the particles on the surface are pulled down by those beneath them, while there are no particles above to counteract this effect. This produces what is known as surface tension—the tendency which all liquids have to contract as much as possible. You have seen a soap bubble, suspended from the pipe when you were not blowing it, get smaller and smaller and finally disappear. The bubble is almost entirely surface and well illustrates this tendency.

What Do You Mean, Dust?

From the Pathfinder.

"I grovel here before you in the dust!" observed the impassioned youth, as he sank on to the parlor floor.

"I don't know what you mean by dust," replied she coldly. "I look after this room most carefully myself every morning."

Raising Poultry.

From the Youth's Companion.

"What," said the lady who does her own marketing, "is the price of these chickens?"

"A dollar and a quarter apiece, ma'am," replied the market woman.

"Did you raise them yourself?" asked the lady.

"Oh, yes, ma'am. They was only $1 16 last week," was the reply.

HAD HEARD THAT QUESTION

Patriotic Woman Didn't Know She Was Addressing the Highest Official of the State.

One of our city's woman's clubs has a booth in the Columbia club, where a group of the clubwomen have been selling Liberty bonds all week. Friday one of these women approached a man who was passing the booth, and put her usual question to him:

"Do you want to buy any more Liberty bonds?"

"No," answered the man decisively. To the woman's ear there was a pronounced sharpness in his reply.

"Ah," she said, taking a step nearer, "are you aware that the government is anxious to know the reason back of anyone's decided refusal to buy Liberty bonds?"

The man threw his head back and laughed long and heartily. A group of men standing near, who had witnessed the incident, joined in the laughter.

"That's a good one on you, governor," exclaimed one of the group who happened to know that the man addressed had bought many Liberty bonds.

"It is indeed," the man responded, "and I want to say right now that this spirit of alertness is just what we need everywhere, and I'm mighty glad to have come in contact with it," and Governor Goodrich bowed himself out.—Indianapolis News.

Learning English.

The biggest problem facing the Japanese studying English in his flowery home is finding some one to practice his oral English on. One might say he is up against it for laboratory facilities. But, says E. F. S., who has just come from Japan, the students are eager to seize every opportunity. Miss Mann, an American, was walking along the main street of Nikko one day when she was approached shyly by a native student, who said:

"Please may I speak English with you?"

"Be it so," what is it?" the lady replied. For a minute the student swayed back and forth in his agony of trying to frame a foreign sentence, and then he exclaimed: "Verily, verily, I say unto you it is a warm day!"—Kansas City Star.

Improved methods of building cars, that build them better and save millions of dollars to the public, is one of the substantial advantages you get in this Overland Model 90.

The time to save money is when you select your car, because afterwards you cannot make it any more economical than it is built to be.

Select this Model 90 and you save money in the first cost and in the maintenance cost. You cannot get complete satisfaction from less advantages than it gives—

And you cannot get as much value in any other car for the low price of this Model 90.

It has a powerful, fuel-saving motor; narrow turning radius; rear cantilever springs; 106-inch wheelbase; 31 x 4 tires, non-skid rear. Auto-Lite starting and lighting and vacuum fuel system.

It is as desirable as it is adequate, comfortable and easy-to-handle.

With it a salesman can double his value; a housewife gains time for Red Cross work, and business and professional men save time and multiply their activities.

It coins time and money for more than 80,000 others. Why not for you?

ROY McELMURRAY MEETS WITH SERIOUS ACCIDENT

Monday afternoon Roy McElmurray, who is working on a farm for Adolph Schlichting, met with quite a serious accident. He was going out into the field with a manure spreader and when he crossed a culvert the trucks of the spreader slipped down into the ditch throwing young McElmurray off the seat. He fell on the lever which throws the machine into gear. The force of his fall against the lever forced it into the lower part of his abdomen, causing serious internal injuries. No help was near when the accident occurred and he crawled some distance ot the house and reached the telephone. When the doctors arrived he was unconscious. His injuries were given immediate attention and then he was rushed to the hospita at Mason City when he was operated upon. At the latest report he is getting along nicely and his many friends hope for his speedy recovery.

TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE SUN

On June 8th, the moon will pass between the earth and the sun which will throw a shadow on the face of the sun for a total period of eighty-eight seconds. Only a small portion of the eclipse will be visible in Iowa as we are north of the path of the cone shadow. The shadow will travel in a line from the state of Washington, south-east to Florida. Get a piece of smoked glass on the afternoon of June eighth at about 2:30 or 3:00 o'clock and you will see a portion of the eclipse. The next total eclipse will be in the year 1936, the last was in 1900.

TO THE VOTERS AT THE JUNE 3RD PRIMARIES

An X opposite the name of Eva J. Fell for County Recorder will be appreciated by her many friends and acquaintances.

Having lived in the county nearly 29 years, and for 10 years past having drawn deeds and mortgages and for nearly 6 years acted as deputy County Recorder (often left in sole charge of the office) she is well equipped to handle the office she seeks. Her integrity and devotion to the Public's business has never been questioned, the salary paid her as deputy is the lowest paid any county deputy.

In a time like this when we must depend upon the young manhood and the young womanhood of our country to sustain and carry out the great Ideals of our nation—why not give to each one of us the work we are best fitted to perform? Mistakes and errors in public affairs at this time are costly to a community and weaken us when we need all our strength to combat a common enemy of mankind, a destroyer of nations.

We say of all who offer themselves as Public Officials to fill Public Positions—select the very best.—Hancock County Democrat.

Mr. Voter—We would like a few moments of your time like the world war. Politics are attracting our attention at this time, and now more than ever do we need to select persons of known integrity and ability to handle the business that we daily must entrust to them. Particularly is this true of our County Offices. Weigh with care before you cast your ballot, learn all you can about the candidate know they possess the necessary qualifications, the business ability and experience to properly handle the business in the office they seek. This is no time for experiments, no time for sympathy, give us the very best material in the field, give us people you are willing personally to vouch for. Many a man will leave his home and loved ones, many will never return, many property matters will be left in the hands of our Public Officials, many will be the changes of property both personal and real—then let us strive to select the very best from among who are willing to serve us.

Sell Your Flour and Buy a Liberty Bond, or Help the Red Cross

Food Administrator Deems has announced that the government will buy all of the excess flour in the hands of the people of Iowa and ship it to our soldiers in the trenches and our allies.

During the next three months the state will require 22,000 barrels of flour. All above that must be collected and sent to Europe. Attention is called to the law which provides that hoarders may be punished by a $5,000 fine or two years in jail or both.

Consumers will return their excess flour to the dealers from whom they bought at a price to be agreed upon between them.

D. G. Thompson, chief of the flour divsion of the Deems organization, will survey the state and locate the stocks of flour. He also will discover those who have orders booked for flour. He will supply the latter from the former stocks when possible, and this will release the bookings to be shipped at once and directly to our soldiers in the trenches and to our allies, this state being given full credit therefor. If there is an excess still on hand it will be reshipped for export. The proposition will be financed in Iowa.

It is estimated that at least 500,000 sacks or quarter barrels will be sent in this way out of Iowa to the soldiers.

Only original, unbroken packages can be used. None under 24 pounds in size can be accepted.

Administrator Deems, Governor Harding, the Council of Defense, the Women's Committee, and all other patriotic organizations, have united in this appeal to Iowa people.

Deems Makes Appeal.

Administrator Deems, in his appeal to the people, says:

"To meet a desperate food situation among our allies and which affects our own soldiers over there the nation calls upon Iowa people to sell to it every surplus sack of flour held by them.

"Starvation imperils our allies abroad. To save them we are asked to release the flour we have stored.

"We can eat corn and potatoes and other substitutes for wheat flour until the next harvest, but we cannot ship them. If we could they could not be used because baking is not done in homes in Europe but in bakeries. Durable loaves are essential in the trenches and in the homes and wheat, alone, can be used to make the durable bread.

"Nearly 45,000 Iowa boys are fighting over there. They are giving their very lives. We are asked only to sell our flour to back them up. Iowa's loyalty has been tested before and not in vain. I have told Mr. Hoover that Iowa is no slacker, and that she will respond to this test and this call instantly and to the very limit.

"To that end the loyal co-operation of every civic organization in the state is solicited. Commercial clubs, fraternal societies, the churches, the councils of defense, women's clubs—all can, if they will, contribute to the success of the campaign and are urged to enlist at once in this vitally important drive in the food-saving program.

"Sell your flour and buy a Liberty Bond or help the Red Cross s a slogan to which every loyal an will subscribe."

Hoover Makes Appeal.

Administrator Deems is in receipt of the following telegram from Herbert Hoover:

"Only such flour will be purchased as is voluntarily tendered. We do not wish to requisition, for the present.

"We have need in this crucial period, from now until harvest, of every grain of wheat that we can ship to the allies.

"We are sending as much corn and other cereals as the allies can use in their bread. Their people do not know how to bake at home but rely on bakers for their bread. The bread of all of the allies is war bread made of gray wheat flour with which is mixed one-third flour of other cereals, chiefly corn. More than this mixture is impossible to make and still preserve the keeping and palatable qualities of the bread.

"The civilian population of the allies are carrying a tremendous load of labor and suffering and we must not add to their burden by denying them their needs. Rather we must gladly assume what share of this burden we can carry by modifying our dietary habits to the extent necessary to meet our obligations.

"We ask for no modification that will be in the slightest degree injurious to health. All our expert advisers, including an imposing list of the foremost physiologists of the country, assure us that giving up the use of wheat need in no wise lessen the nutritional value of our diet. We are able by our habits and by abundance of local supply to use other cereals, as quick bread, breakfast foods, etc, and thus leave heat until the next harvest for our wheat until the next harvest for our allies not accustomed or knowing how to use cereals in this way."

DECORATION DAY NEXT THURSDAY

Next Thursday is Decoration Day. Plans are made all over the United States for proper observance of this holiday.

This year Decoration Day will mean more to us than it ever has before in history. At this time the nation is plunged in war to make the world a safe place in which to live. The real purpose of this holiday will be brought closer to us. On that day we decorate the graves and honor the names of the men woh have fought and died for Our Country. In other years we have perhaps forgotten the real purpose of this national holiday, but now we full; realize what it means. Not only will we decorate the graves of the brave men who fell in previous wars, but we will honor the Boys who have given their lives in the present war. Klemme is numbered among the many other towns who have given their Boys to help Uncle Sam. Let us observe the day in the most proper manner, lay aside all work and amusement and pay our highest respect to our Heroes.

Mysteries.

It is a fact that in every man (not in every woman) there lives a lover; a lover who is called out in all his potentialities often by the most insignificant little things—as long as they come at the psychological moment; the glimpse of a face at an unusual angle, an evanescent attitude, the curve of a cheek often looked at before, perhaps, but then, at the moment, charged with astonishing significance. These are great mysteries, of course.—From "Chance," by Joseph Conrad.

Miss Eva Fell, of Garner, was in Klemme last Friday interviewing the voters. Miss Fell is out for the office of County Recorder. In our opinion Miss Fell wil make a most capable lady for this office as she has had several years experience in the office as deputy. In these war times we must select good men and women to fill our public offices. In our opinion a better qualified person could not be seected for the office of County Recorder than Miss Fell. A vote for her will be appreciated. She is the only candidate out for the office in the east part of the county and this is one reason why the Klemme voters should feel that it is their duty to vote for her.

KLEMME IS AGAIN ON A BOOM!

Klemme is repeating the boom it was on a couple of years ago. In every direction new modern houses are under way of construction and many more are being planned. Those who are not building are spending large sums of money in improving property and remodeling. A new business place is going up, another lot sale is well under way, everywhere in Klemme is a busy place. Klemme is made up of progressive citizens who are up and doing things for the welfare of the community, everybody is busy. Watch Klemme Grow!

ENFORCE THE FOOD LAWS

Government Will Not Tolerate Profiteering, Hoarding and Other Offenses.

The Elmer Wood company of Moulton, Ia., has been put out of business for profiteering in eggs. The United States food administration will not tolerate hoarding, profiteering and other offenses against the law and the regulations respecting food.

The Wood company sold a large consignment of eggs to Swift & Co., receiving an unreasonable price. The revocation of its license became effective April 24, the food administration has announced. In addition to losing its license, the Iowa concern subscribed $4,900 to the third Liberty loan an amount equal to the excessive profits derived from the transaction with the Swifts, and donated the bonds to the American Red Cross.

Zinn & Co and the New York branch of Swift & Co., were recently forced to suspend dealing in eggs in New York city for purchasing eggs at an unreasonable price.

C. A. English of Ottumwa, Ia., who acted as an agent for the Elmer Wood company, but who had no personal interest in the eggs and no place of business in New York, has been directed to subscribe $100 to the Red Cross.

After a hearing before the federal food administrator, the E. A. Brown company of Luverne, Minn., has been ordered to suspend its flour business at Little Rock, Ark., from May 1 to August 1, 1918.

Through its local manager at Little Rock this elevator made a number of flour sales in February in total disregard of the "50-50" rule. The concern had also before that made sales of flour in excessive quantities. The facts were admitted by the president of the concern at the hearing held in St. Paul, Minn., on April 4.

As a part of the same penalty the company is required to get back all excessive flour sold since November 1, 1917, and to secure the sale of substitutes omitted from its February sales.

Corn should be more than a food to us now. It should be a symbol. Staying right at home, it yet plays a colossal part in the war.

Lots of Sugar for Canning and Preserving.

Food Administrator Deems has notified the county food administrators that there will be an abundant supply of sugar for home canning and preserving. His notice to them discloses the method by which consumers may buy a supply. It follows:

"To provide sugar for home canning and preserving, the United States food administration will permit actual consumers to purchase 25 pounds in addition to the quantity now fixed, upon application by certificate to be signed by the purchaser and returned weekly to this office by the retailer.

"Copies of the certificate in blank are being forwarded to you for distribution to the retailers of sugar in your county with instruction to return them to this office, weekly, as they are signed by consumers. The purpose of having them first filed here is to check the quantity of sugar used in the state as a whole. They will be returned to you for your files, later.

"You are urged to enforce strictly the regulation fixing the quantity of sugar that may be sold to individuals for general purposes—five pounds to city consumers, ten pounds to rural consumers. The figures show that with fair conservation between now and the preserving season we shall have barely enough sugar to carry us over the peak load of the sugar season, unless severe measures are taken at the present time. We must have strict economy, and, if necessary, even slight shortage now, rather than have any shortage whatever, when the canning season arrives. Conservation in every way possible must be practiced at this time so that sugar will not be scarce when the great demand comes during the summer and early fall."

In the early days of its history the earth grew rapidly by the addition of meteoric matter It is still growing in the same manner, though scarcely to an appreciable extent, for the masses of meteoric matter added yearly is reckoned to be only 20,000 tons. In the course of ages the larger planets have swept up practically all the fragments of the original disruption, and the only available source of supply of meteoric matter seems to be that brought by comets.

According to Sir George Watt, the name "clove" denotes its resemblance to a nail (clavus). There seems no doubt, he says, that the Chinese procured the clove from its island home for several centuries before it reached Europe. There are records that point to this traffic as early as 260 B. C. The clove was not regarded by the inhabitants of the Spice islands as of any value until the Chinese desired to be supplied with "little sweet smelling nails."

Galalith is the new of the new insulating material made from skim milk, the process is briefly described in the Gas Review: The process of manufacture consists in treating skim milk with caustic alkali to obtain a solution of case in. After being clarified the casein is precipitated with acids and then filtered. The water is slowly extracted. Then the product is partly dried and is treated with formaldehyde and dried again.

Post cards were first used in Austria They became part of that country's postal service in 1869. They cost less than half a cent to send and the first were limited to 25 words. They were taken up by England a year later. The first picture post card is said to have been sent in England in 1891. Some two or three years later, the first view cards made their appearance. Post cards came into use here in 1877.

SENATOR CUMMINS SAYS WORK OR FIGHT

Asserts It May Be Necessary to Change Age Limits to 18 and 45 or Higher.

Washington, May 17.—Senator Cummins, in urging his resolution for a survey of the national man power in a Senate speech, declared that if before two years "we do not call 5,000,000 men into the military service we will have failed to do our part in the war and will not be able to win the kind of victory which will justify the indescribable losses we will suffer." He declared all able bodied men between 18 and 45 and perhaps a few years older "must either work in a useful way or fight." Senator Cummins said he shuddered when he thought of the partial suspension of work on warships and almost total suspension of work on fortifications in view of the possibility, not probability, that Germany might win in France.

He deplored the "costly, humiliating blunders" of some executive departments, and said to turn the subject of raising armies over to the president forebode "irretrievable disaster," to raise which was, he said, the constitutional duty of congress.

IOWA DOCTOR FINDS CURE FOR SHOCK BLINDNESS

Cherokee, Ia , May 18.—What is said to be the first cure for shell shock blindness discovered during the war was made recently by Dr Riley D Moore, son of Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Moore, former residents of Cherokee. Dr. Moore was born here.

Thomas Skeyhill, "Anzac" private, was blinded in 1916, and since that time has been treated by specialists in England, France, Australia, Egypt and the United States, but with no success. Finally Skeyhill gave it up as hopeless and has been lecturing in the interest of the Liberty loan and the Red Cross.

Dr. Moore decided that one of the vertebrae of the neck had become displaced and performed an operation to straighten it The entire operation took only 15 minutes, at the end of which time Skeyhill was able to see plainly, although everything looked absolutely snow white. His color sense returned, however, after a few hours.

CONGRESSMAN GREEN ON WESTERN PATRIOTISM

Washington, D. C., May 18.—During the debate on the conference report on the bill providing for the second draft registration, Congressman Green of Iowa, had a few words to say on the patriotic spirit of the west that were overlooked in the heat of the debate.

"We heard before the war began," Mr Green said, "some intimations that the middle west was not as patriotic as the east. I said then that if the war came the west would be the first to furnish the men and the first to furnish the money, and this has been particularly true of my own state, which has gone far beyond its quota in volunteering and may times over its quota in subscriptions to Liberty bonds."

Storm Lake, Ia., May 18.—Gov. W. L. Harding was the principal speaker at the dedication of Sulphur Springs' new $6,000 consolidated school building, which was attended by hundreds of people from this and nearby counties. The address by Governor Harding was of a patriotic nature. Charles F. Denison, Ia., May 18.—An element of deep mystery surrounds the suicide of John H Stammer a prominent farmer of this county and former business man of Aspinwall. 'Failing to reach the house at noon, Mrs. Stammer went in search of him and found him dead in the field by a corn planter to which was attached a note stating he had swallowed poison but giving no explanation for his act He was a native of Iowa, born in Clinton county He was well educated He leaves a widow and two children His parents, Mr and Mrs. Stammer, live at Manning.

FRENCH AND BRITISH OFFICERS AT CAMP DODGE

Des Moines, Ia., May 18.—Several additional French and British officers who have seen service on the western front are to be assigned to Camp Dodge, it has been announced here. A communication to this effect was received by Major Brightman It is presumed there will be six or eight of these officers assigned to Camp Dodge.

AN IOWA TOWN WILL ABANDON GERMAN NAME

La Crosse, Wis., May. 18.—Guttenberg, historic river village in Iowa south of La Crosse, has shaken off its German name. Hereafter, residents declare, the village will be known as Prairie la Porte, the name French voyagers bestowed upon it in the early part of the Eighteenth century.

PERRY—Lewis Mensch, who came here with his wife from Council Bluffs, is being held at the city jail awaiting the arrival of federal officers from Des Moines To them he will have to give a reason for not registering last June, when by his own assertion he was only 30 years old. The federal charges against Mensch came after an investigation had been made by officers, following a family fight which occurred at a hotel here.

SERIOUSLY INJURED BY RACING AUTOES

Ida Grove Man's Outfit Was Wrecked and One Horse Had to Be Killed.

Ida Grove, Ia., May 18.—George Menter, a resident of Ida Grove, was seriously injured by being hit with an automobile. He was returning to this city after a day's work grading the roads, and as he was coming up over the top of a hill, two automobiles racing, crashed into his team, injuring one of the horses so badly that it was shot. The impact of the car threw Mr. Menter out of his buggy; in the fall, his face was crushed, his nose being broken and several teeth knocked out. He was able to get to a farm house and telephoned for aid and was brought to the city in an automobile and his injuries dressed by a physician. Bernard Reasson, a farmer residing in the northwestern part of the county, was driving one of the cars, and reported to Sheriff McLeod.

IOWA'S CLAIM AGAINST GOVERNMENT WILL KEEP

Des Moines, Ia., May 18.—Governor W. L. Harding has not as yet presented any claim to the federal government for money spent out of the $1,000,000 war fund appropriated by the Thirty-seventh general assembly, and it has not as yet been decided when such a bill will be presented. Probably the matter will not be taken up until after the war.

The act providing for this appropriation specified that it was to be used to pay the necessary expenses in securing enlistments, physical examinations, transportation and sustenance connected with the organization of military forces in Iowa.

Something like $650,000 still remains in the fund. Most of the balance, or probably something like $200,000, was spent by the state last year for equipment, pay and other incidentals connected with the mustering of troops at the fair grounds.

A considerable amount of the rest of the money spent has gone to defray the incidental expenses of the Iowa companies in service in France, in harmony with the section of the Iowa law which provides that the state shall contribute $500 a year to each company in service.

So far as the amount is concerned that has been paid out under this provision of the state law, it is doubtful whether the state would have a claim for it, inasmuch as it seems to be a matter wholly under the control of the state and not owing to demands of the federal government

LIGHTED MATCH MAY CAUSE GIRL'S DEATH

Glidden, Ia., May 18 --Miss Agnes Riedesel, the 17-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George R Riedesel, of Glidden, was probably fatally burned at the family home. The young woman went into the cellar to get some fruit for the evening meal It was rather dark there and she lighted a match to better see the fruit on the shelves, and in her haste to get the jar of fruit, did not observe that the lighted match which she dropped had caught in her clothing. Almost instantly her clothes were ablaze and before her cries brought help about two-thirds of her body had been terribly burned. She was hurriedly taken to a Carroll hospital. Miss Riedesel is quite prominent in society.

BOY'S HAND BADLY BITTEN BY MAD DOG

Boone, Ia., May 18.--Ray Nelson, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Conroy, was bitten by a mad dog. Ray and a neighbor boy have been sleeping in a tent, erected near their house. They heard a dog underneath their cot scratching and making unusual noises. The lad tapped on the edge of the cot to make the dog leave, but instead the dog made a jump for young Nelson, badly tearing the flesh of his right hand.

Physicians were called and it was deemed best to send the head of the dog to Iowa City for examination. The family is also preparing to send the boy to Iowa City or Chicago to undergo the Pasteur treatment.

LIGHTNING DESTROYS MUCH FARM PROPERTY

Farmers Near Matlock Are Hard Hit as They Carry But Little Insurance.

Matlock, Ia., May 17.—Lightning during Tuesday night's storm completely destroyed the granary and contents and big barn on the August Stuckenberg farm and the barn on the Ed Sluijer farm, both northwest of town. There was small live stock loss. Insurance carried is inadequate to cover the losses.

WILSON FAVORS MEN WHO HAVE BACKED ADMINISTRATION

Des Moines, Ia., May 17.—L. S. Hill, of Des Moines, democratic committeeman from the Seventh congressional district, has returned to Des Moines after a conference with party leaders in Washington with the news that it is the personal wish of President Wilson and Champ Clark, speaker of the House, that republican congressmen who have supported the administration in the war program should not be opposed.

Mr Hill states, however, that there will be contests against Hull of the Second district, Haugen of the Fourth, Ramseyer of the Sixth and Wood of the Tenth Mr Hill made the prediction that Congressman Hull, of the Second district, would be defeated if he is nominated. The democrats expect to nominate Attorney N. D. Ely, of Davenport, to oppose the republican nominated in the Second.

In the Sixth district, Ross R. Mowry, of Newton, is making a strenuous campaign for the republican nomination He is getting around over the district and is emphasizing in his speeches that Congressman Ramseyer opposed the draft, quoting from the Sixth district congressional speeches to substantiate his charges.

In the Tenth district L. J. Dickinson of Algona, is opposing Congressman Frank Woods for the republican nomination and J. R. Files, of Fort Dodge, is out for the democratic nomination Files previously has been a candidate for congress in the Tenth district

Secretary of State W. S. Allen is now forwarding the official ballots to the county auditor for the primary of June 3 Only two tickets are in the field the republican and democratic, except in a few of the counties where some of the larger cities are located, where the socialists have a ticket.

Lee Elwood, of Elma, Howard county, one of the leaders in the House in the last two sessions and special champion of the highway commission law, has gone to war. Ellwood was talked of for state senator from the Howard-Winneshiek district. There are now three candidates for the nomination for state senator on the republican ticket in that district, H. L. Spaulding, of Elma John F. Murtha, of Creso, and Carl W. Reed, of Cresco.

SOLDIERS BURIED IN FRANCE NOT FORGOTTEN

Des Moines, Ia., May 16. — Arrangements have been made to honor Iowa soldiers buried in France by having their graves decorated on Memorial day, May 30.

The members of the Salvation army in France will perform the ceremonies connected with the observance of the day over there.

An order to members of the G. A. R., issued by Department Commander Farrington, asking that due respect be paid on Memorial day to those who have died in the present war, is as follows:

"As our nation is now engaged in the world's war in defense of human rights, it naturally follows that the duties and responsibilities of the hour should be borne by all patriotic people. Already our dead have lined the shores of old Ireland, while some have found sepulchres in sunny France and others sleep beneath the waves of old ocean. Still others are sleeping in silent companionship with the patriots of the civil war in peaceful cemeteries of our beloved country.

"Therefore, your commander respectfully suggests that on Memorial day, 1918, and thereafter, until some other patriotic fraternity may assume this sacred duty, the graves of all such patriotic dead who have joined the crusade in France for human rights, shall receive from our fraternity the same loving care which is given the graves of our heroic dead who gave all they possess for the preservation of the union in the time of our country's need. Thus may we express our appreciation of all who give devoted service, and even life in the defense of our country and humanity, when both are endangered."

IOWA FARMING AREA IS BEING COMPUTED

Des Moines, Ia., May 16.—There are 35,780,549.74 acres of land in Iowa.

This is exclusive of rivers and lakes. It includes drained lake beds, abandoned river channels and islands.

The county with the largest land area is Kossuth with 626,005 acres. The smallest is Emmet containing 252,888.02 acres.

This is the first time in the history of the state that computations of this kind have been made. The figures have been obtained from the original United States survey.

The computing of the land area of the state is being done by the state land office in order to ascertain the actual number of acres that may be utilized for agricultural purposes. To obtain this the area of roads, town lots and railroads will have to be deducted from the number of acres given above, which deductions are now being made by the land office.

Up to this time the number of acres given as the area of Iowa has been based on estimates. The number given in the last official registed is 35,575,040 acres, which is less by 205,509 acres than that shown by the recent computations.

STEAL SEED CORN FROM BOXES ON PLANTERS.

Ida Grove, Ia., May 16. — The seed corn scarcity and the high prices obtaining for it has resulted in the appearance of a new menace to the farmers of Ida county, in the person of the seed corn thief. Ed Hoffman, Harry Rice and several other prominent farmers of the county report that the boxes on their corn planters, each containing a peck or more of seed corn, worth $8 to $10 a bushel, have been robbed during the night, the machines having been unhitched in the fields. The presence of the thieves has caused the other farmers to take their seed corn indoors at night until the seeding operations are completed.

WILL MOBILIZE ALL RESOURCES

Teutons Have Violated Terms of Brest Treaty So Soviet Government Has No Alternative, Is Claim.

WILL STAND BY THE PACT

Protest Against Continued Invasion of Russian Territory and Pretexts to Evade Truce Terms.

Washington, D. C., May 17.—A protest of the protest made by the soviet government to the German ministry foreign affairs on April 26 against German aggression made public by the state department, shows the Russians gave evidence of their intention to mobilize all necessary forces in order to secure the freedom and independence of the Russian public which is now menaced beyond the limits established by the Brest Litovsk treaty

"The Russian government," said the message, "has [illegible] every measure possible strictly to fulfill the terms from their side and in this way secure for our people the chief advantage of this treaty, a state of peace.

"But in reality no such state of peace exists. In the north of the Russian republic there has been a further advance northwards of German troops and detachments of Finnish rifles-men, who are advancing upon Petrograd and Murmansk, territory undoubtedly Great Russian. They have crossed into the Kem peninsula. That frontier which was one sided established by the Ukrainian rada [illegible] off and officially made known to us by the German government, has been encroached by German and Ukrainian troops Simultaneously in the north of Finland Russian military property is being seized, white guard detachments operating in agreement with German landing detachments and under direct instructions from the German general staff.

"In order to fulfill the Brest treaty which is the legal basis for the relations between [illegible] and Russia, the soviet government has officially declared its readiness to open immediate negotiations with the Ukrainian central rada No answer however has come from this government which is now directed by [illegible] only.

Ignore Peace Offer.

"The German government has likewise proposed to question of peace treaty has in no way given answer to our offer to open negotiations Instead of this the advance of German troops against Russia continues as has already been reported

"Owing to such circumstances the soviet government considers itself compelled to mobilize all necessary forces in order to secure the freedom and independence of the Russian republic which is now menaced beyond the limits established by the Brest treaty It is evident that such a state of things cannot continue for long The soviet government considers it indispensable to throw more light on this matter and in the name of secure peace affirms its complete readiness to fulfill in future the conditions of the Brest treaty

READY TO HELP RUSSIA.

London, May 17.—"We are anxious to do all in our power to assist and support Russia—not only now, but after the war," Lord Cecil, minister of blockade, declared in the house of commons this afternoon

"It is our policy to preserve Russia as an allied country and, if that is impossible, as a non-German."

SIXTUS LETTER NOT REVEALED TO BRITISH

Emperor's Peace Offer Shown Only to French Officials, Balfour Declares

London, May 17.—Foreign Secretary Balfour was asked in the house of commons today whether Prince Sixtus of Bourbon, to whom Emperor Charles of Austria addressed the letters last year in which peace was offered to France, paid two visits to England in connection with the peace proposals and whether he was in communication on this subject with Premier Lloyd George. The question was brought up by Robert Outhwaite a liberal member. Mr. Balfour replied that the subject was one which could be dealt with by question and answer

Mr. Balfour said that Emperor Charles wrote a letter to a relative (Prince Sixtus is a brotherinlaw of the emperor,) and that it was conveyed by this relative to the president and premier of France. No permission was given to communicate the letter to any one except the sovereign and premier of this country This answers the question, which has been raised as to why the emperor's proposals were not communicated to President Wilson.)

Mr. Balfour said he had no secret from President Wilson. Every thought he had on the war or in regard to questions of diplomacy was open to the president.

Great Britain is prepared to consider proposals from the enemy, provided they are put forward by accredited persons in a straight-forward manner, Foreign Secretary Balfour declared today in the house of commons. "If any representative of any belligerent country desires seriously to lay before us any proposals, he said, "we are ready to listen to them."

The British government was desirous of an honorable termination of the war, he added, but the space moved by the central powers heretofore had not been in the interests of a fair and honorable peace.

There is probability that the Americans England comprise the units that to Flanders to find temporary with the British divisions pro- Ypres, Hazebrouck and the o the channel ports. anent location of the Americans in Flanders or in Picardy does essarily follow from the fact y are to be sent there at the me. The chief work now be- American armies in France is all the experience possible in fighting before engaging in operations of their own. Since the Flanders and Picardy fronts present the best opportunities for gaining practical knowledge of German methods of warfare it is perfectly logical for the brigading of Americans to be carried out in those sectors to the fullest possible extent

This does not mean, however that General Foch is going to use up the Americans for defensive operations It means only that theoretical intensive training behind the front is now to be succeeded by active training under real conditions of warfare It is really necessary is it for American officers to go through this new course of study under continuous artillery fire with offensive assaults being delivered on the Germans. Without the most thorough instruction along practical lines that direct experience provides American generalship cannot be expected to reach a high, scientific development It may require six months for the Americans to acquire intimate knowledge of the German game When that knowledge is secured there is every reason to believe the brigading principles will be dropped and the Americans will begin an offensive campaign under General Foch's supreme control but as independent units

PERSHING TO ISSUE DAILY COMMUNIQUE

All News of Army Operations to Come From Headquarters in France

Washington, D. C., May 17.—Issuance of official communiques by General Pershing puts into practice the recently announced policy of the war department that all news of the operations of the American expeditionary forces must come from American headquarters in France. The daily communique will supersede a weekly review of military operations by Secretary Baker, which was discontinued a fortnight ago. Secretary Baker on his visit to the American troops in France discussed the subject with General Pershing and at that time issued an order that all news regarding the expeditionary forces in France must come from Pershing's headquarters. Practically the only news other than of the activities of the American forces has reached the folks at home through newspaper dispatches. For a time the issuance here of American casualty lists was stopped on a misunderstanding of the order, but later the lists were resumed.

While a number of reports are received daily at the war department from General Pershing, no military information other than the casualty lists is made public here.

FAIRBANKS AND WIFE ARE NOW RECONCILED

Los Angeles, Cal., May 16.—Further evidence that the reported breach between Douglas Fairbanks, movie actor and his wife, involving another screen favorite, has been healed was given today when Mrs. Fairbanks, returning from the east, took charge of the Fairbanks home again. Neither Mr. nor Mrs. Fairbanks would make any statement.

It would contribute ...ndously to the spirit of unity and ...rted effort and at the same time, ...d of holding large numbers of ...erican troops behind the lines while ...ing, would surround them with ...oned veterans and under actual ...e conditions school them to be re- ...ded later with fresh American ... coming to France. In this way ...fficiency of the British and French forces is expected to be increased and the work of building up a great fully trained and completely equipped fighting force in France is expected to be hastened.

In addition to this, as illustrative of the unity of command under which Generalissimo Foch directs all the allied armies, it was stated officially here today that Foch commands the Italian troops in Italy as fully as he does the American, British and French troops in France and Belgium

It was stated also that Italy, besides now sending troops to France in numbers equal to those being sent from the United States has on her fighting line a larger army more perfectly equipped than she had before the great Austrian drive.

The information that the brigaded allied divisions in the west probably will be placed under the command of General Pershing when the numbers of American troops contained in them predominate, was taken to mean that the same principle would operate when the predominating numbers were French or British.

GERMANS CLING TO FIRST AIMS

Incorporation of Austria-Hungary In Mitteleuropa Scheme Is Believed to Have Been Accomplished.

VIENNA IS APPREHENSIVE

Fear Prussianization of Armies—Huns Expected Now to Dominate Ally With Proverbial Ruthlessness.

BY CARL D. GROAT.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

Washington, D. C., May 17.—Germany, seeking to gobble up Russia, is also still clinging to the old Mitteleuropa idea.

The thought that she has abandoned that scheme of running a blot of Teuton domination across the middle of Europe was disproved today by official diplomatic dispatches received anent the recent Hohenzollern-Hapsburg conference at the German great headquarters.

The conference resulted in arrangements for putting Austria more under German subjection than ever before.

It was significant from the fact that Austria has been going through a period of serious war stress.

Now, she and Germany will work more in unison that is, German war lords will force her to do their bidding ruthlessly, according to official interpretation here.

The session was not, however, the most harmonious that brothers in arms have ever had. On the contrary, injection of the Saxon and Bavarian kings into the meeting proved disconcerting and the official dispatches showed that the German-Austrian mutual-business-land had not yet been formally created "because the moment did not seem opportune."

Foundations were laid whereby the dual economic affairs will be regulated "so as to realize the plan of Mitteleuropa."

It was definitely stated a military convention will be signed whereby Austria will have a stronger military obligation than under the old treaty.

Vienna is reported to look with apprehension on the probability that the Austro-Hungarian army will be Prussianized and believes such a step more important than any other feature of the new alliance.

MINOR KINGS "BUTT IN."

Zurich, Switzerland, May 17.—Both King Ludwig, of Bavaria and King Frederick August, of Saxony, seem to have been participants in the great headquarters conference of the Austrian and German emperors although apparently neither was invited to be present. This is indicated by a statement in the Munich Neuste Nachrichten which says:

"The hour is grave and Bavaria cannot leave Prussia to be the whole arbiter of German destinies. King Ludwig therefore decided to proceed to headquarters. The departure of the king of Saxony to take part in the negotiations—a participation which was not desired in Berlin circles—was due to the same cause."

Zurich, May 17.—Count von Hertling the German chancellor, Dr. Richard von Kuehlmann the German foreign minister and Herr Gratz and Herr Ruder departmental heads of the Austrian foreign office, have arrived in Berlin to take up the new Austro-German treaty negotiations, the preliminary of which was discussed at the recent conference of Kaiser Wilhelm and Emperor Karl.

The treaty, which is known as the "union of arms" comprises political, economic and military arrangements and is to endure 25 years.

DENOUNCE NEW PACT.

Amsterdam, May 17.—The Berlin Tageblatt, in copies received here today declared the new Austro-German alliance is depriving as evidence of the "non-parliamentary action" of Kaiser Wilhelm and Emperor Karl in effecting important treaties without consulting the representatives of the people.

VATERLAND SAILOR WILL BE INTERNED

Otto Greenburg, Known at Martinsburg, Neb., Arrested at Carroll, Ia.

Des Moines, Ia., May 17.—Otto Greenburg, 33 who was chased out of Martinsburg, Neb., some days ago for making pro-German utterances, was arrested by secret service men at Carroll, Ia., today. He admitted he was one of the German sailors on the Vaterland and had a part in wrecking its machinery to make the vessel unfit for use by Uncle Sam when war was declared. Greenburg will be interned until the end of the war.

LONG RANGE GUNS SENT TO PLANT FOR REPAIRS

Geneva, May 17.—Two of the German long distance guns which have been bombarding Paris have been removed to the Krupp plant for repairs, the Constance Zeitung states.

Sisters Forced To Return Property of 75-Year-old Suitor

Detroit, Mich., May 16.—A 75-year-old suitor was the winner today in his "breach of promise" suit against his two youthful fiancees (sisters). His "damage" were a $7,000 piece of property which the court ordered returned and he deeded the property to his fiancees' father upon promise of a wedding which never happened.

Orville Sexton, the aged Lothario, was engaged to both Grace (21) and Cecelia (25) Sherwood at the same time. Cecelia proposed to him, he said; he proposed to Grace. Once in possession of his property the sisters both gave Sexton his walking papers.

ITALIANS TORPEDO AUSTRIAN WARSHIP

Enter Harbor of Pola and Send 20,000 Ton Battleship to Bottom of Sea.

Rome, May 17.—An Austrian battleship was torpedoed by Italian naval forces in Pola harbor early Tuesday morning, it was officially announced today.

The battleship was of the Viribus Unitis type, (20,000-ton vessels.)

The Italian force worked its way into the Austrian naval base by dodging the patrol boats and searchlights of the defenders.

While the naval operation was progressing an Italian seaplane force engaged Austrian battle planes above Pola. Two of the Austrians were brought down and several others were compelled to descend out of control. The Italian machines all returned safely.

The official announcement says:

"Italian naval units avoiding patrol boats and searchlights succeeded in entering Pola harbor early on Tuesday and in torpedoing an Austrian battleship of the Viribus Unitis type.

"Simultaneously Italian seaplane squadrons attacked Austrian battleplanes over Pola, brought down two and forced several others down out of control. The Italian machines all returned safely to their bases."

There are four Austrian battleships of the Viribus Unitis class, which comprised the largest and most modern fighting vessels completed for the Austrian navy up to the time the European war broke out.

The other ships of the class are the Tegetthof, the Prinz Eugen and the Szent Istvan. The name ship was completed in October 1912, and the others at intervals between then and the beginning of the war with the exception of the Szent Istvan, which was not finished until 1915.

REPORTS OF GERMAN RIFLES EXAGGERATED

Munitions Made in U. S. for Export to Mexico, Is Belief—More Disclosures Near.

New York, N. Y., May 17.—Rifles and ammunition believed to have been stored near New York by German interests, were brought here for exportation to Mexico, according to the theory of some investigators, it was learned today. Attorney General Lewis of New York is conducting an official inquiry.

The arms were necessarily left near this city when the government shut down on shipments of munitions across the border.

The amount of arms and ammunition, if located, will be found much smaller than at first supposed, it was stated. In the investigation now being conducted by the state attorney general, direct connection between Germany and uprisings in Mexico before this country entered the war may be exposed, if clues now being followed developed as expected.

That there may be similar arms caches in cities within a short distance of New York, was indicated today when it was learned that a search is being made for such stores.

When the attorney general's probe first started, it was widely reported that the arms constituted a huge arsenal, which had been made ready for a German outbreak in this country. The investigation is not bearing this out, it was learned.

The munitions were brought into the United States but were manufactured right in this country by factories controlled by German capital according to the latest disclosures.

Sensational developments are expected before the attorney general's hearing is resumed next Wednesday.

Swindlers, who had a knowledge of the existence of German stores of munitions in this country, are responsible for the stories that the number of rifles and rounds of ammunition had run into the millions, according to authorities.

DROP PROPOSAL FOR CONTROL OF PACKERS

Believed Special Report to President Will Squelch Recent Agitation.

Washington, D. C., May 17.—Possibility of government operation of the packing industry for the war is officially squelched in a special report before President Wilson today.

The report submitted by representatives of the food, labor, agriculture departments and the federal trade commission is understood to recommend merely tightening up of the regulations already in effect toward the packing industry.

The commission was asked by the president to investigate to see whether there was need for a "new policy"—perhaps government control—in connection with the food administration's efforts to bring about satisfactory cooperation between the government, cattle raisers and the packers.

The federal trade commission has been carrying on an exhaustive probe of the packing industry and is now preparing its report for congress.

MORE STOCK CARS ARE NECESSARY, SAYS TAGG

New York, May 16.—Increase of 40 per cent in the number of live stock cars is absolutely essential to the carrying out of any "win-the-war-with-food" program, W. B. Tagg, Omaha, president of the National Live Stock exchange, told 200 members of the exchange in convention here today.

"The government must have more stock cars built at once if the farmers are to be encouraged to increase live stock production," President Tagg said. "There is no use urging greater production if the producers are not to be enabled to move their stock."

Improvement of railroad service and prevention of sending too many stock cars east, are other reforms the stockmen will ask of the railroad administration.

MAIL PLANE SMASHED.

Washington, D. C., May 16.—The postoffice department was informed that the postal plane which left New York today for Philadelphia, piloted by Lieut. Stephen Bonsal, was smashed in making a landing at Bridgeton, N. J. The aviator was not hurt.

GUN DUELS ARE RAGING IN WEST

Heavy Artillery Fighting In Progress Along Flanders and Picardy Fronts—Infantry Idle.

HUNS ARE ABOUT READY

Nearly 1,200,000 Entirely Fresh or Rested Men to Be Hurled Against Allied Lines In France.

By United Press.

London, May 17.—Allied and German artilleries are pounding at each other in various sectors along practically the whole western battle front, Field Marshal Haig reported today.

"There is reciprocal artillery fighting at different points, particularly in the valleys of the Somme and Ancre, east of Arras and on the northern battle front," the statement said.

"We raided enemy trenches in the neighborhood of Gavrelle last night and took a few prisoners."

Paris, May 17.—Artillery actions occurred last night on the French fronts southeast of Amiens in the Hailles-Castel sector, says today's war office announcement. West of Montdidier a German raiding detachment was driven off. The French took prisoners in patrol operations north of the Ailette.

BY WILLIAM PHILIP SIMMS.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the British Armies in France, May 17.—Nearly 100, rested or fresh German infantry divisions (1,200,000 men) are on the west front, ready for immediate battle.

Hindenburg has slowly patched up his badly battered war machine, which is reported to be again in something like running condition.

About 125 German divisions (1,500,000 men) are facing the British, French, Belgians and Americans in the actual line. About 80 divisions (960,000 men) are in reserve. Of these latter, a dozen are quite fresh, not having participated in the present campaign. Between 50 and 60 German divisions have not fought for so long that they must be counted as among the available troops for the coming thrust.

The battle front yesterday was moderately quiet. There was some fighting north of Kemmel where the French, in a snappy counter attack, regained Hill 44 which previously had been captured by Von Armin's storm troops.

Southwest Morlancourt the Australians sturdily biffed out the Germans who had previously captured a position.

The artillery is barking louder during the past 24 hours in the Corbie, Morlancourt and Arras regions. Likewise, Strazeele and the hill country there about is being generously strafed.

The general situation is one of jostling for position. The Germans are desperately eager to win certain advantages jumping off places before the big smash.

Today's skies were clear and blue, and German patrols swarmed up and down the lines, striving to drive off the allies' planes, which were constantly breaking through to watch the enemy's every move. The machines circled, charged and fired point blank.

Soldiers admit the mastery of the air was never so important as now.

An American who has served here since the beginning of the war told me: "Whenever I hear the drone of a motor, I always look up, hoping to see a plane with stars on the wings. Say, tell me why don't they come."

RUSS QUIT FINLAND.

Stockholf, May 17.—The Russians have evacuated all of Finland, with the exception of fortress Ino, retreating as far as Kronstadt, according to a dispatch from Helsingfors. They also have given up the railway line from Valkeashari to Petrograd.

REPULSE AIR RAID.

Paris, May 17.—An attempted German air raid on Paris last night was repulsed after enemy planes had penetrated to the outskirts, is was officially announced today. The attack occurred about 10 o'clock. Only a few bombs were dropped.

WANT FLANDERS COAST.

Amsterdam, May 17.—"Without the Flanders coast, the German economic system, based upon access to the world's markets, is impossible," Herr von Boehlendorff, conservative member, is quoted in Berlin dispatches as declaring in the German reichstag.

FIGHTING IS HEAVIER.

Vienna, via London, May 17.—"Several reconnoitering thrusts were repulsed between the Brenta and the Piave," the Austro-Hungarian war office announced today.

"At Monte Asolone and Monte Pertica the fighting was hand to hand."

KILL PART OF GARRISON.

Rome, May 17.—"Italian detachments entered two Austrian positions in the region of Monte Asolone, killing a part of the garrison," the Italian war office reported today.

"The other fled, leaving a few prisoners."

GERMAN FLEETS ARE GATHERING AT KIEL

Important Concentration of Hun Warships May Presage Naval Action.

London, May 16.—The entire German Baltic fleet except a few light cruisers, was recalled last week to Kiel, where important naval forces now are being concentrated says a dispatch from Hamburg received in Geneva and transmitted by the correspondent of the Daily Express.

143 YANKS RETURN.

Washington, D. C., May 16.—One hundred and forty-eight sick and wounded "Yanks" arrived in this country from the American expeditionary forces during the week ending May 3, the surgeon announced today.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH

A. H. Meyer, Pastor

According to the request of President Woodrow Wilson Memorial Day this year is to be observed in every congregation with fasting and prayer. This we will do, not only next Thursday, May 30th, but also next Sunday, this being Memorial Day Sunday. It is very fitting and good to set aside one Sunday in the year to show our respect and love to those who in bygone years have given their service and life for this great and grand nation of ours, that we might enjoy freedom and liberty. And since we are at present involved in the greatest war of all history and some of our own boys and others have given their lives to protect that freedom and heritage which our fathers fought and died for, it is very proper that every true American citizen and patriot should meet in the various churches next Sunday and pray the blessing of Almighty God to rest upon our American boys now in the trenches and those training in the cantonments; also upon the armies of our Allies, that God in His wise providence might speedily give victory to our and the Allied armies in order that despotism, czarism and militarism may forever be wiped from the face of the earth and that freedom, liberty, honesty and justice may come within the reach of every individual.

English M. E. Church Notes

Remember that May 26th is Memorial Sunday. With a new and profound sense of the meaning and reality of the sacrific of those who, in former wars, gave their lives for our beloved Country, we draw near to the day sacred to their memory. They fought to secure the freedom of America, and establish her a united nation of free men. They fought that weaker nations might also be free. In the midst of a new conflict we prepare to honor their fearless devotion to justice and liberty

Upon this occasion we shall honor not only the heroes of the past but also those, who at this hour are fighting even greater battles, in our behalf: battles in which, with God's blessing, we shall win, for men and nations the world around, the unchallenged exercise of those rights of justice and liberty which our fathers won for us.

Rev. J. M. Kettle, pastor of the Methodist church of Garner, has consented to preach the Memorial sermon for us Snndoy morning at 10:30 o'clock. Rev. Kettle is a fine speaker and well posted in all lines. Be sure and attend this service. Special music.

We want every old soldier and thier wives present at this service. Come! We shall have a reserved seat for you. There will also be a reserved seat for parents Who have given their boys to the present war. Last but not least a place for any boys who will probably go to war this year. Let everybody turn out and help to make this a real Memorial Sunday.

Sunday School at 11:30 o'clock. Epworth League at 8:00 P. M. Topic—"That wrongs need Righting in our Town?" Miss Myrtle Bell, leader.

EATING POTATOES IS PATRIOTIC ACT

HOOVER WIRES IOWA THAT IT MUST BE DONE OR THERE WILL BE GREAT WASTE.

Food Administrator Deems is in receipt of a telegram from Herbert Hoover urging prompt action to induce a wide use of potatoes. Mr. Hoover says:

"Every effort must be made to get potatoes flowing freely to your markets and placed in the hands of consumers at reasonable prices that will stimulate consumption.

"It is suggested that you get the trade together in large sections of your state and devise plans with receivers, wholesalers and retailers to get potatoes through these channels at the lowest possible margin for handling largely during the next 90 days, as a patriotic duty.

"Follow out the potato campaign as to publicity and do all possible to increase the consumption of potatoes to take the place of wheat flour so that at the end of the season no farmer may justly complain that we have not done our full duty to stimulate production and increase consumption of their products.

"This is most important and responsibility for complete success rests with state administrators.

(Signed) "HOOVER."

In addressing the telegram to the attention of the county food administrators Mr. Deems has stated that reports from county food administrators indicate that reasonable prices for potatoes obtain in several sections of the state, but in many sections prices rule too high to move the crop. There is imminent danger of wasting 30,000,000 bushels of the surplus crop in the country unless the food administration is able to devise a method of putting potatoes into the hands of consumers at a fair price. Mr. Hoover points out in his telegram one way to solve the problem.

"Will you," asks Mr. Deems, in accordance with his suggestion, either through conference or personal communication try to get the trade together in your locality with a view to inducing wholesalers and retailers to co-operate in moving the crop to the tables of the people?"

Administrator Deems is urging the enlistment of every activity to induce the movement of the crop to the tables of the people. Every potato eaten means less meat and flour consumed.

Is there anything the matter with your neck or your shoulders or your BACK? If there is, REMEMBER the remedy is Osteopathy. Osteopaths have a four year course and are licensed physicians. Dr. R. W. Schultz, Garner, Iowa. 20-tf

Where Liberty Bond Money Goes

Approximately 1,500,000 more men will be added to America's fighting forces within the next few months. Each man must immediately have clothing and equipment that costs about $150. Therefore, it will take $225,000,000 to provide the initial equipment of arms and clothing.

There are about 27,000 men and officers in an army division. To supply them with shelter tents costs $79,650. To buy their steel helmets takes $81,000. To give them gas masks requires $324,000. This means $26,925,000 for such equipment for the 1,500,000 men who will soon be added to the fighting forces.

Shoes.

Everybody knows that army shoes are the most comfortable and the cheapest that can be bought, but when they are bought by the millions they mean a lot of money. General Pershing says that each man needs about nine pairs a year. One pair costs $5.10. One $50 Liberty bond will buy one man's shoes for a year. To buy shoes for 3,000,0000 men takes $137,000,000.

Food.

The addition of 1,500,000 men will mean that America must provide food for approximately 3,000,000. It costs $150 a year to feed one soldier, so the nation must provide a fund of $450,000,000 to feed our army during the coming year.

Airplanes.

Airplanes are one of the most important and expensive items of our fighting equipment. One aviator used from five to eight planes a year, and for every flyer there must be 40 men on the ground after the machine is in commission. Every thousand feet of lumber used costs $105, and 10,000,000 feet a month are needed, which totals a sum of $1,050,000. The planes needed cost from $7,000 to $20,000 each, and the service needs at least 20,000 of them. Appropriations thus far made for them have been $640,000,000 and $450,000,000 more is needed.

Rifles.

Rifles make a large item in army expense. The average life of a rifle on the fighting front is nine days. One Enfield costs $19.50. We are shipping 250,000 rifles to France every month, at a cost of $4,875,000. For a year that means a total of $58,500,000.

One hundred rounds of rifle ammunition costs $5. To provide 3,000,000 men with 100 rounds each would cost $15,000,000. A seven-day's barrage fire along a front of 11,000 yards costs $63,791,285. This represents the cost of nearly 2,000,000 shells of all sizes and descriptions.

The average cost of drafting one man—changing a civilian into a soldier—is $4.93. To add 1,500,000 more men to the service will cost $7,395,000. This represents the cost of the work of the 4,557 draft boards.

PITCH THE DOLLARS IN

Win the Liberty Pennant With the Third Liberty Loan, Says Alexander.

By GROVER CLEVELAND ALEXANDER,

[Star Twirler of Chicago Cubs, Who Has Been Drafted.[

In the great game for the democratization of the world we must do our utmost during the full route of nine innings. We made good in the first two, so let's exceed our speed in the the Third Liberty loan inning.

We at home, who are denied a place in the trenches, can strike out Prussian tyranny with a blinding curve of money. Pitch the dollars in for America for the freedom of the seas, the protection of the weak and the triumph of right over might.

Every ballplayer and every fan should open his purse and lend his savings to Uncle Sam, who will pay you good interest and guarantee payment with the length and breadth of the greatest country on earth.

We must not rest one minute until America and its allies have put the Hun in last place. Nothing can bring this result quicker than good American dollars, each of which is a nail in the coffin of Kaiserism.

Get together, boys. Let's win the Liberty pennant with the Liberty loan in the Third Liberty loan inning.

WORKING OVERTIME

When a man works overtime it is because of some extreme necessity and usually not because he wants to. Nearly everyone realizes that working long hours constantly in time will bring a physical breakdown. Therefore, everyone with good judgment strives to be a friend to his own body if for no other reason than that he may be able to continue to work and make a living.

If you were suddenly to find some means of working 24 hours a day 36 days a year you would probably run to Washington to take out a patent on the system. Have you stopped to think, however, that there is a way of earning money 24 hours of the day which you may be neglecting? The one thing which will work overtime for you year in and year out without tiring is money placed at interest. Money "in boxes and soxes," hoarded or hidden away, is imprisoned and cannot work. Moreover, it is in danger of being lost, stolen or destroyed by accident.

There are just two ways of putting such money to work for your benefit. One is to deposit it in a safe bank where it will earn interest for you and be subject to your order. The other is to invest it safely, where it will also earn interest for you.

Just now the most desirable investment any one can make is in Liberty Loan bonds. You can buy them in any amounts from $50 up. They will earn you 4¼ per cent interest yearly. They always have a ready market and the security behind them is the best in the world. You have never doubted the safety of United States currency, which is simply the promise to pay of the government. United States government Liberty loan bonds are the promise to pay of the entire country, backed by all the wealth of all the states and territories, with the additional feature that they are always working overtime for you.

If you want a true and tried friend who will never tire, who will work for you day and night without pay, and, who will turn over his wages to you every six months, take your idle money to the bank today and buy United States Liberty loan 4¼ per cent bonds with it.

William Allen White Says Loan Gives Home-Stayers Their Work.

By WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE,

[Editor of Emporia (Kan.) Gazette.]

Back of the German lines every ounce of food is conserved and distributed with fairly equitable precision; every yard of cloth is numbered and entered into the war strength of the empire. Every pennyweight of German coal is handled with scientific care, and the one end and aim of all this autocratic control of food and clothing and heat is the winning of the war. There is no other purpose in the German mind. Every German mark is a German soldier; every grain of gold is doing its full share to work out that indomitable purpose.

Here in America we must realize that the war will not be won on any front, but in our own hearts. This is a clash of civilizations. We must develop in our hearts a democratic purpose as strong and as carefully directed as this autocratic purpose of Germany.

We, too, must make soldiers of our cornstalks, defenders of our wool, cotton and silk, make every pound of coal an American pound, and we must make bullets of our pennies. If we fail to develop this democratic purpose in the eye-to-eye, knee-to-knee, hand-to-hand struggle on the front, then our civilization will do down. To fail to support our soldiers with ammunition, food, clothing and coal will weaken them for the great conflict at the great moment, and that weakening will come from our hearts at home. It will come if we are slow with our financial support of the men.

The Liberty loan furnishes us with the only way we home-stayers can practically show our purpose. Our patriotism will be measured by our performance toward the Liberty loan. What we lend to our country in this time of need will measure our love of the freedom our fathers bought. It is at stake. The autocratic purpose of Germany, iron-willed and yet unbroken, aimed at world conquest, is threatening us. What is freedom worth to you? It is worth what you lend to your government in this hour of its awful need.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION

May be Overcome by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—This Letter Proves It.

West Philadelphia, Pa.—"During the thirty years I have been married, I have been in bad health and had several attacks of nervous prostration until it seemed as if the organs in my whole body were worn out. I was finally persuaded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it made a well woman of me. I can now do all my housework and advise all ailing women to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I will guarantee they will derive great benefit from it."—Mrs. FRANK FITZGERALD, 25 N. 41st Street, West Philadelphia, Pa.

There are thousands of women everywhere in Mrs. Fitzgerald's condition, suffering from nervousness, backache, headaches, and other symptoms of a functional derangement. It was a grateful spirit for health restored which led her to write this letter so that other women may benefit from her experience and find health as she has done.

For suggestions in regard to your condition write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of their 40 years experience is at your service.

"'One per cent,' said Skinner promptly.

"'One per cent!' ejaculated Grabber. 'Holy smoke! That ain't no profit at all! Why, man, I run it more on a profit of 25 40, yes, and sometimes even 50 per cent.'

"'Well, yer a greedy devil, then,' said Skinner. 'One per cent is enough for me. If an article costs me a dollar I let it go for two.'"

How Many Work Here?

A visitor to the national capital entered one of the department buildings one day while he was sightseeing. Entering a large room where he expected to see many clerks, he was surprised to find only one occupying the numerous desks that looked as if they had just been vacated. No one was in sight but a janitor, who was dusting and cleaning. Thinking to obtain some knowledge of the room, its capacity and use, he addressed her:

"How many people work in here?"

"Humph! About hah of 'em I 'low."

"It's nothing," he said. "I'm all right. And you, Alexandre?"

They helped the sergeant out. He had a few bruises and a little pain, but no serious injury.

Only the chauffeur had been thrown from his seat and lay motionless on the pavement, bleeding from the head. He was carried into a chemist's shop and died in 10 minutes.

Mazeroux had gone in with the poor victim and, feeling pretty well stunned, had himself been given a pick-me-up. When he went back to the motor car he found two policemen entering particulars of the accident in their notebooks and taking evidence from the bystanders; but the chief was not there.

Perenna in fact had jumped into a taxicab and driven home as fast as he could. He got out in the square, ran through the gateway, crossed the courtyard, and went down the passage that led to Mlle. Levasseur's quarters. He leaped up the steps, knocked, and entered without waiting for an answer.

The door of the room that served as a sitting room was opened and Florence appeared. He pushed her back into the room, and said, in a tone furious with indignation:

"It's done. The accident has occurred. And yet none of the old servants can have prepared it, because they were not there and because I was out with the car this afternoon. Therefore, it must have been late in the day, between 6 and 9 o'clock, that somebody went to the garage and filed the steering rod three-quarters through."

"I don't understand. I don't understand," she said, with a scared look.

"You understand perfectly well that the accomplice of the ruffins cannot be one of the new servants, and you understand perfectly well that the job was bound to succeed and that it did succeed, beyond their hopes. There is a victim, who suffers instead of myself."

"But tell me what has happened, monsieur! You frighten me! What accident? What was it?"

"The motor car overturned. The chauffeur is dead."

"Oh," she said, "how horrible! And you think that I can have—— Oh, dead, how horrible! Poor man!"

Her voice grew fainter. She was standing opposite to Perenna, close up against him. Pale and swooning, she closed her eyes, staggered.

He caught her in his arms as she fell. She tried to release herself, but had not the strength; and he laid her in a chair, while she moaned, repeatedly:

"Poor man! Poor man!"

Keeping one of his arms under the girl's head, he took a handkerchief in the other hand and wiped her forehead, which was wet with perspiration, and her pallid cheeks, down which the tears streamed.

She must have lost consciousness entirely, for she surrendered herself to Perenna's cares without the least resistance. And he, making no further movement, began anxiously to examine the mouth before his eyes, the mouth with the lips usually so red, now bloodless and discolored.

Gently passing one of his fingers over each of them, with a continuous pressure, he separted them, as one separates the petals of a flower and the two rows of teeth appeared.

They were charming, beautifully shaped, and beautifully white; a little smaller perhaps than Mme. Fauville's, perhaps also arranged in a wider curve. But what did he know? Who could say that their bite would not leave the same imprint? It was an improbable supposition, an impossible miracle, he knew. And yet the circumstances were all against the girl and pointed to her as the most daring, cruel, implacable, and terrible of criminals.

Her breathing became regular. He perceived the cool fragrance of her mouth, intoxicating as the scent of a rose. In spite of himself, he bent down, came so close, so close that he was seized with giddiness and had to make a great effort to lay the girl's head on the back of the chair and to take his eyes from the fair face with the half parted lips.

He rose to his feet and went.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE DEVIL'S POSTOFFICE.

Of all these events the public knew only of the attempted suicide of Mme. Fauville, the capture and escape of Gaston Sauverand, the murder of Chief Inspector Ancenis, and the discovery of a letter written by Hippolyte Fauville. This was enough, however, to reawaken their curiosity, as they were already singularly puzzled by the Mornington case and took the greatest interest in all the movements, however slight, of the mysterious Don Luis Perenna, whom they insisted on confusing with Arsene Lupin.

He was, of course, credited with the brief capture of the man with the ebony walking stick. It was also known that he had saved the life of the prefect of police, and that, finally, having at his own request spent the night in the house on the Boulevard Suchet, he had become the recipient of Hippolyte Fauville's famous letter. And all this added immensely to the excitement of the aforesaid public.

But how much more complicated and disconcerting were the problems set to Don Luis Perenna himself! Not to mention the denunciation in the anonymous article, there had been, in the short space of 48 hours, no fewer than four separate attempts to kill him: by the iron curtain, by poison, by the shooting on the Boulevard Suchet, and by the deliberately prepared motor accident.

Florence's share in this series of attempts was not to be denied. And, now, behold her relations with the Fauvilles' murderer duly established by the little note found in the eighth volume of Shakespeare's plays, while two more deaths were added to the melancholy list: the deaths of Chief Inspector Ancenis and of the chauffeur. How to describe and how to explain the part played, in the midst of all these catastrophes, by that enigmatical girl?

Strangely enough, life went on as usual at the house in the Place du Palais-Bourbon, as though nothing out of the way had happened there. Every morning Florence Levasseur sorted Don Luis' post in his presence and read out the newspaper articles referring to himself or bearing upon the Mornington case.

Not a single allusion was made to the fierce fight that had been waged against him for two days. It was as though a truce had been proclaimed between them; and the enemy appeared to have ceased his attacks for the moment. Don Luis felt easy, out of the reach of danger, and he talked to the girl with an indifferent air, as he might have talked to anybody.

But with what a feverish interest he studied her unobserved! He watched the expression of her face, at once calm and eager, and a painful sensitiveness which showed under the placid mask and which, difficult to control, revealed itself in the frequent quivering of the lips and nostrils.

"Who are you? Who are you?" he felt inclined to exclaim. "Will nothing content you, you she devil, but to deal out murder all round? And do you want my death also, in order to attain your object? Where do you come from and where are you making for?"

On reflection, he was convinced of a certainty that solved a problem which had preoccupied him for a long time—namely, the mysterious connection between his own presence in the mansion in the Place du Palais-Bourbon and the presence of a woman who was manifestly wreaking her hatred on him.

He now understood that he had not bought the house by accident. In making the purchase he had been persuaded by an anonymous offer that reached him in the form of a typewritten prospectus. Whence did this offer come, if not from Florence, who wished to have him near her in order to spy upon him and wage war upon him?

"Yes," he thought, "that is where the truth lies. As the possible heir of Cosmo Mornington and a prominent figure in the case, I am the enemy, and they are trying to do away with me as they did with the others. And it is Florence who is acting against me. And it is she who has committed murder.

"Everything tells against her; nothing speaks in her defense. Her innocent eyes? The accent of sincerity in her voice? Her serene dignity? And then? Yes, what then? Have I never seen women with that frank look who have committed murder for no reason, almost for pleasure's sake?"

He started with terror at the memory of Dolores Kesselbach. What was it that made him connect these two women at every moment in his mind? He had loved one of them, that monster Dolores, and had strangled her with his own hands. Was fate now leading him toward a like love and a similar murder?

When Florence left him he would experience a sense of satisfaction and breathe more easily, as though released from an oppressive weight, but he would run to the window and see her crossing the courtyard and be still waiting when the girl whose scented breath he had felt upon his face passed to and fro.

One morning she said to him:

"The papers say that it will be tonight."

"Tonight!"

"Yes," she said, showing him an article in one of the newspapers. "This is the 25th; and, according to the informataion of the police, they say, by you, there should be a letter delivered in the house on the Boulevard Suchet every 10th day, and the house is to be destroyed by an explosion on the day when the fifth and last letter appears."

Was she defying him? Did she wish to make him understand that whatever happened, whatever the obstacles, the letters would appear, those mysterious letters prophesied on the list which he had found in the eighth volume of Shakespeare's plays?

He looked at her steadily. She did not flinch. He answered:

"Yes, this is the night. I shall be there. Nothing in the world will prevent me."

She was on the point of replying, but once more controlled her feelings.

That day Don Luis was on his guard. He lunched and dined out and arranged with Mazeroux to have the Place du Palais-Bourbon watched.

Mlle. Levasseur did not leave the house during the afternoon. In the evening Don Luis ordered Mazeroux's men to follow any one who might go out at that time.

At 10 o'clock the sergeant joined Don Luis in Hippolyte Fauville's workroom. Deputy Chief Detective Weber and two plain clothesmen were with him.

Don Luis took Mazeroux aside:

"They distrust me. Own up to it."

"No. As long as M. Desmalions is there, they can do nothing against you. Only, M. Weber maintains—and he is not the only one—that you fake up all these occurrences yourself."

AMERICA MUST MAKE HER OWN BASKETS NOW

Washington, D. C.—War conditions have forced America to depend almost exclusively on her own resources for a supply of baskets, it is revealed in a report of an investigation of the industry made public tonight by the tariff commission.

Importation of cheaper baskets virtually has stopped. Prior to the war Germany was the largest maker of the commodity for the American trade. Then Japan, which had taken up the task after the blockade of the German coast, was compelled to relinquish a large export trade in baskets to this country because of an increase in ocean freight rates from $3 to $30 per ton.

In this country, says the commission's report, scarcity of labor, strikes, increased cost of material and higher wages have resulted in a rise in price of the finished article from 100 to 200 per cent. As a result, many of the large commercial consumers are turning to substitute containers made of papier mache pasteboard and wood veneer.

Willow and rattan basket making in this country is chiefly a household industry. The manufacture of splint, or wood veneer baskets is carried on in factories, and in this line the American manufacturer has no competition from abroad. Liverpool, N. Y., with the sole exception of New York city, turns out more willow baskets than any other place in the country. A pre-war output of between 10,000 and 15,000 dozen annually has been exceeded materially in the last year.

Girls in the car department of the Standard Oil company struck at Bayonne, N. J., because the foreman would not give them 15 minutes in the morning to put on their overalls (trousers). They declared it took that long. The foreman would not believe it. They must have proved their case, for the company gave in.

SAYS HOLLWEG'S MIND HAS A CROOKED TURN

Former German Chancellor Is Flayed for Making Toul-Verdun Demand on France.

London, (by mail).—Concerning ex-Chancellor Hollweg's demand on France for Toul and Verdun as guarantees of neutrality, made at the beginning of the war, the London Times says:

"Herr von Bethmann Hollweg has been giving his explanations of the passage in his telegram of July 31, 1914, which the French foreign minister has lately revealed to an unedified world. It was time. Not only the 'tame' Vorwaerts but the tamer Vossische Zeitung have held up their hands at the naked immorality of the chancellor's secret instructions to the German ambassador in Paris. 'Majority' socialists in the reichstag are ashamed of the policy the disclose, and the under secretary for foreign affairs, Herr von dem Bussche, was reduced to plead in extenuation that, after all, the passage was never communicated to the French, and that therefore it could not have influenced events, and remained a sort of diplomatic 'dud.'

"We are bound in fairness to say that we think the last chancellor but one makes a good defense upon his own principles. Herr von Bethmann Hollweg is the fallen chancellor of occasionlly frank avowals. He is the statesman who described neutrality as 'just a word' and the treaty by which Germany and England guaranteed the neutrality of Belgium as 'just a scrap of paper.' He is the man who proclamed that it was wrong and illegal for Germany to hack her way through that defenzeless little land, but who justified the step because necessity knows no law. It is simply stupid to express surprise at any action in which a man imbued with this doctrine may be detected, provided that he may have thought that it would further his ends.

"Now, when Herr von Bethmann Hollweg instructed Baron von Schon to demand the neutrality of France in the quarrel which Germany had determined to fasten upon Russia, he thought, as he now tells us, that perhaps France might have acceded to the demand, and have then made ready under cover of this sham neutrality to stab Germany in the back when Germany was deeply engaged in the east. That doubtless is the policy which he would have followed, had he been directing the affairs of France and not those of Germany. He judged France by himself. He was as sorely mistaken as when he judged England by the same standard. He was afraid that France would promise neutrality and then treat the promise as 'just a word.' He was afraid that she might begin hacking her way suddenly into Germany on the plea that the step was necessary to her safety and that necessity knows no law.

"'Gentlemen,' said the great Frederick, on the eve of his raid upon Silesia, 'I give you a problem to solve. When a man is at an advantage, ought he to use it or not?' Herr von Bethmann Hollweg, bred in the Frederician tradiction and conscious of its corroding influence upon his own conception of truthfulness and honor, may naturally have suspected that the French might do as he would have done. If he held this view, it was merely common prudence upon his part to take his precautions. That, he explains, is why he instructed the ambassador to require the delivery of Toul and Verdun as material guarantees. Germany, Baron von Schon was to say, would hand them back when she had finished with France's ally, Russia.

"The ex-chancellor's defense is in strict accordance with his doctrine. The 'painful stupe faction' which Germans who accept his principles profess to feel at M. Pichon's disclosure is illogical and out of place. It is not even incredible that Herr von Bethmann Hollweg may be sincere when he goes on to affirm that he had on intention whatever of attacking France's honor. He may be insensible to the infamy of his proposals—as he was insensible to the infamy of his suggestion to us. He is maladroit enough to remind the world that he offered not to attack France if we would guarantee the unconditional neutrality of that country in the war between Germany and Russia. Apparently Herr von Bethmann Hollweg does not even yet see that acceptance of this offer would have been degrading and humiliating both to our French friends and to ourselves. There is, however, another explanation of his conduct, which seems much more probable than the apology we have made out for him on the fundamental principles of realpolitik. It is, in brief, that Germany was absolutely determined to force France into war at once, whatever course she might take, and that the demand for Toul and Verdun was deliberately framed to make hesitation upon her part impossible. The scheme was superfluous. France was pledged to Russia, and she does not treat her pledges as 'just words.'"

Walnut Trees Valuable.

From the Popular Science Monthly.

Walnut, walnut, walnut. That is what your Uncle Sam is looking for just at present. What does he want it for? Why gunstocks. Walnut is and always has been the wood par excellence for the manufacture of stocks. It is easy to work, will not easily crack, and will not splinter.

In spite of the enormous demand which has always existed, and exists now more than ever, there is any amount of the wood to be got, so long as you are willing to pay the price. The reason for this is that in the timber countries, as they have become more and more settled, the inhabitants have sought to beautify their land and homes, and consequently, lacking the urging of necessity, have absolutely refused to sell their trees at any price. Now, under the spirit of patriotism, people are sacrificing these grand old landmarks to the service of their country, and consequently the government is getting all the walnut it needs.

The boys are getting first class stuff, too. Uncle Sam lays down standards, and when he's laid them down he sticks to them like glue. The consequence is that in this case the stocks are all cut from good wood, properly selected and seasoned, and with the grain running the proper way to guarantee the requisite strength.

The next best wood for gun stock is oak. Oak, however, does not yield so readily to the turning of the lathe. Furthermore, walnut will not crack so readily as oak. Other woods are not desirable.

FIND NEW MAMMOTH CAVE IN CALIFO

Visalia, Cal.—Hidden deep in the recesses of a hitherto practically explored section of the Marble Fork of the Kewah river, almost within a stone's throw of the Black Oak and within eight miles of the famous General Sherman big tree, in Sequoia Forest, is said to lie one of the most wonderful subterranean caverns in the to the mountains of California. The cave was discovered only last week by a party of fishermen exploring the upper reaches of the stream and by men, pioneers of the region, declare the newly discovered Sequoia national park wonder to be the largest of the several big caves in the park.

Enthusiastic accounts of the interior are brought in by the explorers who ventured as far into the recesses as possible without lights. Strangely, they declare, the air does not appears fresh without the usual dank odor emanating from other such caves and this fact, they believe, is due to the stream of pure, snow water that flows through the cave and across the bed of solid marble of varied hues which evidently enters from another opening to the cave beyond.

The accounts recite at least a dozen large rooms within the cavern, of sufficient size for a modern ball room setting, and all covered with a fine white sand. Beautiful stalactites in great number and of every color in one instance, they declare, form a natural arch like canopy not unlike a throne room. The fishermen did not venture further into the cavern than 600 feet as they had no lights. The bones found there indicated that the cave had been the lair of the mountain animals which are in the Sequoia.

Government agents will investigate the new discovery at once, it is said, and a new trail will be built from the forest directly to it, probably within the eight mile distance in half. The improvements said to be in contemplation, if the cave proves as stated, include electric lights and a big dance floor for Giant forest campers throughout the summer season.

The Cyclops Mystery.

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Few mysteries of the sea have been more inexplicable as the loss of the U. S. S. Cyclops. All the West Indian waters have been diligently scoured for some trace of her, but none has been found. Now two passengers on a ship which has just arrived from Rio tell a strange tale that may have some bearing on her fate. One of the passengers on the Cyclops was the American consul general at the Brazilian capital. Two weeks before she was reported as missing an advertisement in a Portuguese appeared in a Rio newspaper stating that mass would be said in a certain church for Mr. Gottschalk, the distinguished North American consul, that time, of course, none of his friends knew he was dead. The pastor of the church denied that any arrangements had been made for a mass. Whence came this ominous hint? What was the purpose of such an announcement? Some one must have had knowledge that the ship had been sunk, or foreknowledge that she would be.

There are two obvious explanations for the appearance of the advertisement. One is that it was a disguised assertion that the Cyclops had been sunk by a German submarine. The other is that it was a message to some German agent or agents engaged in the plot. The difficulty in accepting either is that no trace of the missing vessel has yet been found. She may have been "spurlos versenkt" beyond a doubt; but it seems incredible that the whole ship of the character of the Cyclops should go down in waters so near our own shores without even a wireless call or a piece of wreckage to reveal her fate. Or if there is really a German submarine operating in the Caribbean or somewhere near the Bahamas, it may be one of those with the wide cruising radius which have been built recently. The story from Rio is perplexing, but it is too circumstantial to be wholly disregarded. If the navy does have first help from some genius of constructive fiction the mystery might be solved. In any event, there are likely to be renewed efforts to solve it.

Moving Trucks Toward Front

From the Detroit Free Press.

Running during the night hours and under as near "war zone" conditions as this peaceful section of America can provide, six trains of army trucks destined for service with Pershing's men are pushing forward from Detroit to an allied port. The convoy consists of 252 Packards and the trains are a mile apart.

Except that they use their lights, they are not bothered by sudden gusts of wind or other attentions from Fritz, the companies are proceeding as if in the immediate neighborhood of the front. The soldier drivers, 78 men to a train, make camp by the roadside when dawn greets them, cook their own field ranges carried in the trucks, clamber into the 3-ton carriers for the day's sleep. As soon as "breakfast" is finished in the evening, they swing the big khaki, colored trucks into the road again and hit out toward the setting sun. Besides the equipment of the men, there is a 15-day ration aboard for each man—the trucks carry loads of parts destined for the American expeditionary force.

This is the first night run of a convoy in which the quartermaster's department of the United States army is giving the drivers a foretaste of the work they may be called on to do overseas. The honor of pioneer night drives. Another innovation is that each of these truck companies will have 14 more trucks than those with which it has been making the daylight run.

The spent yeast which collects in breweries and distilleries is put through a process which turns it into the form of buttons, doorbell plates and kimono handles. Formerly this left-over material was considered to be a burdensome waste; now it is utilized to the last bit of it. At it is gathered from the vats the yeast is of a dirty, gray color. The first operation is to wash it and then to work it over until it assumes the form of powder and is then hot pressed into any form. In this stage it is called "ernolith." It can be sawed, scraped, filed, drilled, etched or turned to an edge and polished.

Boys Can Help Win the War

U. S. Working Reserves Gives Opportunity to Serve Country on Farms

By P. G. HOLDEN

THE shortage of farm labor is the greatest we ever have known, and it will likely increase as the war progresses.

But in spite of the labor problem, farm acreage under cultivation must not be decreased; food production must be kept up to the maximum.

We must win this war, and we cannot win it unless we produce every possible pound of foodstuffs. Every acre of land that is busy is working for us; every idle acre strikes a blow at Liberty

But farmers cannot cultivate all their land unless they have sufficient labor. Farm machines will make up for some of the shortage, but not all. Human labor must be recruited from some source.

Uncle Sam Appeals to Boys.

In this great emergency, the government is appealing to the schoolboys of America—to the great army of strong, alert, active, energetic youngsters between the ages of 16 and 21 to enlist in the U. S. Boys' Working Reserve. These young men are filled with the patriotic spirit of the nation. They are under the legal age for conscription in the army, but they want to do all they can to help their older brothers win the war. They cannot fight, but they can help produce food to feed the fighters.

In order to encourage these boys to work on farms this summer and help make up the shortage of labor, the U. S. Boys' Working Reserve has been organized under the direction of the Department of Labor.

By applying to his federal state director, whose name will be furnished by the State Council of Defense, any boy between 16 and 21 can enlist in the Reserve, in the agricultural, industrial or vocational units. Boys are particularly urged to join the agricultural unit that they may be detailed to help out the farmers.

Young Men Are Filled With Patriotic Spirit—They Can Help Produce Food for the Fighters.

Every Boy's Opportunity.

Members of the Reserve are given federal recognition but are not liable to military duty.

This is every boy's opportunity to have a real part in making history. Their services will be as important as those of the boys who are in the army or navy. The work will be hard but honorable, and years hence, when liberty has been forever established throughout the world, they will be proud to show their badges of honor given them by the United States as evidence of their faithful and loyal service in the great struggle.

Every boy should join the Reserve and give his support to his country in this great hour of need. Every farmer should be kind and patient with the boy who is doing his best to help him. Be careful not to work him too long hours. Look carefully after his physical and moral welfare and his health.

Yank Tommies Can't Change.

George T. Bye, in the "Stars and Stripes," France.

Many a Yank foot in well shined British army shoes has fluttered up the steps of the A. E. F. base section these last few days. Keep your eye on the shoes. They go in airily enough considering their displacement. They straddle apart while their occupant gives the doorkeeper his name, age, dimensions of the mole on his knee and his favorite brand of cheese. The feet begin to jiggle about nervously. Then one leans on the other for comfort. When the doorkeeper has given the word they march deferentially into an interior office, and the heels click together while the thrill of a 100 per cent salute goes through the Tommy's whole anatomy.

But remember he's a Yank. His feet are fixed at the polite angle for a few minutes, then snap together for another heel click. When they retrace their steps in the corridor and out to the sidewalk, their speed is somewhat slackened and their manner no longer airy.

Those Yanks in the British army have come to London on leave and have applied at the base section for transfer to the A. E. F. But it can't be done. There's no military advantage in it. The men are among friends whether they are under General Haig or General Pershing. It would mean confusion to move them. No, sorry, but it has been necessary to turn down hundreds.

"They Don't Want Me."

"I had a hunch I would be kissed on both cheeks if I came in to be transferred," a Yank Tommy said today. "I've been waiting five months to come here. And they don't want me. Well, I'll be hanged. Here I was imagining they'd give me a commission because I've been two years in the British army—or at least make me an N. C. O. And they don't want me.

"Well, it really ain't so bad. I can't complain a-tall, a-tall. But I used to get a-thinking in the trenches pretty soon some of the guys from over home will be along down this trench line somewheres, and maybe some of 'em will be from Minneapolis, where I come from. I helped build the motor speedway in Minneapolis. Ever heard of it? No, it's called the Twin City speedway—and what did St. Paul have to do with it? St. Paul's nothing but a suburb of Minneapolis, I'm telling you. See there—that's how you get gassing with a fellow from back home.

"I don't get altogether lonesome with the Tommies. They're damn fine fellows. But they don't know nothing about Minneapolis and its suburbs, like this St. Paul you was mentioning. And I thought it would be a good way to pass the time, chinning with the guys from back home.

Hankering Gets Strong.

"Then when I heard they were at last in the trenches, and I was standing by in our lines at night and thinking that down just a little ways to my right was a whole crew of nothing but Americans, why the hankering to join 'em got stronger and stronger in me. And it would have been pretty swell to be a sergeant over 'em 'cause if they're fighting in British style, I know the system to a T.

"I might mention another little thing and I don't want you to get the idea that I came over here to get rich. You understand that I came over here to fight—to clean up these dirty boches. Well, us Tommies get something like a shilling sixpence a day, all the same as 36 cents American. Well, I figured I could make good use of about four times that amount, because I was making my good $3 a day back home, and I like to buy some things when I want 'em.

"That's right. Smile. Smile your head off. I thought you'd believe I wanted to transfer for a little more change a day. But I didn't—so help me. And I can't, so let's let it drop."

Mongols Like Fast Horses.

From the Manchester Guardian.

Perhaps the prohibition of horse racing would be more deeply resented in Mongolia than in any other country of the world. There it ranks as the favorite pastime of all classes, including the Buddhist clergy, who number fully one-third of the total population. The races are never under 10 miles, and the Mongolian "derby" is a contest over 30 miles of rough steppe. When C. W. Campbell, of the Chinese consular service, traveled through Mongolia in 1902 he witnessed a race meeting which was presided over by the local avatar, most of the competing ponies being owned by lamas. The great races which take place yearly at Urga are held under the direct patronage of the lama pope of Mongolia, who becomes the owner of all the winners. A horse race with a bishop in the judge's box, a public chiefly clerical, no bookmakers or betting and nominal prizes is a phenomenon unlikely to be seen in this country.

In Washing the Car.

Never try to wash the car out in the cold, says the Popular Science Monthly. Take it in where it is moderately warm, then use clear, cold water. The cold water will help to harden the varnish on a new car, thereby preventing abrasion. If you use any soap at all, use only a limited amount, as free acid or alkali tends to soften the finish. Soak caked mud thoroughly with a small stream of water until the mud runs off with the fluid. Don't rub the mud off. If it has frozen to the finish, keep on applying cold water until it runs away. Never use hot water. In drying the car, avoid using a chamois that contains any sand or grit. If polish is necessary, use a good grade, then rub off the surplus.

Never allow a car of fine finish to stand in a barn or stable where animals are kept. The ammonia of the manure will crack and ruin the gloss.

Our Flag in France.

Dawn, and the day, and twilight,
Stars that shimmer and dance,
That is the flag we carry
Over the fields of France.

Red for the rose of England,
White for the lily of France,
Blue for the heaven above them
All in the battle's chance.

Dawn for the hope of mankind,
Day for that hope fulfilled,
Twilight for the peace that's nearing
So we have jointly willed.

Red for the blood of heroes,
White for the faith they held,
Blue for a boundless freedom,
Won by the brave and bold.

Dawn, and the day, and twilight,
Red, and the white, and blue,
God and our men in battle
Will carry the banner through.
—Will Reed Dunroy, formerly of Sioux City, in Chicago Herald.

His Interpretation.

From the Chicago Herald.

The little Irishman was being examined for admission to the army. He seemed all right in every way except one. The doctor said: "You're a little stiff."

Quickly the Irish blood mounted as the applicant replied: "You're a big stiff."

HARSH PUNISHMENT IS NO LONGER RULE

Commandant at Goat Island Naval Training Station Outlines His Treatment.

San Francisco.—Harsh punishment for "incorrigibles" is a thing of the past in the navy. According to Capt. E. H. Durell, commandant at Goat Island, the naval training station in San Francisco bay, punishment will not help any condition which kindness cannot cure. Hundreds of fine, upstanding young Americans are turned out here every few weeks to man the ships of the United States navy.

Captain Durell takes keen interest in the boys rated as "incorrigibles" and turns many of them out to be first class fighting men.

The question of morale is always uppermost. After inspection on Saturdays the men are lined up in a great square with the band standing a little to one side. A song master takes his place in the square and leads the men in popular melodies, with the band playing a subdued accompaniment. This tends to keep the boys in good spirits at all times.

Hard work is always accompanied by music. If the men are heaving coal or engaged in other trying labor the band is close by, playing constantly. "It makes them work twice as hard and twice as effectively," Captain Durell said.

In addition the life of the island is so conducted that every just complaint is traced to its source and corrected. Justice is meted out by the small group of officers on the island and actual cases of wrong doing are few and far between.

During the detention process the man is selected for the school in which he is best fitted. If he has had experience as a seaman he is given a chance in the yeoman's school. In addition there are wireless, cooks and bakers and diverse other schools, and a hospital corps that has grown to be one of the biggest and most important adjuncts on the island. This corps has its own quarters on the top of the island, its tents being placed under straight rows of trees that afford protection both in winter and summer. There is a station hospital and three big isolated wards for the treatment of contagious and infectious diseases. The hospital plant includes a fully equipped laboratory, drug and store rooms, operating rooms, dental offices and rooms for the treatment of eye, ear, nose and throat diseases.

The operating rooms open up to the corps quarters on the floor above, permitting the corps members to look down directly on the tables and get an insight view of all operations.

In front of a semi-circular trench containing a first aid dugout has been constructed for the hospital corps near its regular parade grounds. This trench is an exact reproduction of the trenches in Flanders, and in it the men are given the identical first aid work that they expect to be given abroad.

Goat Island is one of the five major training stations in the United States. Only its geographical limitations prevent it from being one of the biggest of the lot. Every available inch of land on the island is being utilized for the purposes of the big school. Because of these limitations overflow schools have been established at Mare Island, Cal., and San Diego, Cal., under separate jurisdictions.

The drills on the island consist of calisthenics, the usual navy manual of arms and instruction in the use of machine guns and the small artillery used by landing parties. The island now accommodates approximately six times the number of men it was first intended to serve, but Captain Durell has found room for all of them and is sending them out efficiently trained at the end of a four months' course.

At the end of the training period the men are placed on board ships or are sent to the four corners of the nation on land duty.

Chicago Tribune Approves Baker.

From the Chicago Tribune.

The objections of Secretary Baker to the extension of the draft age upward to include all men under 31 years of age are founded on common sense and military opinion. The reasoning is obvious, or ought to be, and congress is not improving a credit somewhat moth eaten in spots by fathering the proposal. It ought to be clear that the older the levies we draw the poorer the soldiers we shall get and the greater the disorganization of the industrial and social organization at home. The belligerents have been forced to call upon their man power up to 50 and 55, but that was necessity, not policy, and there is no such necessity in America yet. We may have to call out men in middle life, but that will mean our man power is being drained and we are compelled to resort to military material of second grade.

If there is any extension of the draft period it should be downward, and we trust Secretary Baker will not commit himself against this.

Warning to Authors.

From the Boston Transcript.

One of Mr. Kipling's trees was injured by a bus, the driver of which was also landlord of an inn. Kipling wrote this man a letter of complaint, which the recipient sold to one of his guests for 10 shillings. Again the angry author wrote, this time a more violent letter, which immediately fetched £1.

A few days later Kipling called on the landlord and demanded to know why he had received no answer to his letters.

"Why, I was hoping you would send me a fresh one every day," was the cool reply, "they pay a great deal better than bus driving."

The Independent Boatswain.

From Everybody's Magazine.

A recent retired admiral of the British navy tells with great amusement a story of his visit to an old boatswain of the flag ship, who had fallen heir to a little money, and had retired. The admiral found him possessed of an apparently useless man servant and asked what he could possibly be there for.

"Every morning," explained the old sailor, "'e comes to me 'ammock and tells me to roll hout. 'The hadmiral wants to see you,' 'e says to me. Hand hi says to 'im, 'Tell the hadmiral to go to 'ell,' says hi."

Green and Mistrustful.

From the Dallas News.

Thomas W. Lawson said in a Boston lecture:

"The green speculator is apt to be more suspicious and mistrustful than the seasoned one. Green speculators by their actions often remind me of the farmer who went down to the Boston & Maine station, put down a $20 bill and said to the ticket agent:

"'Round trip to Washington, young feller.'

"'Here you are,' said the agent. 'Change at New York.'

"'No yo don't, young feller,' snarled the farmer. 'I'll take my change right here.'"

Don't Be Afraid of Your Meals

Take "Eatonic" and Laugh At Stomach Troubles

H. L. Kramer, the man who originated Cascarets, has discovered a sure, safe, quick-acting relief for bad stomachs. He named it EATONIC for your stomach's sake.

You can eat anything you like now and digest it in comfort, for stomach ease is positively assured if you eat an EATONIC tablet regularly after each meal.

EATONIC acts directly with the food the moment it enters the stomach. It immediately checks any tendency toward too much acid and enables the food to pass from the stomach into the bowel in a sweetened condition, and thus prevents the formation of sour distressing gases that upset digestion and cause a bloated, dull, lumpy feeling that makes your FOOD REPEAT.

EATONIC enables you to eat your fill and laugh at indigestion, dyspepsia, heartburn, "sour stomach" and all the other bugaboos of "the-man-afraid-of-his-stomach."

Kramer says: "EATONIC should be in every home ready for use after every meal. An EATONIC tablet will aid you naturally to easily digest and assimilate—your food can be thoroughly enjoyed without the slightest danger of misery from acid stomach. I strongly advise every one to take EATONIC after meals. To correct bad stomachs and keep them in perfect condition, it is a most wonderful discovery."

If EATONIC fails to give you prompt stomach relief, your money will be refunded; 50c buys a large box at any drug store. Or write to Eatonic Remedy Co., 1018 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, U. S. A.

Quite a number of Klemme people went over to Garner Monday afternoon to hear the talk given by some Canadian soldiers who have recently returned from the trenches. They were there to help boost the County Red Cross Drive.

Klemme is getting to be a regular navy yard. A number of the local fishermen are constructing row boats and will haul them to the lake on a trailer hitched to their cars. We wonder if anybody will try to make them of concrete next.

Millions Saved— Get Your Share

Improved methods of building cars, that build them better and save millions of dollars to the public, is one of the substantial advantages you get in this Overland Model 90.

The time to save money is when you select your car, because afterwards you cannot make it any more economical than it is built to be.

Select this Model 90 and you save money in the first cost and in the maintenance cost. You cannot get complete satisfaction from less advantages than it gives—

And you cannot get as much value in any other car for the low price of this Model 90.

It has a powerful, fuel-saving motor; narrow turning radius; rear cantilever springs; 106-inch wheelbase; 31 x 4 tires, non-skid rear. Auto-Lite starting and lighting and vacuum fuel system.

It is as desirable as it is adequate, comfortable and easy-to-handle.

With it a salesman can double his value; a housewife gains time for Red Cross work, and business and professional men save time and multiply their activities.

It coins time and money for more than 80,000 others. Why not for you?

A Proclamation

To the People of Iowa:

Whereas, our country is engaged in war with foreign powers; and

Whereas, controversy has arisen in parts of this state concerning the use of foreign languages;

Therefore, for the purpose of ending such controversy and to bring about peace, quiet and harmony among our people, attention is directed to the following, and all are requested to govern themselves accordingly.

The official language of the United States and the state of Iowa is the English language. Freedom of speech is guaranteed by federal and state Constitutions, but this is not a guaranty of the right to use a language other than the language of this country—the English language. Both federal and state Constitutions also provide that "no laws shall be made respecting an establishment of religion or prohbiting the free exercise thereof." Each person is guaranteed freedom to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, but this guaranty does not protect him in the use of a foreign language when he can as well express his thought in English, nor entitle the person who cannot speak or understand the English language to employ a foreign language, when to do so tends, in time of national peril, to create discord among neighbors and citizens, or to disturb the peace and quiet of the community.

Every person should appreciate and observe his duty to refrain from all acts or conversation which may excite suspicion or produce strife among the people, but in his relation to the public should so demean himself that every word and act will manifest his loyalty to his country and his solemn purpose to aid in achieving victory for our army and navy and the permanent peace of the world.

If there must be disagreement, let [illegible] be made by those in official authority rather than by the participants in the disagreement. Voluntary or self-constituted committees or associations undertaking the settlement of such disputes, instead of promoting peace and harmony, are a menace to society and a fruitful cause of violence. The great aim and object of all should be unity of purpose and a solidarity of all the people under the flag for victory. This much we owe to ourselves, to posterity, to our country and to the world.

Therefore, the following rules should obtain in Iowa during the war:

First. English should and must be the only medium of instruction in public, private, denominational or other similar schools.

Second. Conversation in public places, on trains and over the telephone should be in the English language.

Third. All public addresses should be in the English language.

Fourth. Let those who cannot speak or understand the English language conduct their religious worship in their homes.

This course carried out in the venient to some, will not interfere with their guaranteed constitutional rights and will result in peace and tranquility at home and greatly strengthen the country in battle. The blessings of the United States are so great tha any inconvenience or sacrifice should willingly be made for heir perpetuity.

Therefore, by virtue of authority in me cested, I, W. L. Harding, Governor of the State of Iowa, commend the spirit of tolerance and urge that henceforward the within outlined rules be adhered to by all, that petty differences be avoided and forgotten, and that, united as one people with one purpose and one language, we fight shoulder to shoulder for the good of mankind.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Iowa.

Done at Des Moines, this twenty-third day of May, 1918.

Naser For Treasurer

Layman Naser is a candidate for the office of Treasurer of Hancock county. He has hoped to see all the voters of this community but finds that it is impossible and so appeals to the voters through the columns of the press. Naser has made a very good record on the Board of Supervisors, has been fair and given all a good square deal and if elected to the office as Treasurer promises to do the same. Mr. Naser does not believe in the third term. He strongly believes and also calls the attention of the voters to the unwriten rule that county offices should be for not more than two terms and then give some other man a chance as has been done in the past. Vote for Naser for Treasurer.

Vote for Layman Naser for County Treasurer.

Jacobs For Auditor

Chris Jacobs, of Garner, was in Klemme Tuesday for a visit with the voters. Mr. Jacobs is making a good strong campaign for County Auditor and it looks very facorable for his nomination at the June 3rd primaries. Men in other localities also say that Jacobs will win out. Wherever he goes he makes a good impression as he is a fine jolly fellow to meet and always has a good word for everybody whether he is campaigning or out on other business. Mr. Jacobs appeals to the voters to be at the polls and cast their votes. Don't stay at home just because you think your man will get the nomination, be there and help him with your vote.

Red Cross News

The surgical class have finished their quota of 400 compresses.

The purchasing committee met at Mrs. L. Lewis' home and a large order was made out for material to be used in the Red Cross rooms.

The number of members is increasing and so are the garments.

There will be a fine shipment of surgical, knit and sewed garments to ship to our chapter this month.

The knitting class was entertained at the home of Mrs. C. F. Kerans. Some 30 members turned out with their work. A most enjoyable p. m. was spent and much work was accomplished. Mrs. Kerans had a big surprise for us as she served a most delightful lunch. Music was played by her Pathe which put the patriotic spirit in each one present, and Oh! how the needles flew.

Red Cross received $15 donation from German Center School. Miss Toy donated half of the proceeds of an entertainment sometime in winter given by her school and not using the remaining $15 for the school at the finish of her term, generously gave it to our branch.

New Members—Mr. and Mrs. Joe Starns, Mr. and Mrs. F. J. Wenck, Ed. G. Ell, Geneva Leona Wilkins, Leo Wilkins, Paul Goll, Alvin Goll, Arthur Schlaun, Hod Lawhorn.

ENGLISH M. E. CHURCH

Paul said in Thes. 5:22, "Abstain from all appearance of evil." When God launched the earth he placed upon it a man, and in front of him he planted a tree the fruit of which would produce evil, and destruction to man. But between the tree and the man God hung us the danger signal by saying, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt die." The man ate, and God's words came true. God might have removed the tree or never put it there in the first place, but he did not. There have been wicked men and evil institutions in the world ever since the world began. Thousands of good people have worked, are working and will work to get rid of these evils. Many have been put out of existence, many more will be banished, but many will continue in their hellish business as long as the world stands. Therefore knowing that some forbidden trees will continue to stand, and the good people who love God, and hate all forms of sin will not be able to get rid of all of the hell holes of earth, it next becomes the duty of every Christian to obey Paul's exhortation; "Abstain from all appearance of evil" Not only are Christian people to abstain from all evil, but we are to sound the note of warning loud and clear. As the representatives of the most high God we can not but cry in the words of Isaiah 58:1, "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and shew my people their transgression; and the house of Jacob their sins."

We welcome all to the services of our church where we are striving to live, teach and preach the unadulterated truth of God. If we have a Christ that fails to satisfy every longing of the human heart, surely He was mistaken when he said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

F. A. Arnold reports that Ell township including Klemme, is way over the top with the Red Cross War Fund, that five hundred dollars was the required quota and that over eight hundred dollars was contributed and that this highly gratifying result is due to the willingness of all the people to help, both in the giving of money and in the work required to make the drive a success.

We can not go along with our soldiers, but we know that the Red Cross goes with them, even to the field of battle, and that in our support of the Red Cross we are helping our soldiers as we would like to help them if we were with them.

HIGH SCHOOL GIVES CLASS PLAY

Last Friday evening the Klemme High School gave their class play in the Idle Hour Theatre to a packed house. They gave two plays, the first being a one-act patriotic play by the girls of the high school, entitled "The Girls Over Here." The theme of the play had to do with Red Cross work and other work by the girls here in America who are doing so much to assist in winning the war.

The second play was a college play, "The New Co-Ed," a four act comedy drama with Miss Waterman as leading lady and Mr. Oscar Schuldt as leading man. Miss Malinda Musfelt took the "lady villian" part, with Mr. Burr Church as leading comedian. The play was well carried out and we would like to go into detail and credit each member who took part. All the actors were good in their part and all deserve comment for their ability to handle the parts.

Mrs. Powell and Miss Gilbert deserve honorable mention for the excellent manner in which they coached the players and for the choosing of the characters in the play.

HAMMILL GAVE FINE TALK

Hammill, of Britt spoke at the Methodist Episcopal church last Sunday evening to a good attendance. His talk was well enjoyed and all expressed that he was a very good orator.

SUPPLIES FROM ARCTIC ZONE

Eskimo Slaughters and Allows to Waste Many Valuable Animals, Declares an Explorer.

It appears that the Eskimo is just as consistent and conscientious in killing animals as his civilized brother of warmer climes is in killing men, observes the Detroit News.

He kills, therefore, in the course of the year, many more animals than he has any use for, but as he has no idea of an export market, he merely throws the carcasses out to the wolves, or lets them sink in the sea.

"The actual amount of meat, fish, fat, oil and leather that could be brought in by the Eskimos is enormous," says Christian Leden, who has been an Arctic explorer for many years. "By utilizing only the seven tribes I visited in my last exploring expedition, we could have 300,000 pounds of caribou meat, 300,000 pounds of caribou fat, 9,000,000 pounds of walrus meat, 12,000,000 pounds of beluga or white whale meat, 1,800,000 pounds of salmon, 13,800,000 pounds of oil from walrus, seal and bulaga, 3,000,000 pounds of walrus leather, 4,000,000 pounds of whale leather, 150,000 pounds of sealskins and 40,000 pounds of walrus and narwhal ivory."

This is obviously no mean addition to the failing supplies of the temperate zone.

Peculiar Form of Dowry.

Leo Ugardi, a Naples hairdresser, married his sweetheart subject to an undertaking on the part of her father to spend $60 for tonsorial attentions within two years of the wedding in lieu of dowry, failing which the wife is to be returned to her parents.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

The electric ray is a species of fish found on the Pacific coast. It is known from central California southward to the Santa Barbara channel and is very common in Monterey bay. This fish is provided with an electric organ composed of hexagonal cells, reaching from the skin of the upper surface to that of the lower, and situated at each side of the head and gill chambers. The electricity discharged from this ray has the properties of other electricity, such as rendering an iron bar magnetic, decomposing chemicals and producing a spark, says the American Angler. Stories vary as to the volume of the discharge, but even a small ray is capable of inflicting considerable pain. After a few discharges the fish becomes exhausted and must rest before its electric organs are again functional.

In Burma thitsi is used as a varnish for woodwork, to render cloth or paper waterproof, as in the manufacture of Burmese umbrellas, and to cover articles of wood or basket ware for domestic or religious use. Several kinds of Burmese lacquer ware are produced with thitsi, such as the lacquered basketwork of Pagan, the Prome gold-lacquered war, the molded lacquer ware of Mandalay, and the Manipur varnished ware. Thitsi is also the cement used in making Burmese glass mosaics. It has been suggested that, with the artistic ability of the Burmans and a raw material at hand which has proved equal to that used by the Japanese craftsmen, a much larger lacquer industry might be developed in Burma than now exists.

How great have been the demands upon the British merchant marine for the reservation of ships for purely military purposes is shown by the statistics of the first two and a quarter years of the war During that time 8,000,000 men were transported across the seas and over 1,000,000 sick and wounded. Of supplies and explosives 9,420,000 tons were carried, besides 1,000,000 horses and mules, and 47,500,000 gallons of petrol. If the channel tunnel had been built in the days before the war, a vast amount of merchant tonnage, now employed on transport service, would have been available for the world's commercial service.

Baron Eiichi Shibusawa, Japan's foremost financier and business man, now retired, is said to be showing his practical devotion to Japan's welfare by delivering a series of talks on ethics, especially on commercial morality, before the Tokio commercial schools He said recently "From my business experience of 50 years, I have learned that morality and economics can be harmonized I feel it my duty to inculcate this principle in the minds of young commercial students"

MATRIMONIAL AFFAIRS ARE MORE TANGLED

Orange City, Ia., May 25.—Will Moir, whose wife two years ago was awarded $18,000 in a suit against her father-in-law, George E Moir, for alleged alienation of affections, was granted a divorce in the Sioux county district court on the round of adultery.

It is expected the granting of the divorce will have an important bearing on the final outcome of the alienation suit, which was appealed to the state supreme court, and has been remanded for a new trial because of errors.

The alienation suit attracted wide attention in Sioux county because of the prominence of Mr Moir, who is a wealthy farmer residing southwest of Orange City. Will Moir has been living at Maurice.

MOTHER OF FIVE CHILDREN GUILTY OF LARCENY

Waterloo, Ia., May 23.—Mrs William Ong, 34 years old, the mother of five children, the youngest 2 years old and the oldest 16, pleaded guilty in district court to a charge of grand larceny

The defendant sobbed audibly when Judge C. W. Mullan asked if she had any reason to give why sentence should not be pronounced

"Your honor," she said, "I don't believe I can bear being separated from my children." Then she gave the names and ages of the children

Mrs. Ong admitted taking more than $100 worth of women's wearing apparel from two dry goods stores Officers say she carried a large handbag and, while inspecting the goods, slipped silk skirts, waists and other apparel into it

Judge Mullan entered the plea, but announced he would withhold sentence until a further investigation can be made. Mrs. Ong was paroled to Mrs. Myrtle Barr, police matron.

All the stolen articles will be returned to the stores, Mrs. Ong told the officers. Her husband, who accompanied her into court, is a baker by trade.

DES MOINES—Fuel Commissioner Charles Webster is advocating that employers finance their employes, if necessary, in laying in their stock of coal Many men do not find it an easy matter to advance $75 to $100 at this time of the year for their winter's supply of coal, but if their employers would advance the money for them it would be a big help all around, he urges.

CORRECTIONVILLE BOY BITTEN BY MAD DOG

Examination of Beast's Brain Discloses Fact It Was Affected By Rabies.

Correctionville, Ia., May 24.—The son of Mr and Mrs. W. H. Gaber, a boy about 10 years of age, was bitten by a dog several days ago. The dog was killed and its head sent to the State University laboratory for examination. Dr. Albers of the bacteriological department made the examination, and wired that the dog had rabies. Mr. Garber took his son at once to Iowa City for treatment. After thorough examination it was found the boy could be treated at home and he was able to return with his father.

STORIES OF MILITARY MOVEMENTS NOT WRITTEN

Council Bluffs, Ia., May 24.—Except at the large concentration points, the voluntary newspaper censorship of war activities requires no greater self restraint upon the part of newspaper men than is the case in this city. Here eight transcontinental railroad lines cross the Missouri river with their passenger and freight trains, and thousands of trains converge here every month Railroad reporters and newspaper men generally, who have occasion to visit the railroad yards and stations view daily scenes of activity good for many a story that is never written, and what this means to these writers is best appreciated by the trained newspaper men

Recently five trainloads of soldiers were brought into Council Bluffs from the west by the Union Pacific railroad. All passed through the transfer yards within one hour and were turned over to the Chicago Great Western railroad, whose crews took them, with scarcely 10 minutes delay, eastward

More recently one of the railroad headquarters here received an order for the concentration at a certain well known camp of 250 cars with an imperative condition that the cars be at the camp within 10 days from the receipt of the order There is only one class of army equipment that is carried on flat cars

For many days trainload after trainload of lumber from the Pacific coast has passed through Council Bluffs eastward bound. The lumber is of all sizes and dimensions, but large timbers used in shipbuilding have made up most of the shipments Other shipments of large and small size and of varied character show to what extent the government is monopolizing the railroad traffic of the nation and indications to those in a position to see gives a close insight to the magnitude of the task of the war department and other governmental agencies

PRIMGHAR PEOPLE ARE PUSHING RED CROSS FUND

Primghar, Ia., May 2.—The Red Cross campaign here is being carried on by the system adopted for the flotation of the third Liberty loan and the war savings stamp campaign. Each property owner is asked to contribute his share in the proportion of ½ mill to the dollar of property valuation and this fund will be divided between the needs of the local chapter in its war work and the national war fund. Notices have been sent out with the request that each recipient leave his check or promise to pay at the office of the secretary of the local chapter some time during the week. Already many have responded, in many cases going beyond the amount requested as a fair average for all, thus helping to care for possible shrinkage and assuring some surplus over the allotment. The campaign was given a good start at a community meeting on Sunday evening, at which C. D. Jory, of Sheldon, gave the principal address. The churches united for the purpose at the time of evening services.

IOWA SOLDIERS MAY VOTE BY MAIL ROUTE

Des Moines, Ia., May 2.—An Iowa soldier who wants to vote at the primary election to be held June 3 may do so by writing the auditor of his home county for a blank ballot, filling it out and returning it to the auditor.

This, briefly, is the election law relative to absentees in Iowa. It also holds good with reference to voters so disabled as to be unable to go to the polls. The auditor of the county where he has his residence must upon request furnish the disabled man with a ballot and arrange for its being properly cast on election day. When the election is over, all such ballots in the hands of the county auditor are counted with the rest of the votes cast in that voting district

Many questions pertaining to methods of procedure in connection with the pending election are being put to W S. Allen, secretary of state, these days.

There are only two political parties in Iowa whose candidates will appear in every section of the state, the republican and democratic, these being the only ones that cast 2 per cent or more of the total vote for governor at the last general election. This is the basis on which this percentage is figured.

Provision is made by law for the placing of names of candidates of other political parties in divisions of the state where these parties showed a 2 per cent vote at the last election. The division that may have ballots printed to meet such special demands are counties, senatorial and judicial districts and congressional districts.

The socialist party will get on the ballot in Polk county with a candidate for congress. In Scott county a socialist candidate is out for the house of representatives in the state legislature. In Wapello county there are two socialist candidates, one for the state senate and one for the house. These are the only places in the state where the socialist party will appear on the ballot.

RELATIVE OF IOWA MAN DESERTER FROM GERMAN ARMY

Atlantic, Ia., May 2.—Through Nickoli Peterson, of Exira, deserter from the German army, H. S. Rattenborg, of Atlantic, has learned that a nephew, who served with Peterson under the German colors, had also deserted and was somewhere in America. Another nephew of Rattenborg's captured by the British at the battle of the Marne, according to Petersen was saved from execution by the Germans for treason when the British refused to exchange him at the request of the Germans. Rattenborg had written to his people in Schleswig-Holstein from the British prison camp strongly criticising the German method of warfare.

HUNS DISAGREE, ON DRIVE PLAN

200 AIRPLANES DOWNED

Terrific Air Fighting Begins to Tell on Boches Whose Machines Are Said to Be Poorly Constructed.

BY WM. PHILIP SIMMS.
United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the British Armies in France, May 24. — (night) — The Germans themselves disagree as to the time and place of resumption of their offensive.

Some enemy prisoners say the next assault will be in the north, with Calais as the objective, some say Amiens and Abbeville will remain the objectives, while others say the Rheims area will the scene of these. The one thing that most of them agree on is that Field Marshal Mackensen will be in charge of the next move.

Deceive Recruits.

Stories are told of German ruses to keep up the morale in the interior, from where most of the recruits now are being drained. Most of these recruits are told they are wanted only for work behind the lines. But the drafts no sooner reach the battlefield than they are split up among the divisions needing men to place casualties.

The broiling sun early today hid its face over the battlefields. Heavy clouds threatened rain, but the wind, blowing a half gale drove them off by mid-day, leaving the lines smothered in sunshine, but much cooler.

For the first time since May 13 the air was completely free of war planes.

Down Scores of Planes.

During the week of May 14-21 inclusive, the British alone sent crashing out of the sunlit skies nearly 200 German airplanes, while bombing machines dropped about 240 tons of high explosives behind the enemy lines. Of the machines mentioned more than 150 were actually seen to crash by others than the airmen who did the job. Five were brought down by "archies" and about 30 dashed out of the heavens out of control.

I continued to hear stories about German planes breaking up in midair. In one battle this week three were plainly seen to go to pieces when fired into at close quarters. This was when a British formation, returning from a bombing raid, was attacked by 20 enemy scouts. One of these dived on a British two-seater. The British machine gunner fired one drum into it, when it careened, caught fire and dropped. After falling about 2,000 feet, it broke into several pieces.

Another German scout when given two short bursts by a second British gunner at close range, dived, then its planes folded back. The two planes and the fuselago fell to the ground in three widely separated places.

A third scout, attacking another British bombing plane, received two volleys and fell in pieces.

Allied airmen say these occurences are becoming constantly more frequent. German pilots place the blame on faulty material, hasty construction and bad workmanship.

NOW FACE BAVARIANS.

With the American Army in France, Thursday, May 23.—German troops which faced the Americans along the Toul sector for several weeks, have been withdrawn and sent to the battle area of northern France. They have been replaced by the eighth Bavarian reserves.

MANY LOCAL RAIDS.

London, May 25. — Bombardment of various British sectors and continued raiding operations were reported by Field Marshal Haig today.

"Hostile artillery was active last night west of Lens and in the neighborhood of Festubert," the statement said. "The Nieppe forest sector was bombarded by gas shells.

"We took a few prisoners in a successful raid southwest of La Bassee and in a patrol encounter north of the Ypres-Comines canal."

"A few men are missing as the result of an enemy raid north of Hill 70 yesterday.

'An attempted enemy raid early last night failed in Aveluy wood."

U. S. FRONT QUIET.

With the American Army in France, May 25.—"The day has been quiet on all points occupied by our troops," says the official statement issued tonight from American headquarters.

SOME LOCAL CLASHES.

Vienna (via London), May 25. — "Reciprocal reconnoitering activity yesterday again led to engagements at several points," says the official statement on operations on the Italian front issued from Austro-Hungarian general headquarters today.

BOMB AUSTRIAN BASE.

Rome, May 25 —A British air squadron successfully bombed the Austrian submarine and seaplane base at Cattaro yesterday, setting fire to the piers and barracks, it was officially announced today.

FRENCH MAKE RAIDS.

Paris, May 25.—French troops last night carried out raids along several parts of the front, notably southeast of Coucy on the Aisne front, in the Champagne and in the Vosges, in which prisoners were taken, today's war office report states. German raids attempted to the west of Noyon on the main battle front and southeast of Mesnil-St. Georges were failures.

There was intermittent shelling at several points on the front.

LUFBERRY'S BOOK SAID TO BE REAL LITERATURE

With the American Army in Lorraine, May 23.—Major Raoul Lufberry left his life story two-thirds written, it was learned today. His comrades say it was one of the most thrilling books of the war.

Lufberry was writing the book in French and Capt. David Peterson was translating it into English. The American aviators are urging Peterson, who was Lufberry's closest friend, to finish the book immediately. It is not only literature, but it is believed it would be vital in stirring up America.

Women Rush to Grab Jobs; Chicago Clubs Will Bar Bar Maids

Chicago, May 25.—A rush of women to employment agencies and a reserve of 10,000 men over draft age was relied on today to hold intact Chicago's business machinery under the idler draft order. It is believed 100,000 men are affected here.

Saloons employing 10,000 bartenders were hardest hit. Women's organizations have asserted there'll be no apple-cheeked bar maids in future American literature, so far as Chicago is concerned.

Stores, clubs and theaters are already training women to replace male help.

RUMANIA FITS INTO GERMANY'S SCHEMES

Trade Concessions Equivalent to Indemnity—Will Dominate Nation's Future.

London, May 25. — Economic advantages which Germany has obtained in the peace treaty with Rumania are equivalent to an indemnity from that nation, in the opinion of German experts, Dr. von Kuehlmann, the German foreign secretary, told the Berlin chamber of commerce in discussing the Rumanian treaty before that body, the German wireless report of the address shows.

Germany's control of the coming Rumanian harvests caused the food question to be looked forward to "with a certain amount of confidence," Dr. von Kuehlmann declared.

German trade privileges also were most important and these include the lease to a German company for 99 years of the Bucharest-Czernavoda-Constanza railway line, thus giving ready access to the petroleum fields and grain centers.

Referring to the geographical situation, which eliminated the question of territorial acquisitions, Dr. von Kuehlmann said, therefore it was "all the more necessary to obtain economic advantages up to a limit consistent with the maintenance of Rumania's capacity of production."

Two points, he indicated, "must be taken into consideration. First, guaranteeing Rumanian agricultural and petroleum production as urgently necessary for the carrying on of the war by the central powers, and for the transition period; and, secondly, the important role which Rumania has to fill in providing a thoroughfare to the east, especially as she dominates the lower course of the Danube."

SENATE WOULD LIMIT SIZE OF U. S. ARMY

Report Bill for 3,000,000 Men —House Would Give Wilson Full Power.

Washington, D. C., May 25. — The Senate military committee today unanimously went on record in favor of large expansion of the American army. It ordered a favorable report on a resolution by Senator Reed, of Missouri, declaring for an increase of 3,000,000 men.

By the resolution "the president is authorized in his discretion and at such time as he may determine to raise and begin the training of an additional force of 3,000,000 men," who are "to be called for training at such times and in such manners as the president may direct."

Senator Reed announced that he would probably report the bill to the Senate next Monday and endeavor to have it considered at an early date.

The House military committee already has added to the army bill an administration provision giving unlimited authority to the president to raise an army of whatever size is needed.

DEWEESE SHOT TO DEATH FOR MURDER

In Last Words Slayer Urges Marksmen Make Sure of Their Aim.

Salt Lake City, Utah, May 25.—Howard H. Deweese, convicted of the murder of his wife, Fannie Fisher Deweese, was executed in the state prison yard here this morning at 6:55 o'clock. He walked calmly to the chair and permitted himself to be strapped securely by the sheriff's deputies, insisting that the marksmen comprising the firing squad make certain of their aim. Death was almost instantaneous.

Deweese protested his innocence up to the end. His last words were:

"I am not guilty. That's all I have to say. Let her go, boys."

The murdered woman was a former wife of Henry W. Fisher, a New York haberdasher. She eloped with Deweese to Reno, where she secured a divorce and then married Deweese. Her murderer was the son of Dal Deweese, wealthy orchardist, of Canon City, Colo., and well known hunter for the Smithsonian Institute.

"WORK OR FIGHT" LAW WILL HIT "WOBBLIES"

Government Expects to Break Up I. W. W. Organization With New Rule.

Washington, D. C., May 25.—The full force of Provost Marshal General Crowder's draft order of "work or fight," will be used against the I. W. W. and kindred organizations, officials of the board declared today.

The powers conferred on local boards under the regulations will deal a knockout to the activities of the I. W. W. officials believe.

It will be practically impossible under the new resolutions for a repetition of the situation in many parts of the country last year when harvesting was delayed because thousands of I. W. W. refused to work.

To become an "ace" in military air service a pilot must bring down at least five enemy planes.

FEELS CERTAIN OF FUTURE NOW

British Statesman Says Ships Are Being Built Faster Than Huns Sink Them and U-Boat Losses Grow.

HE PLEADS FOR UNITY

Urges That Politics Be Dropped Until Those In Power Finish the Huns—Praises Strategy of Foch.

Edinburgh, May 25.—"The next few weeks will be a race between Hindenburg and Wilson," Premier Lloyd George declared in a speech here today.

"The Germans are straining every muscle to reach their goal before America's help is available.

"This is no time to organize campaigns to harass the men who are in charge of the destinies of nations. There ought to be a truce in such campaigns, at least, until the offensive is over.

"I can honestly say that the British government has neglected no possible means of ascertaining whether there is any honorable outlet from the war.

"We are dealing with ruthless Prussian despotism, which is out for plunder and pillage. Their latest treaties restrain, virtually as little today as they did when Belgium was invaded."

Submarine No Peril Now.

"The submarine is still a menace, but is no longer a peril; it is still formidable for inflicting injury, but it cannot cause the winning or losing of the war."

Premier Lloyd George this summed up the submarine situation today in a speech at the city hall, accepting the freedom of the city.

The premier declared that the allies are building ships faster than the submarines can sink them, and at the same time, the allied navies are sinking submarines faster than Germany can build them. He said that an admiralty report showed that during April a record in destruction of submarines was established, while in the same month the output of shipping exceeded losses for the first time since unrestricted submarine warfare began.

Lloyd George said that America's entrance into the war has not yet equalized Russia's collapse. America's accession, he said, has given the allies only about a fifth of the number of men that Germany was able to add to her armies through withdrawals from the eastern front.

Confident of Future.

"But on the eve of the great German attack, those best acquainted with the prospects are the most confident of the result," he declared.

"General Foch is one of the most brilliant strategists of the age. He is a man of dynamic energy and profound knowledge and experience, commanding the respect, admiration, confidence and affection of all allied soldiers."

"We tried repeatedly to achieve unity of command. It is now accomplished. It is really incredible that we were compelled to fight months, every inch of the way, for this unity, which has added mightily to our fighting strength."

"The Russian collapse and the submarine warfare are special adversities with which the government has been compelled to cope since it took office," Premier Lloyd George declared in a speech here today.

"The submarine warfare was unprecedented and unexpected even from Germany. The history of piracy contains no parallel."

"In 1916 we doubled the production of ships. In 1918, we hope to treble or quadruple it."

The premier paid tribute to the skill, ingenuity, resourcefulness and "invincible valor" of the naval and merchant sailors, who have overcome the submarine difficulties.

"I have just received an admiralty report that the anti-submarine warfare is 'going satisfactorily.' Since January 1, the naval staff is confident, the allied navies have been sinking more than the enemy has been able to build."

Lloyd George said the allied sailors had pursued submarines relentlessly, day and night, until the "pest has at last been conquered." They have also harried the submarines' nests, he said, of which two—Ostend and Zeebrugge—had been blocked.

April Record Month.

The premier's declaration that an admiralty report shows a record destruction of submarines during April was greeted with cheers.

"In April there was the highest output of shipping since the submarine warfare was begun," the premier said.

"For the first time, production exceeded losses. That's not a bad record for a government whose faults have been so freely advertised.

"The allies are now building ships faster than the enemy can sink them, the premier declared.

"The Germans recognize the failure of their submarine warfare and are therefore conducting an offensive on the west front. They were driven into that as a last resort to secure victory.

Speaking at a luncheon Mr. Lloyd George said there was no doubt that there had been a conspiracy for a great rising in Ireland. He stated that he had seen the evidence. The leaders of the Nationalist party, he added, had nothing to with it.

MEANING NOT CLEAR.

Washington, D. C., May 24.—Premier Lloyd George's statements that the United States had thus far been able to counterbalance less than one-fifth of the fighting strength the Germans gained for west front operations through the collapse of Russia, left officials here somewhat puzzled as to the figures upon which it was based.

In view of the fact that Secretary Baker formally announced some time ago that more than 500,000 American troops were in Europe, it was pointed out that the British premier's statement would indicate that between 2,500,000 and 3,000,000 German troops had been released from the eastern front and were being employed in the west. Army officers here say it has never been reported that the German fighting units in the east totaled any such figures.

To inform the women of the neighborhood of the approach of the hour for worship is one of the objects of a vigilance committee organized in certain Lutheran mission stations in India, a land where clocks are few. Another object is to see that the women are properly dressed for the service.

Newton D. Baker on the War.

From an Address Delivered Before the Southern Society, New York.

"And so all wars which have been waged for the prestige of kings or the territorial extension of empires fall in their analogy. There is a quality in this war which evokes a spiritual response and that will be a new kind of cement for the making of a stronger and more triumphant people when it is over.

"We are not fighting this battle alone. I am not even ambitious that the glory of the final conquest should come to us alone. I would far rather have the triumph of democracy the reward of the associated effort of democratic peoples everywhere, so that when the war is over neither we nor they can have any monopoly of that virtue, but will be partners in its glory, and so associates in the future progress which is to be made.

"For we must never forget, when we speak of democracy, that it is not an accomplishment, it is not a thing that has been done, but it is a progress, it is a system of growth, and though today we might achieve what our limited vision proclaims to us as the democratic ideal its quality is such that when we stand on what now seems to us the highest peak of that range, there will be greater heights to tempt and inspire us.

"And so, when this war is over, and the crude medievalism which at last brings the Hohenzollerns and the Hapsburgs to confront their fate in the young giant of the democratic spirit, when this contest is over and the David of democracy has dealt with the Goliath of medievalism and autocracy, there will still be work for David to do worthy of his best efforts, and in the accomplishment of it large benefits to the race still remain to be achieved. * * *

"It is a wonderful story, the alignment of the nations which can truly be called civilized, against the ancient medievalism which survives in the heart of Europe. The hope of mankind, so often frustrated, apparently is now to be accomplished. It could not be done in Napoleon's time, in spite of the French revolution, and its philosophy and its promise because of what Danton called 'The Allied Kings of Europe.' It could not be done in 1849 because of the Metternichs and the Bismarcks. It could not be done in 1870 because they were still triumphant, but out of the west, out of this youngest and latest and most hopeful of the nations of the earth, out of this young giant, fashioned out of all the people, who originate in a new philosophy, little rivulets of it have [illegible] to other peoples in other parts of the world.

"And now, in the fullness of time, this giant is full grown, and she joins hands with other peoples, who, though older, are yet the children of her spirit, and we are partners now with great nations who have borne for [illegible] years literally the brunt of this struggle, and at the end of it out of the noise of battle and smoke of the battlefield, there arises the picture of a new fraternity of mankind the sons and daughters of civilization joining hands to protect the sacred principles upon which the freedom of mankind rests. * * *

"The American people have sent through all their preparations for this war an influence of idealism and morality which is a new thing in the world. About our training camps new conditions have arisen. All sorts of modern, advanced notions with regard to the amusement and entertainment and recreation of young men, in order that they may be virile strong, and high minded, have been adopted, not because of any particular wisdom in any place, but because of the unanimous judgment and demand of the American people, and so when our army goes abroad, it will be a knighly army, not an army of conquest that expects to come home with a chariot and somebody chained to the wheels and loaded up with material spoils, but an army that is going to live and die for the fine fruits of a high idealism and a purified national morality."

Not Signal Corps Claim.

From the Army and Navy Journal

The signal corps never claimed that the Liberty motor was the product of an inspired operation of American genius that in 30 days evolved one of the best motors for certain uses in aircraft. It took the more certain way of obtaining the best engineer available, Vincent, of the Packard company, who for two years had been working in his factory and laboratory to find a suitable airplane motor; and Vincent called in Hall, a very practical man, and the two produced the motor. It now may be said to work satisfactorily for heavy planes, where power is needed, and on low compression; but the high compression motor is not perfected, and the one now being manufactured is not adapted for high altitude flying. Much has been said about delay. It has been disappointing. But the disappointment may have come from the indiscreet promises, not to call them silly, based probably on a failure to realize the possible delays in production that might be due to several causes. Among these are the inherent difficulties of the task, and the many changes due to the factor of constant change in the standard and types of airplane called for by the United States military authorities in France. When this country entered the war it had no industry producing an airplane up to the standard of the day and there were no airplane engineers of considerable experience, a fact due to the newness of the industry and practically no workmen skilled in it could be found. We had no standards, except such as the allies sent, and they changed rapidly. The plans of a warplane involve 3,000 drawings and the allies have not sent a complete set at any time. But relatively production has not been slow. The latest official reports from England are that no nation has produced a motor in less than 12 months, but from the receipt of the first plans to the day of delivery of the first Liberty motors in quantity production a little less than 5 months have elapsed.

French Names.

I'd chant an ode to Joffre, with ardor and delight, but up there speaks a scoffer 'You don't pronounce it right, the name should rhyme with 'suffer,' O poet short and fat, and you're a dippy duffer, or you'd be wise to that.' I raise my voice so mellow, not peeved, nor in a huff, then speaks another fellow, "The French pronounce it 'Juff.' I see there's no use flirtin' with such a shining name until I know for certain how to pronounce the same. And so I start a sonnet about the mighty Foch, whose name has laurels on it—I make it rhyme with "yoke." Then says a posted neighbor, "Your sonnet is a botch, and wasted is your labor—the hero's name is Fotch." I fain would sing of Ypres, and also of Amiens, but will one rhyme with sn'pers, and t'other one with beans' I even balk at Paris, for fear I get it wrong, and such breaks so embarrass the man who trills a song. I'd like to sing of Calais a martial, stirring lay, but then, so help me Alice, I fear it is Calay. Fair France, I'd like to bring you a wreath of deathless song' Oh France I'd like to sing you, but get the language wrong'

Loss in Immigration.

From the Christian Science Monitor

A recent report from the immigration bureau of the United States shows that the number of immigrants has fallen in one year from 1,400,000 to 400,000. The war has evidently, for the time, all but settled the problem of the past as to the best means of providing for the great numbers of incoming aliens. There used to be talk, among philanthropists, about the need of government action for sending the immigrants to the wide spaces and opportunities of the west, and relieving the congestion of the cities of the Atlantic coast. Optimists believe there will be a rush of immigrants after the war: pessimists that the influx has practically come to an end. But the United States immigration bureau might do worse than lay its plans now, during the lull, for the well being of the future citizens from Europe, and also of the republic.

Chris Blumer met with a rather odd, accident Monday afternoon. He was tapping a keg of malt and was driving a tube into the keg, the pressure was rather high in the keg which forced the tube out again with a great deal of speed, striking Mr. Blumer just above the left eye and rendered him unconscious for a few minutes. Chris is now wearing a wad of cotton and a large bump where the pipe struck him but otherwise is in good health.

L. J. DICKINSON, of Kossuth County

TO VOTERS OF THE TENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

L J Dickinson is a candidate for Congress in the Tenth District for the reason that the present incumbent, after serving ten years, is without a commanding record, has not been able to secure the appointment to a single committeeship giving him a prominent position in Congress, or the opportunity to do worth while public service, never having taken a prominent part in a single important debate, and has been and still remains today a nonentity in the greatest legislative body in the world Contrast this with the record left by the late lamented J P Dolliver. Is it not time to do away with the rubber stamp, stereotyped letter variety of Congressman? Is it not time for somebody to show courage, call things by their right names and promote and protect the interests of this district?

TO RELATIVES AND FRIENDS OF THE BOYS IN SERVICE—The present incumbent, who, after serving ten years in Congress, is asking for another term, voted sympathy to the kaiser in the four important war measures—the McLemore resolution, Kahn amendment, Declaration of War and the Spy act (voted no on Spy act thirty days after war was declared), and that on each of these measures he voted in the minority. Retirement of obstructionists in Congress is demanded by such papers as the Boston Transcript, the Chicago Tribune and the Des Moines Daily Capital, whose editor, the Hon. Lafayette Young, is chairman of the State Council of Defense, and such men as Edward Russel, noted lecturer, and Captain Albert Head, veteran and pioneer capitalist of Iowa, and by well known and noted men in every locality in this district. Behind a fighting army we must have a fighting Congress, and as a pinch hitter in war time the present incumbent is a failure Do you want him on your pay roll two years more for the kaiser's benefit?

MR. IOWA FARMER AND STOCK RAISER—Repeated demands are being made upon you to comply with government requirements in your production and the prices fixed thereon when other sections are left unmolested to reap all the profit possible and you are left to suffer the loss of poor transportation facilities, all without a word of protest from your representative in Congress

MR. LABORING MAN—Do you know that the present incumbent voted against most of the important labor laws such as the Eight-hour bill and Immigration bill, etc., and is still asking you to return him to office by your votes?

MR. AMERICAN CITIZEN—Do you know that Kaiser Bill will stay on the throne and rule as long as we will let him, and that the present incumbent will stay in Congress just as long as he can secure your vote by sending you a few meaningless stereotyped letters and sample garden seeds, and that he has traded off the patronage and prestige of this district to maintain himself at the head of the Congressional Committee, which is an organization of congressmen to raise funds to re-elect its members, regardless of the wishes of the people?

The chairmanship of the Congressional Committee never brought the farmer, the laboring man, or the business man in the District a single benefit, and is held for personal gain only.

Is it not time for the spirit of self rule to reassert itself in this district and put aside a non-resident representative with no interests in the district and send a man of your own number and with your own interests? If such is your verdict, go to the polls June 3rd and vote as indicated below, and

WE SHOULD EAT MORE CORN

It Is a Perfect Subetitute for Wheat and Releases Wheat for Our Soldiers.

"We've got the mills and we've got the cooks and we've got the cornmeal, too," should be our version of the old British chorus which ran, "We've got the ships and we've got the men and we've got the money, too."

They had those ships and men and the money to win a war with, if they had to fight. We have those mills and cooks and the cornmeal to win the war against famine that we have to fight. We have a largely-developed taste for cornmeal; England and France have a small one. We have mills to grind the corn; those associated with us in this war have not. Our cooks know how to handle it; Europe's do not. And we have the wheat that Europe does know how to handle, if we release it by eating our own cornmeal.

That being the case, it becomes quite apparent that yellow corn and golden wheat are the twins that rule the heavens of our horoscope, and that will control our fortune for many days to come. Only wheat, being a good sailor and traveler, shall take over the European part of the job, while corn, who is much more domestic by nature, shall stay on the job over here.

This year's corn crop is in excess of 3,101,000,000 bushels, which means about thirty bushels of corn for each inhabitant of the United States. Of wheat, that we have always considered nature's special bounty to this country, this year's crop is 655,707,000 bushels, while the average for 15 years has been 707,866,440 bushels. That means that this year we have nearly five times as much corn as wheat.

Yet, to look at the average American table, one would think that wheat was a dozen times as abundant as corn, at least.

The little 3.6 per cent of our cornmeal that we eat turns, with ease, into such culinary delights as only increase one's wonder at our generosity to the pigs.

BRITAIN'S ARMY NEEDS.

The British armies in France alone each month require 95,000 tons of oats; 4,000,000 gallons of gasoline, 20,000 tons of flour, 10,000,000 pounds of jam, and 75,000 tons of hay. Ponder on these figures, writes Isaac F. Marcosson in the Saturday Evening Post, and you begin to realize that demands are written on ten-league canvases with brushes of comet's hair!

Chas. S. Terwilliger

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of County Auditor, subject to the decision of the Republican voters of the county at the June Primaries.

O. S. Bailey.

An (X) opposite the name of Layman Naser, Republican candidate for the office of County Treasurer of Hancock County, will be greatly appreciated by the many friends and voters of Mr. Naser in the county. Mr. Naser is a man of excellent business ability and very capable of performing the duties of the above office if nominated and elected. He is now serving as a member of the Board of Supervisors of this county, his term expiring in January next. He is well acquainted in all parts of the county and his support will be almost unanimous. He is well thought of and was put on the ticket by people who wished him to be at the head of the County's Treasury. He has a family of six children all of school age and if elected to office will move his family to Garner where all of the children will enter our public schools.

Mr. Naser is a man who believes in two terms and out, and believes in giving the next man a chance.

The present County Treasurer is seeking office for a third time which the poople of Hancock have never been in favor of and have never, only in a very few instances nominated a man for three terms.

If you want a man that is capable, and worthy of office you can make no mistake by voting for Mr. Naser. Give him your hearty support at the June primary election and you will never regret it. Mr. Naser if elected to the office of Treasurer will be the right man in the right place. Remember Naser's opponent is a third termer and if the office is a good one pass a good thing around. As the primaries are drawing near Mr. Naser's nomination looks very bright and you will be voting right if you vote for him. Boost for Naser.—A Voter.

FOR TREASURER

Laman Naser is a candidate for the Republican nomination to the office of County Treasurer of Hancock County at the coming primary to be held June 3rd, 1918,

Mr. Naser had hoped to visit all of the voters but finds this impossiple, and takes this means of calling the voters' attention to his candidacy.

He was appointed County Supervisor in 1915, and elected in 1916, to said office, and now is serving his first term,

He has been fair and given all a square deal in this office as his record shows, and should he be nominated and elected County Treasurer, he will do the same in this office. He is competent and will conduct the office in a capable manner.

He is not a candidate for a third term and beleaves that the rule of two terms and out for County officers should be adhered to as in the past.

THAT CHANGE IN WOMAN'S LIFE

Mrs. Godden Tells How It May be Passed in Safety and Comfort.

Fremont, O.—"I was passing through the critical period of life, being forty-six years of age and had all the symptoms incident to that change—heat flashes, nervousness, and was in a general run down condition, so it was hard for me to do my work. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me as the best remedy for my troubles, which it surely proved to be. I feel better and stronger in every way since taking it, and the annoying symptoms have disappeared."—Mrs. M. GODDEN, 925 Napoleon St., Fremont, Ohio.

Such annoying symptons as heat flashes, nervousnsss, backache, headache, irritability and "the blues," may be speedily overcome and the system restored to normal conditions by this famous root and herb remedy Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If any complications present themselves write the Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for suggestions how to overcome them. The result of forty years experience is at your service and your letter held in strict confidence.

RUINED BY THEIR FREEDOM

Lesson to Be Drawn From the Actions of the Emancipated People of Athens.

On a memorable occasion the assembled Athenians declared it monstrous that they should be prevented from doing whatever they chose. No force that existed could restrain them; and they resolved that no duty should restrain them, and that they would be bound by no laws that were not of their own making. In this way the emancipated people of Athens became a tyrant, and their government, the pioneer of European freedom, stands condemned with a terrible unanimity by all the wisest of the ancients. They ruined their city by attempting to conduct war by debate in the market place. Like the French republic, they put their successful commanders to death. They treated their dependencies with such injustice that they lost their maritime empires. They plundered the rich until the rich conspired with the public enemy, and they crowned their guilt by the martyrdom of Socrates.—Lord Acton's Essays.

"REALLY, NOW—

'I can't take that. I must have Red Cross Ball Blue. I have used it for more than ten years. My white dresses, linens and lace curtains are snowy white. I simply can't do without Red Cross Ball Blue. You will get it? All right, I'll wait."—Adv.

THE TEETH OF THE TIGER

"With what object?"

"With the object of furnishing proof against Marie Fauville and getting her condemned. So I asked for the attendance of the deputy and two m n. There will be four of us to bear witness to your honesty."

They all took up their posts. Two detectives were to sit up in turns.

This time, after making a minute search of the little room in which Fauville's son used to sleep, they locked and bolted the doors and shutters. At 11 o'clock they switched off the electric chandelier.

Don Luis and Weber hardly slept at all.

The night passed without incident of any kind.

But, at 7 o'clock, when the shutters were opened, they saw that there was a letter on the table. Just as on the last occasion, there was a letter on the table!

When the first moment of stupefaction was over, the deputy chief took the letter. His orders were not to read it and not to let any one else read it.

Here is the letter, published by the newspapers, which also published the declaration of the experts certifying that the handwriting was Hippolyte Fauville's:

"I have seen him! You understand, don't you, my dear friend? I have seen him! He was walking along a path in the Bois, with his coat collar turned up and his hat pulled over his ears. I don't think that he saw me. It was almost dark. But I knew him at once. I knew the silver handle of his ebony stick. It was he beyond a doubt, the scoundrel!

"So he is in Paris, in spite of his promise. Gaston Sauverand is in Paris! Do you understand the terrible significance of that fact? If he is in Paris, it means that he intends to act. If he is in Paris, it means certain death to me. Oh, the harm which I shall have suffered at that man's hands! He has already robbed me of my happiness; and now he wants my life. I am terrified."

So Fauville knew that the man with the ebony walking stick, that Gaston Sauverand, was designing to kill him. Fauville declared it most positively, by evidence written in his own hand; and the letter, moreover, corroborating the words that had escaped Gaston Sauverand at his arrest, showed that the two men had at one time had relations with each other, that they were no longer friends, and that Gaston Sauverand had promised never to come to Paris.

A little light was therefore being shed on the darkness of the Mornington case. But, on the other hand, how inconceivable was the mystery of that letter found on the table in the workroom!

Five men had kept watch, five of the smartest men obtainable; and yet, on that night, as on the night of the 15th of April, an unknown hand had delivered the letter in a room with barricaded doors and windows, without their hearing a sound or discovering any signs that the fastenings of the doors or windows had been tamper with.

The theory of a secret outlet was at once raised, but had to be abandoned after a careful examination of the walls and after an interview with the contractor who had built the house, from Fauville's own plans, some years ago.

It is unnecessary once more to recall what I may describe as the flurry of public. The deed in the circumstances, assumed the appearance of a sleight-of-hand trick. People felt tempted to look upon it as the recreation of some wonderfully skilled conjurer rather than the act of a person employing unknown methods.

Nevertheless, Don Luis Perenna's intelligence was justified at all points, for the expected incident had taken place on the 25th of April, as on the 15th. Would the series be continued on the 5th of May? No one doubted it, because Don Luis had said so and because everybody felt that Don Luis could not be mistaken. All through the night of the 5th of May there was a crowd on the Boulevard Suchet; and quidnuncs and night birds of every kind came trooping up to hear the latest news.

The prefect of police, greatly impressed by the first two miracles, had determined to see the next one for himself, and was present in person on the third night.

He came accompanied by several inspectors, whom he left in the garden, in the passage, and in the attic on the upper story. He himself took up his post on the grond floor with Weber, Mazeroux, and Don Luis Perenna.

Their expectations were disappointed, and this was M. Desmalion's fault. In spite of the express opinion of Don Luis, who deprecated the experiment as useless, the prefect had decided not to turn off the electric light, so that he might see if the light would prevent the miracle. Under these conditions no letter could appear, and no letter did appear. The miracle, whether a conjuring trick or a criminal's device, needed the kindly aid of the darkness.

There was therefore ten days lost, always presuming that the diabolical postman would dare to repeat his attempt and produce the third mysterious letter.

On the 15th of May the wait was renewed, while the same crowd gathered outside, an anxious, breathless crowd, stirred by the least sound and keeping an impressive silence, with eyes gazing upon Fauvilles' house.

This time the light was put out, but the prefect of police kept his hand on the electric switch. Ten times, 20 times, he unexpectedly turned on the light. There was nothing on the table. What had aroused his attention was the creaking of a piece of furniture or a movement made by one of the men with him.

Suddenly they all uttered an a rustling noise, had interrupted the silence.

M. Desmalions at once switched on the light. He gave a cry. A letter lay not on the table, but beside it, on the floor, on the carpet.

Mazeroux made the sign of the cross. The inspectors were as pale as death.

M. Desmalions looked at Don Luis, who nodded his head without a word.

They suspected the condition of the locks and bolts. Nothing had moved.

That day again, the contents of the letter made some amends for the really extraordinary manner of its delivery. It completely dispelled all doubts that still enshrouded the double murder on the Boulevard Suchet.

Again signed by the engineer, written throughout by himself, on the eight of February, with no visible address, it said:

No, my dear friend, I will not allow myself to be killed like a sheep led to slaughter. I shall defend myself. I shall fight to the last moment. Things have changed lately. I have proofs now, undeniable proofs. I possess letters that have passed between them. And I know that they still love each other as they did at the start, they want to marry, and that they will let nothing stand in their way. It is written, understand what I say, it is written in Marie's own hand: "Have patience, my own Gaston. My courage increases day by day. So much the worse for him who stands between us. He shall disappear."

My dear friend, if I succumb in the struggle you will find those letters (and all the evidence which I have collected against the wretched creature) in the safe hidden behind the small glass case: Then revenge me. Au revoir. Perhaps good by.

Thus ran the 3rd missive Hippolyte Fauville from his grave named and accused his guilty wife. From his grave he supplied the solution to the riddle and explained the reason why the crimes had been committed: Marie Fauville and Gaston Sauverand were lovers.

One problem remained to be solved: who was the unknown correspondent to whom Hippolyte Fauville had bequeathed the task of avenging his murder, and who instead of simply handing over the letters to the police, was exercising his ingenuity to deliver them by means of the most Machiavellian contrivances? Was it to his interest also to remain in the background?

To all these questions Marie Fauville replied in the most unexpected manner, though it was one that fully accorded with her threats. A week later, after a long cross-examination at which she was pressed for the name of her husband's old friend and at which she maintained the most stubborn silence, together with a sort of inertia, she returned to her cell in the evening and opened the veins in her wrist with a piece of glass which she had managed to hide.

Don Luis heard the news from Mazeroux, who came to tell him of it before 8 o'clock the next morning, just as he was getting out of bed. The sergeant had a travelling bag in his hand and was on his way to catch a train.

Don Luis was greatly upset.

"Is she dead?" he exclaimed.

"No. It seems that she has one more let-off. But what's the good?"

"How do you mean, what's the good?"

"She'll do it again, of course. She's set her mind upon it. And one day or another——"

"Did she volunteer no confession, this time either, before making the attempt on her life?"

"No, she wrote a few words on a scrap of paper, saying that, on thinking it over, she advised us to ask a certain M. Langernault about the mysterious letters. He was the only friend that she had known her husband to possess, or at any rate the only one whom he would have called, 'My dear friend.' This M. Langernault could do no more than prove her innocent and explain the terrible misunderstanding of which she was a victim."

"But," said Don Luis, "if there is anyone to prove her innocent, why does she begin by opening her veins?"

"She doesn't care, she says. Her life is done for; and what she wants is rest and death."

"Rest? Rest? There are other ways in which she can find it besides death. If the discovery of the truth is to spell her safety, perhaps the truth is not impossible to discover."

"What are you saying, Chief? Have you guessed anything? Are you beginning to understand?"

"Yes, very vaguely, but, all the same, the really unnatural accuracy of those letters seems to me a sign——"

He reflected for a moment and continued:

Have they reexamined the erased addresses of the three letters?"

"Yes, and they managed to make out the name of Langernault."

"Where does this Langernault live?"

"According to Mme. Fauville, at the village of Damigni, in the Orme."

"Have the deciphered the word Damigni on one of the letters?"

"No, but they have the name of the nearest town."

"What town is that?"

"Alencon."

"And is that where you're going."

"Yes, the prefect of police told me to go straightaway. I shall take the train at the Invalides."

"You mean you will come with me in my motor."

"Eh?"

"What are you talking about, Chief?"

"Nothing, I know."

Half an hour later they were flying along the Versailles road Perenna himself was driving his open car and driving it in such a way the Mazeroux, almost stifling kept blurting out at intervals:

"Lord, what a pace! Dash it all, how you're letting it go, Chief! Aren't you afraid of a smash? Remember the other day——"

They reached Alencon in time for lunch. When they had done, they went to the chief post office. Nobody knew the name of Langernault there. Besides, Damigni had its own post office, though the presumption was that M. Langernault had his letters addressed poste restante at Alencon.

Don Luis and Mazerou went on to the village of Damigni. Here again the postmaster knew no one of the name of Langernault; and this in spite of the fact that Damigni contained only about 1,000 inhabitants.

"Let's go and call on the mayor," said Perenna.

At the mayor's Mazeroux stated who he was and mentioned the object of his visit. The mayor nodded his head.

"Old Langernault? I should think so. A decent fellow: used to run a business in the town."

"And accustomed, I suppose, to fetch his letters at Alencon post office?"

"That's it, every day, for the sake of the walk."

"And his house?"

"Is at the end of the village. You passed it as you came along."

"Can we see it?"

"Well, of course * * * only——"

"Perhaps he's not at home?"

"Certainly not. The poor, dear man hasn't even set foot in the house since he left it the last time, four years ago!"

"How is that?"

"Why he's been dead these four years!"

Don Luis and Mazeroux exchanged a glance of amazement.

"So he's dead?" said Don Luis.

"Yes, a gunshot."

"What's that!" cried Perenna. "Was he murdered?"

"No, no. They thought so at first, when they picked him up on the floor of his room; but the inquest proved that it was an accident. He was cleaning his gun, and it went off and sent a load of shot into his stomach. All the same, we thought it very queer in the village. Daddy Langernault, an old hunter before the lord, was not the man to commit an act of carelessness."

"Had he money?"

"Yes; and that's just what clinched the matter; they couldn't find a penny of it!"

Don Luis remained thinking for some time and then asked:

"Did he leave any children, any relations of the same name?"

"Nobody, not even a cousin. The proof is that his property—it's called the Old Castle, because of the ruins on it—has reverted to the state. The authorities have had the doors of the house sealed up, and locked the gate of the park. They are waiting for the legal period to expire in order to take possession."

"And don't sightseers go walking in the park, in spite of the walls?"

"Not they. In the first place, the walls are very high. And then—and then the Old Castle has had a bad reputation in the neighborhood ever since I can remember. There has always been a talk of ghosts; a pack of silly tales. But still——"

Perenna and his companion could not get over their surprise.

"This is a funny affair," exclaimed Don Luis, when they had left the mayor's. "Here we have Fauville writing his letters to a dead man—and to a dead man, by the way, who looks to me very much as if he had been murdered."

"Some one must have intercepted the letters."

"Obviously. But that does not do away with the fact that he wrote them to a dead man and made his confidences to a dead man and told him of his wife's criminal intentions."

Mazeroux was silent. He, too, seemed greatly perplexed.

They spent part of the afternoon in asking about old Langernault's habits, hoping to receive some useful clue from the people who had known him. But their efforts led to nothing.

At 6 o'clock, as they were about to start, Don Luis found that the car had run out of petrol and sent Mazeroux in a trap to the outskirts of Alencon, to fetch some. He employed the delay in going to look at the Old Castle outside the village.

He had to follow a hedged road leading to an open space, planted with lime trees, where a massive wooden gate stood in the middle of a wall. The gate was locked. Don Luis walked along the wall, which was, in fact, very high and presented no opening. Nevertheless, he managed to climb over by means of the branches of a tree.

The park consisted of unkept lawns, overgrown with large wild flowers, and grass covered avenues leading on the right to a distant mound, thickly dotted with runs, and, on the left, to a small, tumbledown house with ill fitting shutters.

He was turning in this direction, when he was much surprised to perceive fresh footprints on a border which had been soaked with the recent rain. And he could see that these footprints had been made by a woman's boots, a pair of elegant and dainty boots.

"Who the devil comes walking here?" he thought.

He found more footprints a little father, on another border which the owner of the boots had crossed, and they led him away from the house, toward a series of clumps of trees where he saw them twice more. Then he lost sight of them for good.

From the Popular Science Monthly.

The English vocabulary has grown to great size, according to Prof. Clark S. Northrup, of Cornell university. "The number of words found in old English literature does not exceed 30,000; recent dictionaries have listed more than 400,000."

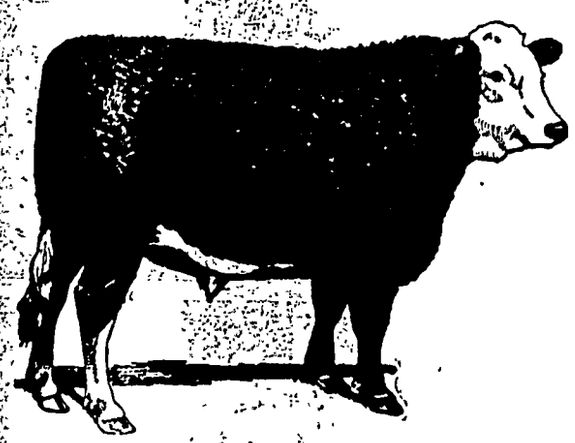
SWIFT & COMPANY U.S.A.

Only About Half the Steer is Beef



Live Weight 1200 pounds

100%

Dressed Weight 672 pounds of Beef

56%

When Swift & Company buys a steer weighing 1200 pounds, only about 672 pounds goes to market as beef; the other 528 pounds consists of hide, fats, other by-products, and waste.

When the packer pays 15 cents a pound for a steer, he sells the meat to the retailer for about 24 cents. But the packer gets only about 6 cents a pound for the other 528 pounds.

This means that the packer gets about 16 cents a pound for all the products from a steer for which he pays 15 cents.

The difference of 1 cent per pound covers the cost of dressing, preparation of by-products, freight on beef to all parts of the United States, operation of distributing houses, and leaves a net profit of only about ¼ of a cent per pound on all dressed beef sold.

Large volume of business and utilization of parts that were formerly wasted, make this achievement possible.

QUICK DECISION OF CHIEF SAVED PARIS

His Action at Noyon on March 22, 1918, Changed Tide of Great Battle.

With the French Armies Afield (by mail) In every great battle there comes always a critical moment when victory often depends on the momentary genius of inspirational flash of one or the other commanding generals.

History alone will establish what was the psychological moment in the great French battle before Noyon which defeated Ludendorff's Kolossal Conception of driving a wedge between the English and the French armies and then while one German army by a rapid march to the coast should completely pen in and crush the English army a second German column should march on Paris.

Until history establishes this psychological moment the writer will champion and support the candidacy of the following particular moment.

Following the breaking of the English front in the vicinity of St Quentin on March 21 1918 all of the German armies in the immediate vicinity began a general drive towards the west for the very evident purpose not only of separating the English and the French armies but of offering into the open the road for march on Paris by way of Compiegne Creil and Senlis.

ECONOMIC MATTERS WORRYING JAPAN

Tokio (by mail) Warning that adverse economic conditions [illegible] in Japan as a result of the war was given by the Japanese premier Count Terauchi in an address delivered recently before the annual meeting of the clearing house banks. Responsibility of averting a disaster he said, rested upon the bankers of Japan.

The premier remarked that the necessity of industrial independence had been vividly brought home to Japan in consequence of the war and it was because of this that the government had introduced into the last session of the diet projects tending towards the achievement of this independence.

Mr. Shoda, finance minister who followed Count Terauchi, said that the government in compiling the estimates for the current fiscal year paid the utmost attention to the perfection of the national defense. A project was mapped out for the building of two battle cruisers three cruisers and 75 other warships of all sorts at a total cost to $150,250,000, the disbursements of which was to be spread over six years. This together with the expenditure of $141,500,000 which had already been fixed, would bring the total naval expenditures to be defrayed during the next six years to about $292,000,000.

The Canny Scot.

From the St Louis Star

As Sandy holed out on the first green his friend from over the border asked "And how many strokes did you take?"

"Eight," replied the Scot.

"Ah" said the Englishman. "I took seven, so that's my hole."

The Scot said nothing but when on the next green the Englishman repeated his question and made inquiry as to the number of strokes taken by his opponent the latter nodded his head and, with an expression of infinite wisdom on his face gently murmured:

"Nay nay, my mannie, this time it's my turn to ask first."

JUST wherein lies the reason for the use of vegetable preparations for infants and children?

Why are any but vegetable preparations unsafe for infants and children?

Why are Syrups, Cordials and Drops condemned by all Physicians and most laymen?

Why has the Government placed a ban on all preparations containing, among other poisonous drugs, Opium in its variously prepared forms and pleasing tastes, and under its innumerable names?

These are questions that every Mother will do well to inquire about.

Children Cry For Fletcher's CASTORIA

Letters from Prominent Druggists addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

S. J. Briggs & Co., of Providence, R. I., say: "We have sold Fletcher's Castoria in our three stores for the past twenty years and consider it one of the best preparations on the market."

Mansur Drug Co., of St. Paul, Minn., says: "We are not in the habit of recommending proprietary medicines, but we never hesitate to say a good word for Castoria. It is a medical success."

Hegeman & Co., of New York City, N. Y., say: "We can say for your Castoria that it is one of the best selling preparations in our stores. That is conclusive evidence that it is satisfactory to the users."

W. H. Chapman, of Montreal, Que., says: "I have sold Fletcher's Castoria for many years and have yet to hear of one word other than praise of its virtues. I look upon your preparation as one of the few so called patent medicines having merit and unhesitatingly recommend it as a safe household remedy."

The Farmer Was Fair.

Bide Dudley, writer, lyricist and poet, went up into Westchester county the other day with an actor to buy a horse. "Go out in the barnyard and pick one out," said the farmer. "You may have him for $1.50."

The actor paid over the money and selected a horse. He mounted the animal and started away. The horse went 20 steps and fell down and the new owner was unable to make him get up. He went back to the farmer.

"Say," he said "I've been stung. That horse fell down and won't get up."

"Well," replied the farmer, "I want to be fair with you. Go out in the lot and pick out another, but don't take the one in the middle or they'll all fall down."—New York Telegram.

Checks in Gaelic.

A little plaint from a bank clerk. Lately, he says, there have been checks circulating in this country printed in Gaelic script. Naturally, they are Irish ones, and probably drawn by enthusiastic Sinn Feiners. But what can be the object of introducing another terror to the already worried and overworked bank clerk upon whom falls the task of obtaining a translation? And the Irish check is not the only sinner in this respect. For a long time the Esperantists wrote the amount of their checks in Esperanto and became a nuisance to the banks.—London Chronicle.

Improved methods of building cars, that build them better and save millions of dollars to the public, is one of the substantial advantages you get in this Overland Model 90.

The time to save money is when you select your car, because afterwards you cannot make it any more economical than it is built to be.

Select this Model 90 and you save money in the first cost and in the maintenance cost. You cannot get complete satisfaction from less advantages than it gives—

And you cannot get as much value in any other car for the low price of this Model 90.

It has a powerful, fuel-saving motor; narrow turning radius; rear cantilever springs; 106-inch wheelbase; 31 x 4 tires, non-skid rear. Auto-Lite starting and lighting and vacuum fuel system.

It is as desirable as it is adequate, comfortable and easy-to-handle.

With it a salesman can double his value; a housewife gains time for Red Cross work, and business and professional men save time and multiply their activities.

It coins time and money for more than 80,000 others. Why not for you?

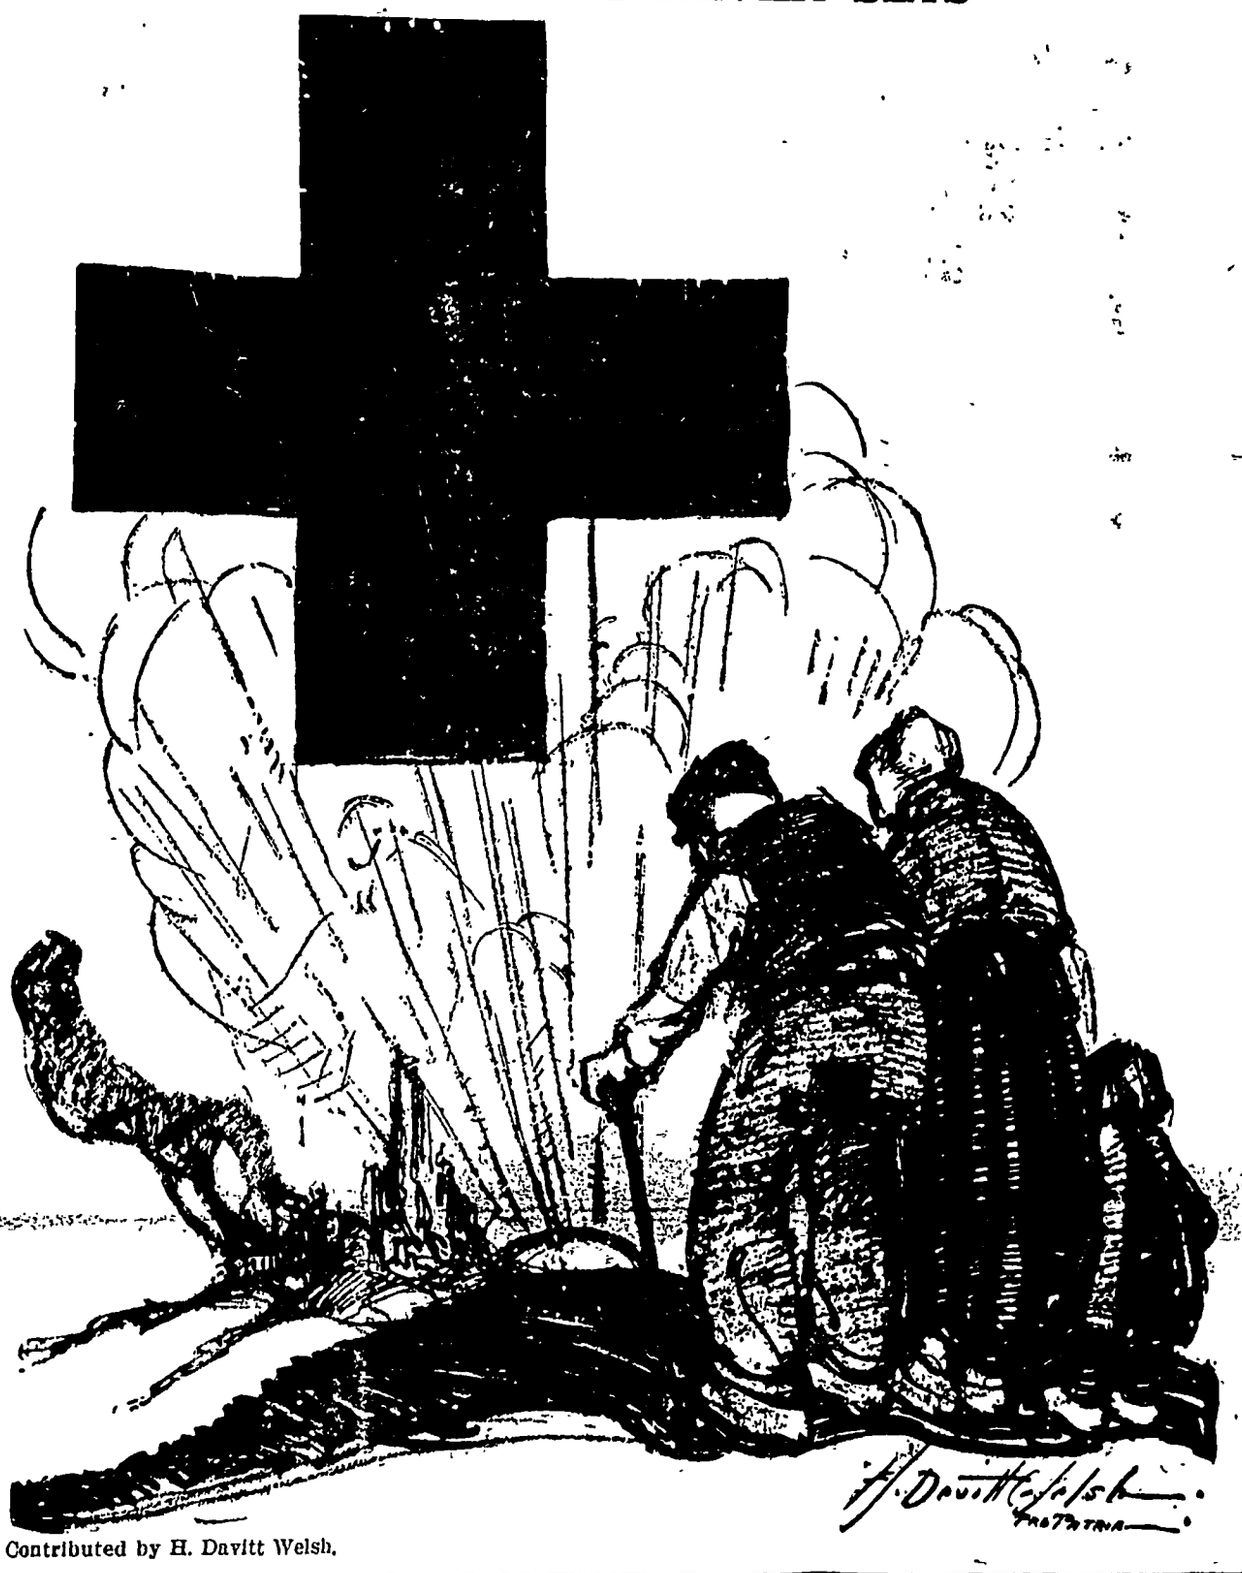
THE SUN THAT NEVER SETS



Contributed by H. Davitt Welsh.

Eclipse of the Sun June 8.

To the readers of the "Times" who are interested in Popular Astronomy the undersigned desires to make the following statement.

There will be a total eclipse of the sun on June 8, visible in Iowa as a partial eclipse.

The path of totality traverses the United States from South-Western Washington to Eastern Florida; passing through all of the States such as Colorado, Oklohoma, etc.

In this comparitavely narrow path all of the sun's light will be cut off for a brief period, varying from forty-five seconds to two minuets.

On both sides of this path it will be visible as a partial eclipse to all of the United States except the part covered by the "Path of Totality".

The nearer one lives to this path the greater will be the percent of the sun's surface darkened.

The eclipse is caused by the moon passing between the sun and the earth, thus cutting off the sun's light from the earth.

The moon travels around the earth from West to East, in approximatily twenty-seven and one-half days, so that you can readily see that if it passes between the sun and the earth it will cause an eclipse of the sun.

This thing it does one or more times each year but of course is not always visible here.

An eclipse of the sun caused by the moon takes place at the time of new moon.

The first contact of the eclipse will be at the Western edge of the sun's surface.

North of the path of totality the Northern edge of the Sun's surface will continue to shine throughout the eclipse and South of the path the Southern edge

The eclipse will be visible first in the State of Washington and last in Florida.

In this locality the eclipse should commence at 5:08, and middle of it at 6:08 and end at 7:08, o'clock; a duration of two hours.

Please do not try to view the early stages of the eclipse with the naked eye, use blue, green, or smoked glass.

The middle of the eclipse can be viewed with the naked eye, for at that time fully 80 percent of the Sun's surface will be darkened.

The northern edge of the Sun's surface will continue to shine in Iowa.

This eclipse should be of interest even if the sky should be clouded at that time, for at the hight of the eclipse when only 20 percent of the Sun's surface will be shining on this State and a part of this light darkened by clouds if will be quite dark by six o'clock and for a short time there after.

I desire to call your attention to an item in the Klemme Times two weeks ago in which it was stated that the eclipse would begin at 2:00 or 3:00 o' clock.

This was due to a slight misscalculation and I will state here that our Editor and myself have an understanding to the effect that I should write up this article.

So if the eclipse does not materialize, as herein stated the laugh will be on Schaper and the other "higher up fellows".

Nothing preventing, I will try to be in town on the afternoon of June 8th, will bring small glass with me and anyone wishing to view eclipse through same will be perfectly welcome to do so.

Yours truly,
G. I. Schaper.

P. S. Will give a short street talk at 5:15 if desired.

—Editor's Note: We are sure the people of Klemme and vicinity will be pleased to have Schaper present to explain the various stages of the eclipse.

FACE STARVATION ALL OVER WORLD

FOOD SITUATION REALLY IS CRITICAL IN MOST OF THE CIVILIZED LANDS OF THE GLOBE.

The federal food administration declares that although we thought we had gotten by the stage where starvation could imperil civilized people yet literally hundreds of thousands of persons have starved to death in the last three years due to the world food shortage and other conditions brought about by the war.

A large part of the world is coming into the position that Belgium is in and has been in; that is, coming to the stage where the primary and important thing in life is enough food to keep alive.

The food supply of the world is short and getting shorter. You cannot take 15,000,000 men out of production and put them into destruction of human products and expect things to go on as before.

In Finland, three and one-half million people, caught in between Russia and Sweden, face a failure of their cereal harvest. They are now on a ration of 150 grams of war bread a day. That is less than a quarter of a loaf. A large part of that is made up of bark and beech buds. It looks now as if a large number of them would necessarily starve.

Roumania is caught in between Russia and the other belligerents. Her people are short of food. Her supplies have been used up. We can see no way in which they can avoid disease and starvation.

In Holland, they are proceedling to kill 1,000,000 of their dairy cattle because they cannot get sufficient feed for them. A somewhat similar situation exists in Denmark. Do not waste meat. The world's flocks and herds are being fast depleted.

Food has now taken a dominant position in the war. The American people must prepare themselves to sacrifice far more than was at first thought necessary.

By the first of December we had exported all our surplus of wheat. Yet here is Europe's insistent call for more. We must send it if the war is to go on efficiently. If we eat all, we cannot ship it, and the food administration has already tried to picture how much wheat is needed by people who will starve if they do not get it.

For the least bit of heedlessness on your part in food conservation some one somewhere in the world must suffer privation. The food administration has mastered the problem of America's food in such a way that every ounce or food conserved and kept in the currents of trade goes to an empty stomach in Europe.

CANADA'S GREAT WORK

She Is Doing Her Duty by Her Soldiers—Let America Heed.

Food Administrator Deems has been notified of the great success of the food conservation program in Canada and he desires to call the attention of Iowa people to the way in which Canadians are supporting their soldiers and allies abroad. In Canada the reduction in the consumption of beef, bacon and flour in the homes and public eating places is sufficient to provide these foods for an army of 500,000 men.

Canada this season has set upon itself the task of producing 400,000,000 bushels of wheat instead of the 225,000,000 bushels grown in 1917. A campaign is now on for the production of more spring wheat and pleas are being made that every farmer shall raise at least five acres more than in former years. In Quebec the expectation is an increase in the grain production of at least 000,000 acres through this plan. In Manitoba the acreage is being greatly increased with the expectation that the crop this year will reach 42,000,000 bushels.

WHY WE MUST SAVE MEAT

Statement of the Reduction of Supplies Among Our Associates in the War.

Food Administrator Deems is notified that a very great shortage exists in English meat. The situation is of interest and importance in view of the fact that the withdrawal of meatless days by the food administration, was to continue until May 1. The reports from England are to the effect that the amount of home-grown meat of all kinds coming to the principal markets there has averaged only 55,000,000 pounds per week since January 1, as against 227,000,000 pounds average for the same period in 1016. The number of cattle coming to English markets has decreased 65 per cent, sheep 40 per cent and hogs 68 per cent, compared to the same period for 1016. "These figures," said Mr. Deems, "are a complete answer to anyone who may raise the question as to why it is necessary for the United States to send so much food to our associates in the war."

Send It to Our Boys.

Saving wheat is a military necessity!

Will you permit appetite or habit to take precedence over patriotism and duty?

Eat no wheat!

WAR GARDENS WERE SUCCESS

Home Vegetable Patches Yielded $350,000,000 and Expected to Do Better Next Summer.

What about the war gardens of 1917? Did they amount to anything? Did they yield any profits? Will there be war gardens in 1918?

The national emergency food garden commission declares the war gardens were a success, and gives the greatest encouragement for next year's war gardens.

In 1917 there were nearly 3,000,000 gardens, aggregating 1,150,000 acres of city and town land under cultivation. As these gardens were tilled intensively, the products had relatively high value, being figured in terms of retail prices which would have otherwise been paid for food purchased elsewhere, it is estimated that their yield was valued at $350,000,000, or $17.50 per family.

The glass jar manufacturers sold about 119,000,000 canning jars and a survey of the household canning in 20 typical towns throughout the country showed that housewives used but one new jar to over three and one-quarter old jars already on hand.

On this basis the housewives of the country put up nearly 500,000,000 quart jars of vegetables and fruits, which is believed to be three times as much as was ever packed before.

BEEF CATTLE IN PARAGUAY

Seventy-Five Thousand Head of Stock Now on Hand—American Company to Develop Holdings.

American interest in Paraguayan cattle and timber resources has grown considerably during the past few months. The recent formation of the International Products company, a $5,000,000 Maryland corporation, is of significance to all firms having commercial relations with Paraguay, says Commerce Reports. The amount of money which the new organization will put into circulation in the republic will stimulate business in all lines, and the success of this enterprise will mean much to the future development of Paraguay.

The International Products company is organized primarily for the prosecution of the timber and cattle business. Its activities are centered in two distinct parts of Paraguay. In the northeastern section of the country, distant some forty-five hours by steamer from the capital, Asuncion, the company is developing the properties formerly held by the New York & Paraguay company.

Besides the property formerly held by the New York & Paraguay company, adjoining land has been purchased to the south, which gives the International Products company a total of 1,400,000 acres, about equally divided between excellent grazing land and quebracho forests. The frontage on the Paraguay river at Puerto Pinasco is about fifteen miles, and the holdings of the company extend 110 miles west of the river. In addition to the town of Puerto Pinasco, the property includes at least 25 miles of meter-gauge railroad, lighters, tugs and other river transportation facilities. Seventy-five thousand head of cattle are known to be on the ground at present.

A few miles below Asuncion on the Paraguay river another field of activity of the company is located. Ground has already been broken for a large meat-packing plant, the underbrush cleared away, and the construction of a dock commenced. A subsidiary company, capitalized at $1,500,000 and known as the Central Products company, has been formed to handle the meat-packing proposition with all its ramifications. Special lighters, drawing about six and one-half feet, are to be constructed to transport cattle from Puerto Pinasco to the plant at San Antonio, and also to transport the frozen or chilled beef to the ports of Buenos Aires or Montevideo, and within a year it is hoped to be able to begin operations. The capacity of the plant will be 500 cattle daily, but until this supply is definitely assured probably from 250 to 500 will be killed.

THE KLEMME TIMES

Ray A. Jorgenson, Pub.

KLEMME, IOWA

A new kind of surgical splint in which galvanized wire netting takes the place of wood, has been put on the market, says the Popular Science Monthly It has been tried and offers many advantages. The steel entering into the construction of this woven wire splint is so tempered that it can be molded by hand. Being galvanized, the wire is sterilized and at the same time welded into a single piece that cannot fray out at loose ends. As the splint is porous, it allows a certain amount of evaporation and air circulation to the dressing beneath, which wood or plaster does not The splint comes rolled like a bandage and is lighter and less bulky than wooden splints.

According to the Koran the soil of paradise is composed of musk and saffron, sprinkled with pearls and hyacinths. The walls of the mansions are of gold and silver, the fruits are of a flavor and delicacy unknown to mortals. Numerous rivers flow through the paradise. Some are of wine, others of milk, honey and water The pebbles are rubies and emeralds; the banks of musk, camphor and saffron. The meanest inhabitant of the Mohammedan paradise will have 80,000 servants and 72 wives. Wine, though forbidden on earth, will there be freely allowed and will not inebriate.

Cloves are the dried, unexpanded flower buds of a tree. The corolla forms a ball on the top between the four teeth of the calyx, and the stalk is the immature ovary They are at first green then turn yellow and finally bright pink or scarlet. In this last stage they are ready to be picked If allowed to remain longer on the tree, the flowers expand, become fertilized, and the stalk of the clove then develops into a succulent purple berry containing one or two seeds. This is known technically as the "mother clove."

James Chalmers an Englishman, was the first to conceive the idea of the postage stamp as at present used. In August, 1834 he drew a sample of an adhesive stamp and then printed a few gummed copies The English government adopted his adhesive stamp according to a decree of December 21 1839 and issued the first stamp on May 6, 1840 A year later the stamp was introduced in the United States and Switzerland, and soon afterward in France, Belgium and Bavaria.

Storm Lake, Ia., June 1.—Robert Wallace, a draft evader, was arrested by the county authorities on a farm near Alta, and has been sent to Camp Dodge. Information was given to the authorities by young men, who went with the sixth quota Monday. Wallace registered in Peoria, Ill., and was called in the first quota, but disappeared.

The present rate of speed, however, at which troops are being sent abroad, with other events which are transpiring at camp, indicates that steps are to be taken within the next few weeks to place the division on a war basis instead of the basis of a replacement organization which up to the present time has constituted the activities at camp

GAS EXPLOSION IS FATAL TO FARMER

Hawarden, Ia., June 1.—Louis Jacobs a farmer, of Eagle township, was fatally injured Tuesday evening from the explosion of an acetylene lighting tank He died a few hours after the explosion His son, Dewey, aged 17, had his arm broken and received some internal injuries, but will probably recover The tank to the lighting system was in a pit about 75 feet from the house, so that no damage resulted to the property The explosion occurred about 6 o'clock.

The lighting system was not working right and Mr Jacobs and his son had gone to the pit to make an investigation of the trouble. Mr. Jacobs was leaning over the hole at the time the explosion occurred, and received the full force of it in the face. His face was badly shattered, nearly every bone in it being fractured. His right arm was badly injured and one finger was cut off He was brought to the Hawarden hospital, but never regained consciousness Dewey Jacobs was standing by the side of his father and was thrown some distance away from the pit by the force of the concussion He is unable to give any solution as to the cause of the explosion

GERMAN LANGUAGE PAPER CEASES PUBLICATION

LeMars, Ia June 1.—With the issue this week the Le Mars Herold the only newspaper published in the German language in Plymouth county, after an existence of 36 years, ceases publication Mr John Starzl the publisher, states that it is not his wish to oppose public sentiment by promoting the use of the German language in this country and that coupled with the fact that a large percent of the German readers have acquired a sufficient knowledge of the English language are reasons for making a newspaper published in the German language of less importance

GUARD REGIMENTS ARE NOT TO SUFFER

Senators and Governors Are Given Assurance By the War Department.

Washington, June 1.—Assurances were given Senators Cummins and Kenyon by Secretary Baker and General March that the national guard division at Camp Cody to which the Iowa guard belongs would not be broken up but would be allowed to go to France as a division.

In regard to protests that troops are being withdrawn from the division and officers will be left behind. It was explained that 5,500 troops had been drawn from Camp Cody to fill up various regiments but that it is not the purpose to withdraw any more from there. The policy hereafter will be to make replacements from special replacement camps or the replacement sections of camps and cantonments. Thus, at Camp Dodge 15,000 of the 42,000 men to be trained there will be for replacements.

Senator Kenyon asked General March whether there was a purpose to destroy the national guard. General March denied it.

The governors of Minnesota and the Dakotas are here on the same business.

MAY UNEARTH DRAFT SCANDAL AT DES MOINES

Des Moines, Ia., June 1.—Some 200 Polk county young men living outside of Des Moines, who have been granted deferred classifications may be placed in Class 1 as a result of investigations now being started by Adjutant General Logan.

Charges have been filed in Adjutant General Logan's office of fraud and perjury and exposures may involve prominent business men

It is asserted one member of the draft board permitted himself to be influenced in placing men in the deferred list and that he even coached men how to evade Class 1.

If there is sufficient evidence criminal proceedings may be instituted.

IOWA AIRPLANE MAN TELLS OF LONG FALL

Waterloo, Ia., June 1.—Lieut. Milo H Miller, who was injured in an airplane crash at Kelly field last week, is home on an indefinite furlough.

In describing his 1,200-foot fall he said "The whole affair happened so quickly that I did not have time to realize what was going on.

"I felt no sensations while plunging through the air and knew nothing more until I recovered consciousness in a hospital."

Before coming home Miller took a long ride in an airplane to determine whether the fall had "upset his equilibrium" It had not

Miller's flying companion was killed He had just fastened his safety belt when he attempted to do so he slipped

OLD SOLDIERS ASK RAISE IN SALARY

Des Moines Ia., June 1.—It is believed that the raises of salaries of floor men janitors and machinists at the house will not come to pass An increase of 10 per cent in their salaries was granted by the retrenchment and reform committee of the last legislature at a recent meeting

In making its recommendations these increases the retrenchment and reform committee excepted all the soldiers employed about the buildings for the reason that they receive pensions from the government for services rendered during the civil war

This action of the committee caused a storm of protest on the part of the veterans Members of the committee were roundly called to task by the soldiers for "making the state of Iowa the beneficiary of pensions earned 50 years ago by men who had at that time helped to perpetuate this government

ONE LANGUAGE IS ENOUGH IN AMERICA

Colonel Roosevelt Delivers Address In Des Moines—Military Training Urged.

Des Moines, Ia., May 30.—English as the sole language for schools, newspapers and other usage in this country was urged by Theodore Roosevelt in an address on "Americanism" here last night under the direction of the National Security league.

The former president reiterated his contention for universal obligatory military training as a prevention for future wars, and warned against those who declare there will be none after the present conflict.

Colonel Roosevelt pointed out "our duty to speed up the war and put it through," and for "us to prepare ourselves that the peace we are to gain shall be a permanent gain for righteousness."

Nearly 100 veterans of the civil war were grouped together in the crowd that packed the colisseum, and addressing his remarks to these men, the Colonel likened those of '60 who declared peace was more important than victory to the persons of today: "Who desire an inconclusive peace."

"We have put our hand to the plow" he shouted, "and we will never turn back until we have driven the furrow up to Berlin. Unless we knock out Germany, we will have to fight again, probably within the life time of men now old, certainly within the time of those now young."

In voicing his approval of the recent proclamation by Governor Harding, ordering that English be the only medium of instruction in public or private schools in Iowa, the former president declared:

"This a nation—not a polyglot boarding house. There isn't room in the country for any 50-50 American; there can be only loyalty—to the 'Stars and Stripes'; one nationality—the American, and therefore only one language—the English language."

Immigrants should be given free instruction in the English language, Mr. Roosevelt declared and advocated that those who could not learn to read, write and talk English in five years should be returned to their native land. Those who did not wish to fight because of "conscientious" reasons, the ex-president said, and even sought to evade "non-fighting" duty, should be deprived of their right to vote, "basing universal suffrage on universal service in peace and war."

Mr Roosevelt spoke briefly at the Camp Dodge cantonment at noon and the same general theme as his night address, and expressed the wish that "these cantonments—which are the greatest universities of Americanism—be made the centers of obligatory military training after the present war for men between the ages of 19 and 21." He also review a battalion of troops.

Mr. Roosevelt left for Chicago last night He speaks in Madison, Wis., tonight

BOHEMIANS ARE OUT AFTER GOVERNOR HARDING

Cedar Rapids, Ia., May 30.—Alleging that he is using the war to play politics, prominent Bohemians of this city are aroused over Governor Harding's order to abolish all foreign language in Iowa until peace is again declared.

Telegrams of protest have been sent to the governor by Frank Filip, chairman of Linn county Liberty loan committee Emil Benesh county chairman of war savings stamps committee; C P Svoboda, secretary Cedar Rapids Life Insurance company, and others. The proclamation also was denounced in all Bohemian churches here yesterday and demand made that it be recalled

"If Governor Harding wasn't afraid of losing the vote of the river counties, why didn't he specify the German language only?" ask many of the Bohemian Americans here.

Cedar Rapids has a larger Bohemian population than any other town in Iowa and leading citizens here state that the governor has made a serious mistake.

COUNCIL BLUFFS HAS A FLOOD EXPERIENCE

Council Bluffs Ia., May 30.—Indian creek which bisects the city, overflowed Sunday night for the second time within two weeks following tremendous heavy rains.

More than a score of families were compelled to leave their homes, gardens, were ruined, and lower Broadway, in the vicinity of the Northwestern passenger station, mud is 18 inches deep on the pavement.

TORE DOWN WARNING SIGNS; INTO TROUBLE

Red Oak, Ia., May 30.—Considerable disturbance has been created here during the past few days following the tearing down of a couple of signs on Third avenue by Henry Schmidt and Joe Hayward, which resulted in a fight between Schmidt and John Brummett and a meeting of the defense council to investigate the actions of Schmidt and Hayward

The signs which were torn down carried warnings to those living in the neighborhood to use the English language and stop speaking German. The first sign, which was put up by one of the boys of the neighborhood, was taken down by Schmidt, and the second which was put up by Jim King and bore an American flag, was taken down by Hayward.

MISSOURI VALLEY BOY PROMOTED FOR BRAVERY

Logan, Ia., May 30.—In a letter just received here by Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Dege from their son, Lynn, with the army in France, it is learned that Earl Mason, of Missouri Valley, also with the army in France, driving the car for the colonel of his organization, has been promoted and awarded a medal for bravery.

The colonel's car was stuck in the mud, according to Dege, and the enemy began shelling them, seriously wounding the colonel. Mason is said to have stayed with the officer, stopped the flow of blood, and took him where he could obtain aid.

DYNAMITE WAS READY TO BE EXPLODED

Cedar Rapids, Ia., May 30.—The finding of four sticks of dynamite to which a fulminating cap and fuse were attached on the porch of A. W. McGregor, a local real estate dealer, and the discovery of 100 large caliber revolver cartridges in a hollow tree in the same neighborhood is a mystery which police are trying to solve. McGregor has no enemies so far as can be learned, and is known to be patriotic and loyal. The cartridges were found by children. No attempt had been made to explode the dynamite.

right flank the Germans now La Neuvillette and Bethouy, north of Rheims and have thrown a semi-circle about that city, being within two miles on the east, north and west.

The Aisne battle front now apparently stretches from Coucy-Le-Chateau southward through Juvigny and Soissons to Hartennes, southeastward to the Marne eastward along that river to Dormans and northeastward to Rheims.

On the Flanders front the French improved their positions east of Dickebusch lake by a local operation last night. Elsewhere the British and French fronts were quiet

By penetrating to the Marne or southward from Fere-En-Tardenois, seven miles north of the river, which they now hold, the Germans apparently hope to spread out eastward and westward as they failed to do farther north and thus outflank the strong allied positions at Soissons and Rheims. French resistance in the center, however, is growing in strength and the Germans are getting farther and farther from their original base along the Ailette.

Open to Flank Attack.

Paris and London view the situation more favorably and in neither capital is there fear that the German offensive will become as serious a menace to the allied defense as the original onslaught in March.

Although the German salient is about 25 miles deep in the center, Paris is not much nearer, nor has the enemy advance yet affected the allied lines eastward from Montdidier. In fact the Germans would be in a dangerous position should General Foch strike eastward along the Aisne from Soissons. This may be the purpose of the allied strategy in holding strongly on the flanks as the Germans pet deeper and deeper into the pocket toward the Marne.

The aerial activity over the territory of the German advance is most intense and French airmen have dropped many tons of bombs on enemy targets in addition to bringing down 19 German machines

AMERICAN ARTILLERY IS DESTROYING HUNS

Enemy Efforts to Recapture Cantigny Are Futile and Costly In Lives.

In only one of six counter attacks have the boche been able to reach the American lines their infantry melting before our counter barrages On the one occasion they did reach the line, the few Germans who penetrated the trenches were killed or captured

SAFE WHILE FLANKS HOLD.

Paris May 31 The newspapers do not attempt to minimize the importance of the German advance Gabriele Hanotaux in the Figaro compares the strategic situation with that on the eve of the battle of the Marne. Although the commentators however, express confidence that the high command will so dispose the allied troops as to restore the situation

The Petit Parisian says the government officials who saw the army chiefs yesterday returned in the evening still confident which it regards as a good sign

It is the resistance of the two wings of the allied force which inspires the confidence of all the military critics. To take victorious advantage of the success they have so far gained, the Germans must succeed in bending the two hinges and all their efforts to do this up to this time have been vain.

Another reason for confidence is the arrival of additional reserves The Echo De Paris reports that reserves are arriving on the battle ground with artillery and infantry services Their entrance into action was effected methodically and without any display of ... Thousands of French Refugees Fleeing From Advance of Huns Choke Roads Near Battle Zone

BY HENRY WOOD.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the French Armies in the Field, June 1—From every point of the 60-mile battle front between Rheims and Soissons streams of refugees today poured down roads leading to central France fleeing from the Hun invasion

Late last night when I returned from the fighting line, where the homes of these people are being engulfed, the highways were bordered with the bivouacks of fugitives. For miles upon miles the rolling countryside was all a-flicker with tiny camp fires of the refugees On their weary march to God knows where they tarried for rest wherever night found them, sleeping beneath vehicles, the lucky ones who had thought to bring a little food cooking and eating it under the stars

Pitiful Spectacle.

The streams of fleeing humanity made a pitiful spectacle. Each road seemed to have its own particular caravan and the whole scene resembled the exodus of the children of Israel from Egypt, as it is described in the bible

Every conceivable vehicle was in use from huge two-wheeled French farm wagons hauled by oxen, to baby carriages These ox carts are capable of transporting the effects of an entire household

On top of the piles of goods on some of these wagons I saw groups of old women sitting with babies among them some of the children clutching pet goats and chickens

In line with these farm lorries we saw buggies, smart traps and dog carts even automobiles, and between them and flanking them placed the less fortunate families, who had to march on foot, carrying their sole possessions in wheelbarrows and baby carriages and hand carts.

Sick Babies on Backs.

And there were some folks still poorer, whose only possessions were what they were able to carry on their backs. Sometimes the luggage which these wanderers bore on their shoulders was topped off by a sick baby, tied firmly to the bundle of household effects.

Intermingled with the human caravan were herds of oxen, horses, sheep, goats and cattle. Here and there little girls drove flocks of geese before them. Others herded chickens and pigs, poking them with long sticks to hustle them along, sometimes stopping a moment to glance back at the familiar scenes that were felt behind, then hurrying on to give the family live stock another urge on its way.

The peasants walked behind their single cow; those who had once been fairly well to do rode behind dozens of cows, but all were homeless and few had any particular goal in sight.

No Young Men There.

As mile after mile of the endless column trudged past, we scanned their faces and saw that there were no young men among them. All the faces were those of women, girls, children and very old men, showing that every Frenchman who can fight is at the front

Where all these who were forced from their homes at a few moments notice are going God alone knows. Few of the refugees had any particular haven in view. With them it was simply a case of keep going—keep going.

SITUATION MORE PERILOUS FOR GERMANS THAN ALLIES

BY J. W. T. MASON.

United Press War Expert.

New York, N Y., June 1.—General Foch is holding the German advance on both flanks, while Von Hindenburg continues to move forward in the center There is being created a dangerous ... that will compel the Germans to protect their newly lengthened lines by an unduly large ... of troops, which they can ill afford

Re-establishment of the French front protecting Rheims and the continued holding of the outlets to Soissons by French units are the most important developments of the past 24 hours. The Germans must secure full possession of Soissons and especially Rheims, with their immediate environs, if Von Hindenburg is to find any reasonable degree of security for his new lines. As long as General Foch can hold his present positions on these wings, the Germans must rest very uneasily.

Von Hindenburg's advance northwest of Soissons is not in immediate relationship with the Marne offensive. It is a new local drive, along a front of not more than five miles and is 25 miles north of the German wedge moving toward the Marne. A German success northwest of Soissons, beyond Blerancourt and Epagny would carry Von Hindenburg in the direction of Compeigne. At Compeigne the Aisne flows into the Oise river, which latter runs southward to the Seine and to Paris. If Von Hindenburg can reach Compeigne he will be in a favorable position to secure control of the Aisne west of Soissons for a new defensive line This is probably the ultimate strategic purpose of the Blerancourt-Epagny movement

The situation now facing General Foch in its essential strategy, is the same as that which he met during the Picardy-Flanders offensive. He can stop the German advance any time he desires, by throwing in the major part of his reserves and the American troops now in France. But, to do this would be to play Von Hindenburg's game. It would mean accepting an offensive battle on Von Hindenburg's terms. This is what General Foch is trying to avoid. The loss of ground is unimportant, compared with avoiding submission to Von Hindenburg's own plans of campaign. In this respect, which is the most important from the standpoint of democracy's ultimate victory, events are progressing satisfactorily

HUNS USE GAS ON UKRAINIAN REBELS

Villages Near Kiev Drenched With Poison Just to Teach Peasants to Obey Boche Kultur.

By Associated Press.

London, June 1—The Germans in their reprisals against peasant disorders in the Ukraine drenched several villages near Kiev with gas, according to a Petrograd dispatch to the Daily Express. Thus, adds the message, whole communities were asphyxiated.

Moscow, Wednesday, May 29.—Strong revolutionary detachments of demobilized Russian soldiers and peasants, equipped with machine guns and artillery, have risen in the district of Tschigerine, in the province of Kiev, in an attempt to seize governmental power The bolshevist government has been asked to send troops to subdue the revolutionaries.

German forces while disarming Ukrainian troops today at Odessa were fired upon The Germans then arrested a number of the important personages in the Black sea port and took them to the German army headquarters

Peasant disorders are spreading throughout the province of Podolia.

GERMAN TREATMENT OF PATIENTS IS BRUTAL

Amsterdam May 31—Drastic measures employed by the German medical authorities in treating nervous patients in military hospitals in Munich resulted in revolts by the patients in which wards were wrecked, according to the Kolnische Volks Zeitung. At Rosenheim, the hospital was burned by the rebellious patients. The paper adds that electric shocks of such strength are employed that the patients screamed in terror. Deputies have prepared a long series of questions to ask in the reichstag concerning the reports of ill treatment.

RAID HUNS' THIRD LINE

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Army in Lorraine, June 1.—An American raid in force penetrated the German third line northwest of Toul this morning.

Following an hour's terrific bombardment the Yankees crossed No Man's Land behind a perfect barrage and swept over the enemy trenches, the Huns who had survived the artillery fire fleeing before them.

The Americans explored German positions at their leisure, without any opposition and returned to their lines. Our losses were extremely light.

AMERICANS BREAK UP GERMAN TANK ATTACK

U. S. Gunners Smother Hun Artillery and Troops at Every Movement.

By Associated Press.

With the American Army in France, June 1.—In one of the counter attacks launched against the Americans in Cantigny, the Germans tried to use tanks. The enemy infantry had no more than shown itself than the American artillery opened a heavy fire. Both the foot soldiers and the tanks were driven back in disorder.

The new American positions in Cantigny are being improved constantly. The Americans have not budged an inch since they gained the town. Every time the enemy artillery starts a bombardment the American gunners retaliate and smother the opposition fire.

German airmen, flying at a great height, penetrated many miles to the rear of the American lines today. They were driven off by anti-aircraft guns and were unable to drop any bombs.

Leonard Wood, who though assigned to command the western department, probably will be transferred at his own request to a division at camp.

General Treat is now in command of the western department, with headquarters at San Francisco

GRACE LUSK GROWS VIOLENT IN JAIL

Her Actions May Cause Appointment of Commission to Investigate Her Sanity.

Waukesha, Wis., May 31.—Miss Grace Lusk, once brilliant minded school teacher, gave way to fits of violence in her jail cell here today. The jury's verdict of second degree murder for shooting Mrs. Mary Newman Roberts followed by Miss Lusk's tigress-like assault on Prosecutor D. S. Tullar, Wednesday night, has completely unstrung the former Waukesha club leader.

A deputy overpowered her when she fought to escape her nurse's holds today and batter the cell bars. It was necessary to hold Miss Lusk on the prison cot These fits of violence accompanied by piercing screams which frightened the feathered tree dwellers outside her cell window occurred very frequently, according to her attendants.

At other times she lies in a coma, from the effects of opiates administered by a physician and talks incoherently. Attendants deny that she ever calls for Dr. David Roberts whose relations with Miss Lusk cost his wife's life.

Miss Lusk's attorneys fear she may not recover her sanity. If she does not rally soon they will ask for a sommission to investigate the advisability of placing her in an asylum

MARKSMANSHIP OF AMERICANS IS GOOD

German Dead on Battlefield Either Shot Through Head or Heart.

BY FRANK J. TAYLOR.

United Press Staff Correspondent.

With the American Army in Lorraine, May 31.—American officers reported today that practically every German body found after Wednesday night's fighting in the Luneville sector was shot through the head or heart, showing the quality of the American marksmanship.

German prisoners said they were told that the attacks in that sector were for the purpose of taking prisoners so as to get information regarding movements and also to harass the Americans there so that reinforcements would be sent by the Americans in Picardy.

No Americans were taken prisoner Probably 70 Germans were killed and wounded

SOUTH DAKOTA MAN KILLED IN ACTION

Frank Colon, of Aberdeen, Is Reported to Have Been Slain.

Washington, D. C., May 31.—The army casualty list today contained 60 names divided as follows: Killed in action, 15; died of wounds, 6; died of accident, 11; died of disease, 4; wounded severely, 15; wounded slightly, 8; missing in action, 1.

The following officers were named: Lieutenants Richard Anderson, St. Louis, Mo.; Robert J. Griffith, Athens, Ga.; William S. Stearns, Jamaica Plain, Mass.; William N. Newitt, Enfield, Mass.; Frank P. McCreery, Fort Washington, N. Y., died of accident.

Lieutenants Clark H. Apled, Grand Rapids, Mich., and Thomas D. Amory, Wilmington, Del., severely wounded.

Two South Dakota soldiers are included in the list today, but there were no names of Nebraska or Iowa soldiers. The South Dakotans are as follows:

Killed in action—Frank Colon, 107 North Main street, Aberdeen, S. D.

Severely wounded—Henry Musilek, Lake Andes, S. D.

FORMER I. W. W. TELLS OF ORDER'S DOINGS

Chicago, May 31.—"It was the policy of the I. W. W.'s to ruin the man who employed them whether he treated them fairly or not", Frank Wormkee, a private in the American army testified at the trial today of 112 members of the organization charged with conspiracy to hamper the nation's war program.

Wormkee said that so far as he knew the organization did not distribute secret hand bills against enlistment, but added that as a paid representative of the I. W. W., he understood they were opposed to war.

Buttons

"Come here!" cried the mother of the family severely. "Is that a pin I see in the front of your blouse? How many times must I tell you, Caroline, to sew on buttons and hooks and never, never pin yourself together! Sometimes I wish there wasn't such a thing as a pin in the world!"

"Huh!" sniffed Caroline. "Just one little pin—and you can hardly see it! I don't see why you make such a fuss!"

"No doubt," said the father of the family, bursting into the conversation, "you don't, but there is a great and basic truth underlying your mother's frantic efforts to save you. The truth is that men don't like girls who use pins instead of needles and thread. Men like peace and quiet and solid, dependable surroundings and it upsets them frightfully to be made nervous and harried.

"A girl who pins herself together certainly is not dependable.

"For instance," continued the father of the family, "I was terribly in love with a girl when I was an exceedingly young man. I think I was about nineteen and I was merely filling in the time until your mother came along when I was twenty-five and had attained horse sense.

"The minute I laid eyes on Isabel, surrounded six deep by my friends, I knew I had met my fate. She was one of these ethereal, floaty sort of creatures who you expected would flit away on a moonbeam or something like that. There always were lacy scarfs and tulle wisps and ribbons waving about Isabel and she was a regular dainty little creature—to look at. Yet the boys seemed to get over their fondness for her very quickly. They would say, oh, yes, Isabel was a nice enough girl and awfully pretty—but had you seen the new girl who had just moved in down on Hopkins street in the house with the cupola?

"Invariably after being in love with Isabel they seemed to turn instinctively to strictly tailor-made young women. It was because the tailor-made kind absolutely cannot use pins. That was the trouble with Isabel. That girl literally pinned herself together and she had a special brand of pins without any heads on them, judging from the way they showered out. She would start out at a dance looking like a fluffy angel, with a white tulle scarf draped around her shoulders, and at the end of the first waltz her partner would have to do a football dive under the ironshod feet of his friends in order to rescue the draggled remains of that tulle.

"I never knew another girl who hated buttons so thoroughly as did Isabel. At first you wouldn't notice that she had carefully stuck a pin in at each spot where a forlorn buttonhole waited patiently for its absent button, but things eventually brought it to your attention. That was the era when dresses buttoned down the back. There was a young man calling on Isabel one lovely summer evening and as they sat on the broad porch seat his arm accidentally fell off the railing and its impetus was sufficient to cause it to wind about her waist.

"When the people down on Main street got the echo of that yell it caused intense excitement. Zed Simmons, who was in the middle of a funny story, nearly bit off the end of his tongue he stopped so quickly, and Judge Belmont let the front legs of his chair come down so suddenly that the barber's dog had no chance at all and to its last day wore that hole punched through its ear.

"You see, there were enough pins in Isabel's belt and waist generally to sink a battleship and that unfortunate young man got every last one of them shot into his arm clean up to the hilt. Isabel's mother and her father and her little brother and the hired girl and the hired girl's girl friend and one or two neighbors all came running and it took all of them to pry the young man loose.

"You do not need to have me tell you that this was a most horribly embarrassing situation, especially as his arm in fighting where it did had been activated purely by accident, and his efforts to explain to Isabel's father between yelps of pain, so to speak, were very pathetic. He never went to see Isabel again and she eventually married a traveling man, who after he married her managed to travel 365 days every year, leaving her lonesome and pining, all because he couldn't stand looking at so many pins bursting forth. So you see—"

"Maybe she didn't like him much, anyhow, and didn't care," said Caroline hopefully. "Still, I guess I might as well go upstairs and sew on a few buttons—just to kill time. Because I expect you're making every bit of it up!"—Chicago Daily News.

KING GEORGE AS AN ANGLER

Britain's Ruler Fights With a Salmon and Then Dines on a Haggis and Whisky Grog.

An article in a French paper describing King George salmon fishing is too good to be lost. It runs (in translation):

"He is an angler of the first force, this king of Britain. Behold him there, as he sits motionless under his umbrella patiently regarding his many-colored floats! How obstinately he contends with the elements! It is a summer day of Britain; that is to say, a day of sleet, and fog, and tempest. But what would you? It is as they love it, those who would follow the sport. Presently the king's float begins to descend. How he strikes! The hook is implanted in the very bowels of the salmon. The king rises. He spurns aside his footstool. He strides strongly and swiftly toward the rear. In good time the salmon comes to approach himself to the bank. Aha! The king has cast aside his rod! He hurls himself flat on the ground on his victim. They splash and struggle in the icy water. Name of a dog! But it is a braw laddie! The gillie, a kind of outdoor domestic, administers the coup de grace with his pistol. The king cries with a very shrill voice, 'Hip- Hip! Hurrah!' On these red letter days his majesty George dines on a haggis and a whisky grog. Like a true Scotsman, he wears only a kilt."

We need not add, says London Tit-Bits, that the description is meant to be most complimentary to the king, in spite of the lively imagination of the writer.

WALKS EIGHT-INCH BRIDGE

Alaskan Tie-Cutter Totes His Product Across Narrow Footing, Disregarding Great Danger.

Carrying railroad ties on one's shoulder over an eight-inch footing across a canyon 80 feet wide, with 150 feet of vacant space between the log and a rock-torn mountain torrent at the dark bottom, sounds like the spectacular stunt of a circus performer, but it is the daily practice of Ed Martin, a tie-chopper, who lives at Crow Creek pass on the government's new railroad in Alaska, writes a correspondent to the Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Martin has a permit from the forest service to use timber on the north side of Devil's gulch to make ties for the railroad, but the railroad requires that the ties be delivered on the right of way, and to do this the gulch must be crossed. For this purpose Martin felled a small spruce tree from brim to brim, and, when he finishes a tie, shoulders it and packs it over.

A party of hunters appeared upon the scene a few days since, and, not daring to attempt the frail crossing themselves, asked Martin why in the name of all-possessed he did not fell a safe footing across the chasm. The tie-cutter replied that for his purpose an eight-inch log was as good as an eight-foot log, and it had not occurred to him that it was dangerous.

ARMY MEALS COOKED IN AIR

Food for Italians in Alpine Fighting Is Heated En Route on the Thermos Principle.

The most novel commissary in the war is that employed by the Italians in the Alpine fighting against the invaders. The kitchens are oftentimes 1,200 feet below the men, writes an Italian correspondent, yet the soldiers get their meals steaming hot.

Aerial tramways are the only thing that makes the brilliant defense of the Italians possible, for without warm food and drink constantly arriving they would be unable to withstand the cold in their high posts where they command vital passes and hold the invaders back.

It is impossible for the troops on these high ledges to have fires, lack of space and secrecy making a stove or smoke impractical. The cooking therefore is begun far below in kitchens, finished in thermos bottles and fireless cookers that bear the food aloft.

Huge cuts of meat and thick vegetable stews are placed over roaring fires down at the timber line where there is fuel in plentitude and then before finished put into vessels which apply the thermos principle so that by the time they have reached their destination high overhead they will be cooked through and palatable.

WIRELESS PHOTOGRAPHS.

A young inventor by the name of Leishman has devised a system of transmitting writing, drawings and photographs by wireless and also by telegraph. If the system proves practicable for commercial purposes, notes an exchange, there may be wireless photo stations all over the country in the near future.

IT DOESN'T ALWAYS WORK.

"Do you ever stop to think about how much you might save if you were to stop smoking?"

"Look here, friend, I'm one of those chaps who never touched tobacco, and I am $11,000 dollars in debt. How do you account for it?"

"How do you suppose our boy likes being in the trenches?"

"I am sure he likes it," mused Mrs. Corntossel. "It must be a great relief to Josh to be able to get his feet as muddy as he likes without me making a word of complaint."

ALEXANDER TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS

CHAPTER EIGHT. (Continued.)

He was standing near a large, half ruined barn, built against a very tall bank. Its worm eaten doors seemed merely balanced on their wings. He went up and looked through a crack in the wood. Inside the windowless barn was in semidarkness, for but little light came through the openings stopped up with straw, especially as the day was beginning to wane. He was able to distinguish a heap of barrels, broken wine presses, old ploughs, and scrap iron of all kinds.

"This is certainly not where my fair stroller turned her steps," thought Don Luis. "Let's look somewhere else."

Nevertheless, he did not move. He had noticed a noise in the barn.

He listened and heard nothing. But as he wanted to get to the bottom of things he forced out a couple of planks with his shoulder and stepped in.

The breach which he had thus contrived admitted a little light. He could see enough to make his way between two casks, over some broken window frame, to an empty space on the far side.

His eyes grew accustomed to the darkness as he went on. For all that, he knocked his head against something which he had not perceived, something hanging up above, something rather hard which, when set in motion, swung to and fro with a curious grating sound.

It was too dark to see. Don Luis took an electric lantern from his pocket and pressed the spring.

"Damn it all!" he swore, falling back aghast.

Above him hung a skeleton.

And the next moment he uttered another oath. A second skeleton hung beside the first!

They were both fastened by stout ropes to rings fixed in the rafters of the barn. Their heads dangled from the slip knots. The one gainst which Perenna had struck was still moving slightly and the bones clicked together with a gruesome sound.

He dragged forward a rickety table, propped it up as best he could, and climbed onto it to examine the two skeletons more closely. They were turned toward each other, face to face. The first was considerably bigger than the second. They were obviously the skeletons of a man and a woman. Even when they were not moved by a jolt of any kind, the wind blowing through the crevices in the barn set them lightly swinging to and fro, in a sort of very slow, rhythmical dance.

But what perhaps was most impressive in this ghastly spectacle was the fact that each of the skeleton, though deprived of every rag of clothing, still wore a gold ring, too wide now that the flesh had disappeared, but held, as in hooks, by the bent joints of the fingers.

He slipped off the rings with a shiver of disgust, and found that they were wedding rings. Each bore a date inside, the same date, 12 August, 1887, and two names: "Alfred—Victorine."

"Husband and wife," he murmured. "Is it double suicide? Or a murder? But how is it possible that the two skeletons have not yet been discovered? Can one conceive that they have been here since the death of old Langernault, since the government has taken possession of the estate and made it impossible for anybody to walk in?"

He paused to reflect.

"Anybody? I don't know about that, considering that I saw footprints in the garden, and that a woman has been there this very day!"

The thought of the unknown visitor engrossed him once more, and he got down from the table. In spite of the noise which he had heard, it was hardly to be supposed that she had entered the barn. And, after a few minutes' search, he was about to go out, when there came, from the left, a clash of things falling about and some hoops dropped to the ground not far from where he stood.

They came from above, from a loft likewise crammed with various objects and implements and reached by a ladder. Was he to believe that the visitor, surprised by his arrival, had taken refuge in that hiding place and made a movement that caused the fall of the hoops?

Don Luis placed his electric lantern on a cask in such a way as to send the light right up to the loft. Seeing nothing suspicious, nothing but an arsenal of old pickaxes, rakes and disused scythes, he attributed what had happened to some animal, to some stray cat; and, to make sure, he walked quickly to the ladder and went up.

Suddenly, at the very moment when he reached the level of the floor, there was a fresh noise, a fresh clatter of things falling: and a form rose from the heap of rubbish with a terrible gesture.

It was swift as lightning. Don Luis saw the great blade of a scythe cleaving the air at the height of his head. Had he hesitated for a second, for the tenth of a second, the awful weapon would have beheaded him. As it was, he just had time to flatten himself against the ladder. The scythe whistled past him, grazing his jacket. He slid down to the floor below.

But he had seen.

He had seen the dreadful face of Gaston Sauverand, and, behind the man of the ebony walking stick, wan and livid in the rays of the electric light, the distorted features of Florence Levasseur!

CHAPTER IX.

LUPIN'S ANGER.

He remained for one moment motionless and speechless. Above was a perfect clatter of things being pushed about, as though the besieged were building themselves a barricade. But to the right of the electric rays, diffused daylight entered through an opening that was suddenly exposed; and he saw, in front of this opening, first one form and then another stooping in order to escape over the roofs.

He levelled his revolver and fired, but badly, for he was thinking of Florence and his hand trembled. Three more shots rang out. The bullets rattled against the old scrap iron in the loft. The fifth shot was followed by a cry of pain. Don Luis once more rushed up the ladder.

Slowly making his way through the tangle of farm implements and over some cases of dried rape seed forming a regular rampart, he at last, after bruising and barking his shins, succeeded in reaching the opening, and was greatly surprised, on passing through it, to find himself on level ground. It was the top of the sloping bank against which the barn stood.

He descended the slope at haphazard, to the left of the barn, and passed in front of the building, but saw nobody. He then went up again on the right; and although the flat part was very narrow, he searched it carefully for, in the growing darkness of the twilight, he had every reason to fear renewed attacks from the enemy.

He now became aware of something which he had not perceived before. The bank ran along the top of the wall, which at this spot was quite 16 feet high. Gaston Sauverand and Florence had, beyond a doubt, escaped this way.

Perenna followed the wall, which was fairly wide, till he came to a lower part, and here he jumped into a ploughed field skirting a little wood toward which the fugitives must have run. He started exploring it, but realizing its denseness, he at once saw that it was waste of time to linger in pursuit.

He therefore returned to the village, while thinking over this, his latest exploit. Once again Florence and her accomplice had tried to get rid of him. Once again Florence figured prominently in this network of criminal plots.

At the moment when chance informed Don Luis that old Langernault had probably died by foul play, at the moment when chance, by leading him to Hanged Man's barn, as he christened it, brought him into the presence of two skeletons, Florence appeared as a murderous vision, as an evil genius who was seen wherever death had passed with its trail of blood and corpses.

"Oh, the loathsome creature!" he muttered, with a shudder. "How can she have so fair a face, and eyes of such haunting beauty, so grave, sincere, and almost guileless"

In the church square, outside the inn, Mazeroux, who had returned, was filling the petrol tank of the motor and lighting the lamps. Don Luis saw the mayor of Wamigni crossing the square. He took him aside.

"By the way, Monsieur le Maire, did you ever hear any talk in the district, perhaps two years ago, of the disappearance of a couple 40 or 50 years of age? The husband's name was Alfred——"

"And the wife's Victorine, eh?" the mayor broke in. "I should think so! The affair created some stir. They lived at Alencon on a small, private income; they disappeared between one day and the next; and no one has since discovered what became of them, any more than a little hoard, some 20,000 francs or so, which they had realized the day before by the sale of their house. I remember them well. Dedessuslamare their name was."

"Thank you, Monsieur le Maire," said Perenna, who had learned all that he wanted to know.

The car was ready. A minute after he was rushing toward Alencon with Mazeroux.

"Where are we going, chief?" asked the sergeant.

"To the station. I have every reason to believe, first, that Sauverand was informed this morning—in what way remains to be seen—of the revelations made last night by Mme. Fauville relating to old Langernault; and, secondly, that he has been prowling around and inside old Langernault's property today for reasons that also remain to be seen. And I presume that he came by train and that he will go back by train."

Perenna's supposition was confirmed without delay. He was told at the railway station that a gentleman and a lady had arrived from Paris at 2 o'clock, that they had hired a trap at the hotel next door, and that, having finished their business, they had gone back a few minutes ago, by the 7:40 express. The description of the lady and gentleman corresponded exactly with that of Florence and Sauverand.

"Off we go!" said Perenna after consulting the time table. "We are an hour behind. We may catch up with the scoundrel at Le Mans."

"We'll do that, chief, and we'll collar him, I swear: him and his lady, since there are two of them."

"There are two of them, as you say. Only——"

"Only what?"

Don Luis waited to reply until they were seated and the engine started, when he said:

"Only, my boy, you will keep your hands off the lady."

"Why should I?"

"Do you know who she is? Have you a warrant against her?"

"No."

"Then shut up."

"But——"

"One word more, Alexandre, and I'll set you down beside the road. Then you can make as many arrests as you please."

Mazeroux did not breathe another word. For that matter the speed at which they at once began to go hardly left him time to raise a protest. Not a little anxious, he thought only of watching the horizon and keeping a lookout for obstacles.

The trees vanished on either side almost unseen. Their foliage overhead made a rhythmical sound as of moaning waves. Night insects dashed themselves to death against the lamps.

"We shall get there right enough," Mazeroux ventured to observe. "There's no need to put on the pace."

The speed increased and he said no more.

Villages, plains, hills; and then, suddenly in the midst of the darkness, the lights of a large town, Le Mans.

"Do you know the way to the station, Alexander?"

"Yes, chief, to the right and then straight on."

Of course they ought to have gone to the left. They wasted seven or eight minutes in wandering through the streets and receiving contradictory instructions. When the motor pulled up at the station the train was whistling.

Don Luis jumped out, rushed through the waiting room, found the doors shut, jostled the railway officials who tried to stop him, and reached the platform.

A train was about to start on the farther line. The last door was banged to. He ran along the carriages, holding on to the brass rails.

"Your ticket, sir! Where's your ticket?" shouted an angry collector.

Don Luis continued to fly along the footboards, giving a swift glance through the panes, thrusting aside the persons whose presence at the windows prevented him from seeing, prepared at any moment to burst into the compartment containing the two accomplices.

He did not see them in the end carriages. The train started. And suddenly he gave a shout: they were there, the two of them, by themselves! He had seen them! They were there: Florence, lying on the seat, with her head on Sauverand's shoulder, and he, leaning over her, with his arms around her!

Mad with rage he flung back the bottom latch and seized the handle of the carriage door. At the same moment he lost his balance and was pulled off by the furious ticket collector and by Mazeroux, who bellowed:

"Why, you're mad, Chief! you will kill yourself!"

"Let go, you ass!" roared Don Luis. "It's they! Let me be, can't you!"

The carriages filed past. He tried to jump on to another footboard. But the two men were clinging to him, some railway porters came to their assistance, the station master ran up. The train moved out of the station.

"Idiots!" he shouted. "Boobies! Pack of asses that you are, couldn't you leave me alone? Oh, I swear to Heaven——!"

With a blow of his left fist he knocked the ticket collector down, with a blow of his right he sent Mazeroux spinning; and shaking off the porters and the station master, he rushed along the platform to the luggage room, where he took flying leaps over several batches of trunks, packing cases, and portmanteaux.

"Oh, the perfect fool!" he mumbled, on seeing that Mazeroux had let the power down in the car. "Trust him, if there's any blunder going!"

Don Luis had driven his car at a fine rate during the day, but that night the pace became vertiginous. A very motor flashed through the suburbs of Le Mans and hurled itself along the highroad. Perenna had but one thought in his head: to reach the next station, which was Chartres, before the two accomplices, and to fly at Sauverand's throat. He saw nothing but that the savage grip of his two hands that would set Florence Levasseur's lover gasping in his agony.

"Her lover! Her lover!" he muttered, gnashing his teeth. "Why, of course, that explains everything! They have combined against their accomplice, Marie Fauville, and it is she alone, poor devil, who will pay for the horrible series of crimes!"

"Is she their accomplice even?" he wondered. "Who knows? Who knows if that pair of demons are not capable, after killing Hippolyte and his son, of having plotted the ruin of Marie Fauville, the last obstacle that stood between them and the Mornington inheritance? Doesn't everything point to that conclusion? Didn't I find the list of dates in a book belonging to Florence? Don't the facts prove that the letters were communicated by Florence? * * *

"Those letters accuse Gaston Sauverand as well. But how does that affect things? He no longer loves Marie, but Florence. And Florence loves him. She is his accomplice, his counsellor, the woman who will live by his side and benefit by his fortune * * * True, she some times pretends to be defending Marie Fauville. Play acting! Or perhaps remorse, fright at the thought of all that she has done against her rival, and of the fate that awaits the unhappy woman!

"But she is in love with Sauverand. And she continues to carry on the struggle without pity and without respite. And that is why she wanted to kill me, the interloper whose insight she dreaded. And she hates me and loathes me——"

About 13,000 Chinese laborers have been shipped to France, according to the Shun Tien Shih Pao, a Chinese daily newspaper. Their wages are from $30 to $40 a month. Thirty thousand more mon are needed, and will be recruited by French agents in Shantung, China and other northern provinces.

MINE SWEEPERS PLAY AN IMPORTANT PART

Their Work Always Dangerous Is Rendered More So By the Wind.

London, (by mail).—When the story of the humble mine sweeper is fully told, many stirring pages will be added to the history of anti-submarine warfare, for this little craft is sharing the work of the dashing destroyer and 'chaser" in running down U-boats. A mine sweeper submersible has been accounted for by them.

According to official reports, there are 40 times more mine sweepers in commission today in the service of the allies than in July, 1914.

Recently a fleet of six, all trawlers, sighted a mine adrift. The rough sea prevented the boats from sinking the mine by gunfire, darkness was coming on, and there was a possibility of losing it. So the commander approached the mine in a small boat, and when within some distance of the drifting menace he took to the water and swam the rest of the way. Attaching a line to the mine, he returned to his boat and towed it ashore, where it was exploded by rifle fire.

Often days elapse before a mine is stroyed. In a terrific gale, with mountainous seas running, a party of mine sweepers found a nest of eight mines. The boats were unable to use their guns on them and as night came on the little vessels lay to in imminent danger of being washed onto the engines of death. Next day two of the mines were sung by gunfire, but one of the sweepers was lost—how, the report does not state. It was not until the evening of the fourth day that the last of the mies was exploded.

The trawler Manx King, hauled up a mine in such a dangerous position that one horn of the mine came within a few inches of the boat's rail and another was almost touching the gear. The slightest roll of the vessel would have caused its destruction. The difficulty was met by lashig the mine to the sweeper, so that it could not be bumped against th siede, and experts were summoned to remove the detonators from the dangerous prize.

Old English Estates Sold.

From the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Britannia still rules the waves, but beneath the waves lie unseen terrors, menacing the nation's commerce, its food supply, its very life. The nation cannot trust its sea borne trade now. It must utilize every possible means to provide the necessary sustenance for its armies, and for those who supply the fighting men. And the British government rises to the occasion.

Before the war Lloyd George fought long and well to compel the breaking up of old estates, to make possible the cultivation of land long idle, to give the laborer a chance at the soil. He failed, for the British are conservative by instinct, and the old way seemed easiest. They have learned their lesson now.

In three years past the British government has taken over outright no less than 1,000,000 acres of British soil, purchasing some, renting more. It has, indeed, found necessary the establishment of a great department to handle this work of national regeneration. It is a great change, and one that should not be regretted. The England which makes peace will not be the England of its fathers, but a better one.

WAR TIME NERVES.

From the Bellman.

As the war progresses to its finish which will come some glad day, perhaps even nearer than is now expected, the strain upon those who wait its outcome with the most intense anxiety daily becomes more difficult to stand. The tense situation encourages the development of a state of mind which is harassing, and one which, if not checked, must ultimately result in a more or less serious collapse after such long continued pressure. Great restraint of natural impulses toward over excitement concerning the war is essential as well to the individual as to the national well being. Americans must keep their heads cool and their bodies strong in order to do their full duty in this great emergency. They must not give way to feelings of despondency when temporary discouragements to the advance of the cause occur, nor should they become too sanguine of immediate success when the news comes of a decided advantage. The untroubled and serene mind is to be sedulously cultivated in these stirring times.

CROWDER'S AID REACHES FRANCE

Brig. Gen. Samuel T. Ansell.

Brig. Gen. Samuel T. Ansell, chief assistant to Major General Crowder, judge advocate general of the army, has arrived safely in France. General Ansell is charged with making a survey of the judge advocate general's services in the American expeditionary army with a view to improve the service of administering military justice among the troops in the field, especially with reference to the present duplication of the work of considering routine court martial cases by the judge advocate officials in France as well as in Washington.

The Professional Naggers.

From the Chicago Post.

That Americans must support the war and the president of the United States is now a rule of conduct bred into the people by the people with a degree of completeness that would have been unbelievable a year ago.

Yet there are curious degrees and gradations of feelings running through this unanimity. And the most curious class is that which favors the war, hates Germany, loves America and yet takes a gloomy pleasure in disliking Mr. Wilson personally. These people are by no means to be confused with those who dislike the president because they are pro-German, pro-peace, anti-English or in other ways unpatriotic. These latter gentlemen are of the kind who are touched upon the shoulder by a government officer and shipped off to Leavenworth.

The anti-Wilsoners who are really interesting psychologically are those who are anti through the very strength of the pro-warism. For them there is no balm in Gilead. If the administration does badly on any point of war management, they are so savagely delighted to get a peg for criticism that they forget to be wholeheartedly mournful for the country's sake. If the administration does well in another direction, they are so jealous lest Wilson get praise for it that they can have in it no pleasure for the country's sake.

These men are against Wilson personally to such an extent that they almost grudge seeing Germany beaten, because the victory would accrue to the glory of Woodrow.

* * * * * * *

In plain words, this old anti-Wilsonism is reduced to the ignoble and harmful practice of naggling.

This practice never got a strong man anywhere. Nobody likes a nagger. No one pays any attention to a whiner.

And, in war, whining and nagging amount perilously near to treason.

* * * * * * *

Patriotic Americans who happen to inherit from other years a personal antipathy to Mr. Wilson and his party will serve their country best by putting their antipathy in their pocket and going

...fondly lies to us through life. In ... words, the more essentially femi... woman is, the more irresistibly does ... appeal to and attract our sex."

And it is precisely through ignorance of this elementary truth that many of the girls of today go grievously astray in their efforts to captivate men. Through ignorance, they think that they make themselves attractive by assuming a mannish style of talk, manner and dress. Before they have known a man a day they ... playfully ruffle his hair, address him as "darling," and "old thing," exchange risky stories with him and help to empty his cigaret case.

Saving the Tin Cans.

T. F. Logan, in Leslie's.

The annual report of the department of commerce sets forth the dire need of tin cans and the efforts the government is making to conserve them. During the early days of last summer's campaign for the preservation of perishable fruits and vegetables, government experts tested the possibility of utilizing once used tin cans, but investigation proved the advisability of abandoning this plan in favor of "detinning" processes, whereby most of the steel and tin is recovered for further use in manufacture. The government is now persuading factory owners to substitute glass or fiber containers for all nonperishable articles heretofore put up in tin. This, it is expected, will to a certain extent offset the tin cans shipped to the army in France. The balance of the loss will be made up by salvaging used cans.

She Would Be Pleased.

From Fun.

"What would your mother say, little boy," demanded the passerby virtuously, "if she could hear you swear like that?"

"She'd be tickled to death if she could hear it," answered the bad little boy, "she's stone deaf."

Distinguishing Mark.

"This check is doubtless all right," said the bank cashier politely, "but have you anything about you that would serve to identify you?"

"I have a mole on my left elbow," faltered the pretty girl.

Adventures of the Cold Eagle.

From the Popular Science Monthly.

The ... has had ... interesting career ... most of it ... for their fine gold ... remunerative ... age and were very ... until the government experts discovered the ... tree and stopped it in short order by ... 'peppering' the gold with ... Following this, unscrupulous persons attempted to gather scrap gold by 'sweating,' or placing a number of coins in a bag and then shaking them violently, thus obtaining tiny particles of gold by friction. After these coins had been put through the 'sweating' process it was an easy matter to pass them on unsuspecting tradesmen and banks provided, of course, that the victims did not weigh the coin. The amount of gold scrap obtained by the "sweating" process was so small that the bags had to be burned to recover it.

Another way was to strap a coin by putting it into an electro-chemical bath, getting thereby a slight residue of gold on a copper plate which was afterward melted and the metal separated. Because this method discolored the gold it caused this method to be not very popular. One of the most successful schemes, however, was the use of a specially prepared male and female die. The diameter of the die was about one one-thousandth of an inch smaller than the coin. After a coin had been made the proper size by a certain amount of metal was cut off the edge. ... from a single $20 piece of gold thus obtained was worth but a few cents and the coins, to all appearances, had not been tampered with.

Scenes of Prosperity

Are Common in Western Canada

The thousands of U. S. farmers who have accepted Canada's generous offer to settle on homesteads or buy farm land in her provinces have been well repaid by bountiful crops of wheat and other grains.

Where you can buy good farm land at $15 to $30 per acre—get $2 a bushel for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre you are bound to make money—that's what you can do in Western Canada.

In the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta you can get a

HOMESTEAD OF 160 ACRES FREE

and other land at very low prices.

During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley, and Flax. Mixed Farming is as profitable an industry as grain raising. Good schools, churches; markets convenient, climate excellent. You Can Now Eat Your Favorite Food Without Any Fear

Kramer Says: "Eatonic" Rids Weak Stomachs of Acids, Gas, Heartburn, Food Repeating and Stomach Miseries

What miserable feelings are caused by an upset stomach! That dull, heavy, "bloated" sensation that follows a full meal, robs good living of half its pleasures. Is there any way out for you sufferers with stomach weakness?

Yes; H. L. Kramer, the man who originated Cascarets, has found a sure, quick, relief for indigestion, dyspepsia, "sour stomach," heart-burn, formation of painful gases, "bloating," etc., etc.

He calls his stomach relief EATONIC, and it certainly is making a wonderful record. Countless thousands of people who formerly approached their meals with dread, now eat their fill of their favorite foods without fear of the after-effects.

Mr. Kramer says: "My EATONIC tablets are the solution of the age-old problem of indigestion and all forms of stomach misery.

"EATONIC neutralizes the acids that form the painful gases, "sweetens" the stomach, and gives the gastric juice a chance to do its work as it should.

"To promote appetite and aid digestion, take EATONIC tablets—one or two after each meal. They are perfectly harmless. Eat them just like candy.

"For distress after eating; sour, "gassy," acid stomach, vertigo, nausea and belching, and that wretched, puffed-up, "lumpy" feeling, after overeating; there is nothing to compare with EATONIC Tablets."

All druggists sell EATONIC — 50c for a large box. Watch out for imitations. The genuine bears the name EATONIC on each tablet—guaranteed to do all that is claimed; or if your druggists don't carry EATONIC—send to Eatonic Remedy Co., Chicago, Ill.

June is an eventful month in the history of the United States.

In June 1497 John Cabot discovesed North America. In June 1777 Congress adopted the Union Flag, and the great seal of the United States in June 1782.

The War of 1812 began on June 18th. The American Red Cross was organized June 9th, 1861.

In June 1898 the United States took control over the Phillipine Islands.

If June is to be an "eventful" month for YOU PERSONLY mayhap we can be of special service.
